FIFTY-YEAR ANNIVERSARY OF THE PATERSON (N. J.) EVENING NEWS

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, the Paterson Evening News of Paterson, N. J., is this year celebrating the completion of 50 years of conscientious and constructive service for the people of the North Jersey and metropolitan area. Recently there was issued a golden-anniversary edition of this great newspaper. It included 260 pages of news, history, and tributes, printed on gold-colored paper, an edition which was hailed by the Library of Congress as remarkable and outstanding.

The publisher of the Paterson Evening News when it was founded in 1890 was E. B. Haines. He dedicated himself to making Paterson a more prosperous and a happier city, and he promised that the newspaper would be clean, progressive, and "a leader in the procession." So it has been, and the principles of the father have been carried out by his son, Harry B. Haines, the now publisher.

I have a deep personal interest in the News and its publisher because of my own intimate association and that of my father and my grandfather before me, and also in Paterson and its people and industries; and I believe the News' anniversary merits national recognition being accorded it, which I seek to give it in this manner on the floor of the Senate.

A RETURN TO LAW—ADDRESS BY HON. WILLIAM S. CULBERTSON

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by William S. Culbertson, recently Ambassador to Chile and a former member of the Tariff Commission, a member of the Pennsylvania Bar Association and the Franklin County Chapter of the American Bar Association, before the meeting of the American Bar Association at Philadelphia, Pa., September 10, 1940. The address, entitled "A Return to Law," is a careful analysis of the existing neutrality legislation in view of present-day trends of foreign affairs. I also ask that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

There being no objection, the address was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A RETURN TO LAW

Address by William S. Culbertson, chairman, Franklin County, Pa. Meeting of the American Bar Association at Philadelphia, Pa., Tuesday morning, September 10, 1940

I

The Pittman Act, approved November 4, 1939, is a product of two conflicting currents of public opinion in the United States. The first, a desire to stay out of war, a sort of negative peace sentiment interested in nobody's peace except our own. This segment of American opinion could not be described as in favor of neutrality, for the law of neutrality contemplates not only an effort to keep the Nation at peace but also a determination not to be imposed upon by nations at war. The second current of opinion was a desire to help the British Empire and France in their struggle against the totalitarian powers; a belief, vague at first but growing in aggressiveness as time goes on, that we are concerned with the outcome of the present European conflict.

These inconsistent forces produced a strange hybrid in legislation. In response to the second current of opinion, it raised the arms embargo, and, as a result, American industry has become a powerful, possibly a decisive factor in the war. In response to the first current of opinion the act imposed other embargoes making it unlawful:

"For any American vessel to carry any passengers or any articles or materials to any state named in such proclamation."

To export or transport to such state articles or materials "until all right, title, and interest therein shall have been transferred to some foreign government, agency, institution, association, partnership, corporation, or national."

"For any citizen of the United States or any American vessel to proceed into or through any such combat area."

"For any citizen of the United States to travel on any vessel of any state named in such proclamation."

"For any person within the United States to purchase, sell, or exchange bonds, securities, or other obligations of the government of any state named in such proclamation, * * * or to make any loan or extend any credit * * * to any such government."

The Pittman Act raised the arms embargo in the name of a return to accepted principles of international law. It then by unilateral action adopted for ships, citizens, and credit the same sort of restrictions which it had abandoned for arms.

This act which tries to legislate the American people into isolation pays word tribute in its preamble to international law by saying that the "United States waives none of its own rights or privileges, or those of any of its nationals, under international law, and expressly reserves all the rights and privileges to which it and its nationals are entitled under the law of nations."

With the exception of the period of the Jeffersonian embargo, we have insisted upon the centuries-old principles of international law. Perhaps, today, some limitations should be imposed by rules and regulations promulgated by the Executive. But in general, the old principles are more in keeping with our national prestige than are the prohibitions imposed on American citizens by the Pittman Act. As we repealed the arms embargo, should we not now abandon "cash-and-carry neutrality" and, under suitable regulation, lift the prohibition against the movements of our ships and against financial transactions? If one wants to be cynical, it is easier for us to be unneutral under the old laws of neutrality than under the Pittman Act.

II

Mr. Chairman, your Committee on the Rights and Obligations of Neutral States, of which I am chairman, has watched the changing international scene with misgivings. "It is pretty hard," one member of the committee writes me, "to resist the feeling, in view of the European scene at the present time, that any nation would be justified in ignoring the laws of neutrality if they interfered with any important legitimate interest." Another member of the committee writes: "The position of our own Government is so ambiguous at the present time as to make any discussion of the subject not only difficult but embarrassing. While we have formally proclaimed a half dozen times in our neutrality proclamations our adherence to the laws of neutrality and enjoined upon all citizens the duty to observe them under pain of the penalties prescribed by the statutes, Government officials themselves are ignoring the laws and proceeding to follow the President's policy of adopting all measures short of war."

Nations at war have rights and obligations; nations not at war have rights and obligations. These rights and obligations still make up a great body of law—a part of the common law of nations. It is unfortunate, although perhaps natural, that in a period of violence and international crime we hear it said that international law does not exist. Even lawyers and professors of law fall into this weakness. The Attorney General is harassed to find ways within the law by which we can be unneutral. Opinions are written to excuse policies which violate the law of nations. But even today in spite of it all international law governs the relations of state and nationals in more cases than the Cassandras of international law suspect.[1]

In a time of crisis such as the present the lawyer's first concern is to reaffirm the existence and the nature of the law of nations. "International law," as our Supreme Court has stated, "is part of our law, and must be ascertained and administered by the courts of justice of appropriate jurisdiction as often as questions of right depending upon it are duly presented for their determination" (159 U. S. 113). Cf. The Paquete Habana (175 U. S. 320). We have had in this country a long and enviable record in the maintenance of the principles of international law and not the least of the agencies contributing to this end has been the section on comparative and international law of the American Bar Association over which you preside, Mr. Chairman.

A subdivision of this law of nations is the law of neutrality. "The law of nations," Chief Justice Marshall said, "is the great source from which we derive those rules, respecting belligerent and neutral rights, which are recognized by all civilized and commercial states throughout Europe and America. This law is in part unwritten, and in part conventional" (9 Cranch. 191).

III

At the close of our Civil War the American Government complained that Confederate cruisers, operating against northern commerce, had used British ports. We claimed damages against Great Britain. The result was the Treaty of Washington, 1871, under which the Alabama claims were submitted to arbitration. The three rules to guide the arbitration were:

A neutral government is bound—

First, to use due diligence to prevent the fitting out, arming, or equipping, within its jurisdiction, of any vessel which it has reasonable ground to believe is intended to cruise or to carry on war against a power with which it is at peace; and also to use like diligence to prevent the departure from its jurisdiction of any vessel intended to cruise or carry on war as above, such vessel having been specially adapted, in whole or in part, within such jurisdiction, to warlike use.

Secondly, not to permit or suffer either belligerent to make use of its ports or waters as the base of naval operations against the other, or for the purpose of the renewal or augmentation of military supplies or arms, or the recruitment of men.

Thirdly, to exercise due diligence in its own ports and waters, and, as to all persons within its jurisdiction, to prevent any violation of the foregoing obligations and duties.[2]

The Geneva tribunal awarded the United States the sum of $15,500,000 for damages done to its commerce by the Alabama and sister ships, on the ground that "the British Government failed to use due diligence in the performance of its neutral obligations."[3]

The Geneva award created great discussion among international lawyers and a few years later, in 1875, the Institut de Droit International voted that the three rules of the treaty of Washington were declaratory of the law of nations.[4]

The rules were incorporated in the Hague Convention of 1907 concerning the rights and duties of neutral powers in naval war.

Article VI of the Constitution of the United States provides that "all treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States shall be the supreme law of the land."

The Hague Convention, 1907, ratified by the United States, provides as follows: [5]

"ART. 6. The supply, in any manner, directly or indirectly, by a neutral power to a belligerent power, of warships, ammunition, or war material of any kind whatever is forbidden.

"ART. 8. A neutral government is bound to employ the means at its disposal to prevent the fitting out or arming of any vessel within its jurisdiction which it has reason to believe is intended to cruise, or engage in hostile operations, against a power with which that government is at peace. It is also bound to display the same vigilance to prevent the departure from its jurisdiction of any vessel intended to cruise, or engage in hostile operations, which had been adapted entirely or partly within the said jurisdiction for use in war."

During the World War No. I an American shipbuilding company undertook to build a number of submarines for one of the Allies. but when the matter was brought to the attention of the American Government the deal was called off. The following official statement regarding the incident was issued by the Secretary of State on December 7, 1914:

"When information reached the State Department that the Fall River Co. was planning to build a number of submarines for one of the Allies, inquiry was made to ascertain the facts. As a result of the inquiry, Mr. Schwab called at the State Department last week with his attorney and laid before the Department what his company had planned to do, stating that before undertaking the work he had secured the opinion of a number of international lawyers and was keeping within the requirements of neutrality as outlined by them.

"I stated to him that the President, basing his opinion upon information already obtained, regarded the work, as contemplated, a violation of the spirit of neutrality, but told him I would lay his statement before the President, and then give him a final answer.

"On Friday I had a conference with the President, and he instructed me to inform Mr. Schwab that his statement only confirmed him in the opinion previously formed that the submarines should not be built. Within a few minutes after my return from the White House, Mr. Schwab called me by long-distance telephone and told me that he submitted to the President's views of the subject, and that I could announce that his firm would not build submarines for any belligerent country for delivery during the war. This closes the submarine incident." [6]

L. H. Woolsey has recently summed up the law on this point as follows: [7]

"In regard to the sale of vessels equipped for carrying on hostilities, the legal situation does not admit of much doubt. The principles go back to the three rules of the arbitration of the Alabama claims against Great Britain (1871) in which the tribunal awarded the United States some $15,500,000 damages against Great Britain on account of the depredations of the Alabama and certain other Confederate cruisers fitted out in British ports. These rules were to the effect that a neutral must use due diligence to prevent a belligerent from receiving an augmentation of naval strength within its territorial jurisdiction. These rules were substantially carried over into Hague Convention XIII of 1907 and have long been a part of the neutrality laws of the United States, a violation of which is a crime punishable by fine or imprisonment, or both, and confiscation of the vessel involved. It is clear, therefore, that the sale of the torpedo boats would have been a serious violation of international law as well as the laws of the United States."

V

Now, I am not presenting an argument against the barter of the 50 destroyers for the leases on British territory off our Atlantic coast. I recognize that this seems to be justified as a measure of self-defense. It is in line with our policy to strengthen the British buffer between us and the force politics of Germany. I am as anxious as any other American to see Great Britain succeed in her defense. But I am speaking to you as a lawyer and I do not think that pretense and hypocrisy help in the preservation of respect for law. Perhaps we should, in a world of aggression and undeclared wars, adopt an opportunist policy which would allow us to do anything that we wish to accomplish as our objective. But I don't want it done under the fiction of a tortured law of neutrality. I want to save the British Empire, but I want to save law, too. If one law or treaty can be explained away for a good cause, another law or treaty can be explained away for a bad cause.

Therefore let us not try to justify our unneutral acts by law. Let us rather say frankly that we are not neutral; that we are not governed by the accepted rules of neutrality; that we are released from doing so by the violence and the illegality of Germany and her associates, and that we feel free to take such steps as are necessary to preserve our territory, our institutions, and our way of life.

This is the honest attitude to assume, and it is an attitude which leaves law outside the conflict, as it were, to resume its onward progress when the world community returns to sanity.

VI

In a community of sovereign states the right of a state to enact legislation to protect its neutrality, as it conceives it, or to strengthen its defense and security, must be conceded. This is true even if such legislation deprives its nationals of rights which the law of neutrality recognizes as theirs. But such legislation does not create international law or affect rights beyond the territorial jurisdiction of that state. Outside the area of its national control a state's legislation has no effect upon other neutrals or belligerents, nor is it to be construed as an abandonment of the rights which its citizens would have under the law of nations in the absence of the restrictive legislation.

But from a practical point of view your committee, Mr. Chairman, recognizes that unilateral national legislation, like the Pittman Act, declarations such as the final act of the Panama Conference, 1939, the resolution of the Habana Conference, 1940, and even violations of the law of nations in time of war are possible indications of the growth and evolution of law. In an address which I made a little over a year ago at the fortieth conference of the International Law Association at Amsterdam, I pointed out how economic policies and national legislation "when grounded in sound principles (that is, principles essential to a system of law by which the community of nations can live and progress) gradually assume the character of international common law." During the progress of the present conflict in Europe conditions will, as they have in the past, tend to emphasize extensions and even changes in the law of nations. In the field of domestic law growth and evolution come through legislation and through the decisions of courts. In international law changes are often foreshadowed by national legislation and declarations which are contrary to practices which have existed up to that time, or even by the refusal of nations to recognize accepted principles of international law.

It will therefore be of interest to lawyers and to others interested in the law of nations to consider in what way conditions may now be contributing to the growth and evolution of the law of nations, particularly the law of neutrality. My committee, Mr. Chairman, will at later meetings of this section have observations to submit on the effect on international law of events and declarations in Europe, in Asia, and in the Americas.

Moreover, we may hope that neutral states will in the present world crisis assert more affirmatively their rights and meet more insistently their duties. They have a right to a world of peaceful commerce and order; they have a duty to isolate, and, if possible, prevent armed conflict. I recognize that here are objectives beyond the scope of the committee's assignment, but we will carry out our more limited activities in the spirit of these larger objectives which should now dominate the policy of neutral states. Beyond the scenes of violence we see shaping the law of the still shadowy conception of the world community.

VII

Mr. Chairman, I am also serving as chairman of the section's committee on the restatement of international law. This committee has not been active this year because, I might say cynically, it is not possible to restate an avalanche! The real reason is that in a former report to the section we went as far as we could under the limitations imposed upon us. We said in our report.[8]

"The committee has confined its activities to cooperating with agencies already engaged in the work of the restatement of international law, particularly with the committees of research in international law of the Harvard Law School.

"At a committee meeting last winter in Washington, D. C., it was decided to advise the section that it recommend to the American Bar Association that the latter cooperate in the reprinting and distribution to the members of drafts of conventions prepared for the codification of international law by the Harvard research committees. The committee recommends that only the text of draft conventions be printed, each in a separate pamphlet. Members interested in more details may examine for further study the notes, references, and discussions in the copies of the American Journal of International Law in which they were first published. Permission is granted by the American Society of International Law to reprint the draft conventions, and it is believed that funds will be made available for the reprints in case the American Bar Association will undertake their distribution."

Since the section last met, an event of great importance to the restatement and evolution of law has occurred; I mean the signing of the constitution of the Inter-American Bar Association at the Eighth American Scientific Congress on May 16, 1940 (249437–19141 Government Printing Office, 1940). The secretary general of the association is our chairman, Mr. William Roy Vallance.

We emphasize in this section the contributions to our system of law of the lawyer, in government and in private practice, who deals with practical cases. The Inter-American Bar Association gives organized form to this influence in the Americas. It may help to redress an over-emphasis which now exists in inter-American legal discussions of the academic and political points of view. Take, for example, the law of diplomatic protection. Politics in many Latin American countries has distorted and even destroyed it. It has been easy for government officials and judges to talk about rights; obligations are unpopular.

The substantive rules of international law which protect the person and property of the nationals of one country engaged in business in another country had their origin in the conceptions which created and now underlie the international community of states. This body of law, defining the rights and duties of states, constitutes the institution of diplomatic protection. States, on the one hand, have the duty to maintain for aliens the minimum standard of justice defined by international law. States, on the other hand, have the right to grant protection to their citizens abroad in the public interest. It is relevant to emphasize this latter point. Too frequently in popular comments of the day the defense by government of private property and personal rights abroad is looked upon narrowly and merely as a concern of the company or individual affected. It is that, but it is more. It is based on the national and general public interest which all countries—debtor as well as creditor—have in the maintenance of minimum standards of justice for the security of men and capital moving across frontiers. In 1921 Charles Evans Hughes, then American Secretary of State, now Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, said:

"A confiscatory policy strikes not only at the interest of particular individuals, but at the foundations of international intercourse, for it is only on the basis of the security of property validly possessed under the laws existing at the time of its acquisition, that commercial transactions between the peoples of two countries and the conduct of activities in helpful cooperation are possible."

"Human rights and property rights," Mr. Hull, the present American Secretary of State, has said, "lie at the very foundation of international relationships. These rights must be defined, and they must be maintained." Here is a great and almost unused truth. The interrelationship between human and property rights is often not realized until encroachment by government begins. Property rights may be the first to suffer, but human rights are inevitably brought within the orbit of state power. In fact, it usually happens that the very groups in the population for whose benefit property rights are confiscated are the groups whose personal rights are in the end most seriously infringed.

Practical men throughout the Americas in the Inter-American Bar Association should be able to make clear the balance which in the law of nations must exist between the rights claimed and the obligations accepted by sovereign states. Beyond such particular problems the Inter-American Bar Association has a larger field of endeavor—the development of understanding and the contribution to the rule of law between peoples.

VIII

I want to say a final word which some of you may say goes beyond a discussion of international law. It is suggested by the fact that there would not be today neutrality in Latin America any more than there is in eastern Europe if it were not for the American Navy and the British Fleet. The Monroe Doctrine has taken on a reality which it has not had for over 100 years. And the growing collaboration between the United States and the British Empire is an effective addition to inter-American cooperation, and is in opposition to forces which defy and destroy law.

Some of the pre-Monroe Doctrine views sound strangely modern. On October 17, 1823, President Monroe began a letter to Thomas Jefferson, as follows:

"I transmit to you two despatches, which were received from Mr. Rush, while I was lately in Washington, which involve interests of the highest importance. They contain two letters from Mr. Canning, suggesting designs of the holy alliance against the independence of South America, and proposing a cooperation, between Great Britain and the United States, in support of it, against the members of that alliance."

Further along he raises the question:

"Has not the epoch arrived when Great Britain must take her stand, either on the side of the monarchs of Europe, or of the United States, and in consequence, either in favor of depotism or of liberty and may it not be presumed, that aware of that necessity, her government, has seized on the present occurrence, as that, which it deems, the most suitable, to announce and mark the commence of that career."

In his reply Jefferson said (October 24, 1823):

"Great Britain is the nation which can do us the most harm of any one, or all on earth; and with her on our side we need not fear the whole world. With her, then, we should most sedulously cherish a cordial friendship; and nothing would tend more to knit our affections than to be fighting once more, side by side, in the same cause. Not that I would purchase even her amity at the price of taking part in her wars.

"But the war in which the present proposition might engage us, should that be its consequence, is not her war but ours."

The Canning-Rush papers were sent to Madison by Jefferson and the latter wrote the former on November 1, 1823:

"With the British power and navy combined with our own, we have nothing to fear from the rest of the world; and in the great struggle of the epoch between liberty and despotism, we owe it to ourselves to sustain the former, in this hemisphere at least."

In the evolution of international law the political tendency of our day is of special importance. I have always opposed tendencies which might result in an inter-American law as distinguished from world law. Inter-American jurists and lawyers and inter-American conferences have helped greatly in the evolution of law, but the ultimate aim is to establish law not in a region but in the world community.

The instincts of the American people are sound in the present world crisis. Self-preservation and defense determine their sympathies and support. Law is one of the great issues. Whatever may be said for Hitler and his regime, it cannot be argued that it rests upon law. Inside Germany rights under law and due process of law do not exist; the unchecked rule of the official controls. Outside Germany the law of nations, including the law of neutrality, has been crushed by the war machine.

For us, then, of the western world the preservation of the British Empire, its system of law, and its concepts of government under law are of vital concern. And it is a useful tendency which today is emphasizing our responsibility for support to our British friends and which is making clear our mutual interests. Inter-American cooperation has been a great force in world order and understanding. Supplemented now by the cooperation of Canada, Australia, New Zealand, Great Britain, South Africa, and the other areas of the earth which draw their inspiration from the systems of Anglo-American and civil law we may look to the future with confidence and hope. Unhappily, the world is again paying the awful price of trying to settle international affairs by violence. But law may still resume its sway. Our sacred duty is to work for a return to law.

SURVEY OF PROBLEMS OF SMALL BUSINESS ENTERPRISES

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, there is on the calendar a resolution which I have been endeavoring for some time to have considered. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate Resolution 298, Calendar No. 2171.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, which had been reported from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate with an amendment, on page 2, line 17, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$15,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$10,000", so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That a special committee consisting of five Senators, to be appointed by the Vice President, is hereby authorized and directed to study and survey by means of research all the problems of American small business enterprises, obtaining all facts possible in relation thereto which would not only be of public interest, but which would aid the Congress in enacting remedial legislation. The committee shall begin its study and research survey as soon as practicable and shall continue and prosecute such study and research survey expeditiously and with all possible dispatch and shall report to the Senate as soon as practicable with recommendations for legislation.

SEC. 2. For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Senate, during the Seventy-sixth and succeeding Congresses, to employ such experts and clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, and to take such testimony and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. Mr. KING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. KING. Is the motion debatable?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is debatable.

Mr. KING. I desire to be heard.

Mr. MURRAY. I have moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate Resolution 298.

Mr. KING. I wish to speak in opposition to the motion.

HIRING AND DISCHARGE OF SEAMEN

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MURRAY. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. I ask unanimous consent that, without displacing the motion of the Senator from Montana, the Senate resume the consideration of House bill 9982, Calendar No. 2281. There is no opposition to the bill. It is a measure in which the Department of Commerce is very much interested. When I attempted to obtain consideration of the bill the other day the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] thought it was slightly out of order. The bill provides that the masters of vessels shall report the discharge and hiring of seamen who are not discharged or hired before shipping commissioners.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana asks unanimous consent that, without displacing the motion of the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], the Senate resume the consideration of House bill 9982. Is there objection?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. OVERTON. Certainly.

Mr. AUSTIN. I call to the attention of the Senator from Louisiana a letter from the international president of the International Association of Machinists to the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER], dated October 4, referring to an amendment intended to be offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON]. I ask the Senator from Louisiana if he understands that the so-called Minton amendment to House bill 9982 will not be offered?

Mr. OVERTON. That is my understanding. The Senator from Indiana told me he would not offer the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the Chair state to the Senator from Louisiana that when this bill came up on the call of the calendar, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] offered an amendment, which is pending. The amendment must either be withdrawn or voted upon by the Senate.

Mr. OVERTON. I do not see the Senator from Indiana in the Chamber. However, he told me he would be very glad to withdraw the amendment if it were actually pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. AUSTIN. I have no objection.

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9982) to amend section 4551 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment (heretofore agreed to) on page 3, line 2, after the word "them", to insert, "This subsection shall not apply to any ferry or any tug used in connection with a ferry operation, if such ferry or tug is employed exclusively in trade on the Great Lakes, lakes (other than the Great Lakes), bays, sounds, bayous, canals, and harbors, and is not engaged on an international voyage", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4551 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. V, title 46, sec. 643), is amended by the addition of a new subsection lettered (1), reading as follows:

"(1) The master of every vessel subject to the provisions of this section shall submit, over his signature, reports to the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation of the employment, discharge, or termination of services of every seaman not shipped or discharged before a shipping commissioner, which reports shall contain such of the following information as may be required by regulation of the Secretary of Commerce: (1) name of vessel, official number, voyage number, port, date, description of voyage, name in full of each seaman, number of continuous discharge book or certificate of identification and of license, certificate of registry, or service, and efficiency for rating in which employed, age, citizenship, capacity in which engaged, date and place of engagement, date and place of discharge or separation from service of vessel, the percentage of citizens of the United States in the crew, and name in full of the master and the serial number of his license; (2) a statement showing (a) that the master has entered into an agreement with each seaman on board such vessel as required by law; (b) that at least 65 percent of the deck crew (exclusive of licensed officers) are of a rating not less than able seamen; (c) that at least 75 percent of the crew in each department are able to understand orders given by the officers; (d) that the vessel has in her service the number of lifeboatmen required by her certificate of inspection; (e) that each member of the crew possesses a license, certificate of registry, or certificate of service for the rating in which he is engaged, and (f) that each lifeboatman possesses a certificate of efficiency. The Secretary of Commerce shall, by regulation, prescribe the form and content of such reports and time of submitting them. This subsection shall not apply to any ferry or any tug used in connection with a ferry operation, if such ferry or tug is employed exclusively in trade on the Great Lakes. lakes (other than the Great Lakes), bays, sounds, bayous, canals, and harbors, and is not engaged on an international voyage. Any master who shall violate any provision of this subsection or regulations established hereunder shall be subject to a penalty of $500."

SEC. 2. The President is hereby authorized, whenever in his judgment the national interest requires, to extend the provisions of subsection (1) of section 4551, Revised Statutes, as amended, to such additional class or classes of vessels and to such waters as he may designate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the committee amendment has been heretofore agreed to. There is pending an amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON]. Does the Senator from Indiana wish to withdraw the amendment?

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, when I offered that amendment I had no idea it would provoke so much controversy. The amendment does present some controversial matters, so much so that, after discussing the matter with the leadership and with the distinguished Senator from Louisiana, I have come to the conclusion that it should not be considered on the calendar and I therefore withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn. The question is on the engrossment of the amendment heretofore made and the third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. OVERTON. Was the committee amendment to the bill agreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendment was agreed to on a previous occasion when the bill was under consideration.

COAL AND ASPHALT DEPOSITS OF CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW NATIONS

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2617) to authorize the leasing of the undeveloped coal and asphalt deposits of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations in Oklahoma.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill, with the amendments of the House, be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs for further consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10412) to expedite the provision of housing in connection with national defense, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 614) making an additional appropriation for national-defense housing for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 614) making an additional appropriation for national-defense housing for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. ADAMS, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 614) making an additional appropriation for national-defense housing for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment.

CHANGES IN ADMINISTRATION OF NATIONAL GUARD

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERTON in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3619) relating to changes in the administration of the National Guard of the United States bearing on Federal recognition, pay, allotment of funds, drill, training, and so forth, which was, on page 3, line 16, to strike out all after the word "be" down to and including "amounts", in line 2, page 4, and insert "employed."

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

SURVEY OF PROBLEMS OF SMALL BUSINESS ENTERPRISES

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Montana to proceed to the consideration of Senate Resolution 298.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, the purpose of this resolution, as its language indicates, is to appoint a special committee of the Senate to conduct research and study into the problems of small business. For many years we have heard much discussion about the problems affecting small-business men, but, up to the present time, nothing has been done by way of enacting legislation or taking other steps to assist and aid the small business enterprises of the Nation. Some studies have been made by the Temporary National Economic Committee, which has been sitting for some time, but it occurs to me that that committee has not completely exhausted the problems of small business. I have, therefore, submitted this resolution in order that a complete study and survey of these problems might be made, so as to enable the Senate to devise legislation that may be helpful to small-business enterprises.

Before presenting the resolution, I took the matter up with the various departments of the Government, and received letters from practically every Federal agency in Washington acknowledging that there was a justification for such a study of these problems. I have the letters with me, but I do not wish to take up the time of the Senate by reading them in detail. If, however, there is any question with reference to the necessity for this proposed research-survey I shall, of course, desire to refer to them.

At the time this resolution was presented there was a fear that it might contemplate a sort of a witch-hunting investigation. That is not at all the purpose of the resolution. It is not intended to look backward; the purpose of the resolution is to look forward, and to find some way of aiding small business.

Statistics seem to indicate that there is a tremendous mortality in small business; approximately 90 percent or more of the small business concerns of the country wind up in failure or liquidation. Small business is acknowledged as the backbone of our country. It provides employment for the greatest number of the workers of the Nation, and, therefore, it is of the utmost importance that the Government should look into the problems that affect small business. I do not know of anything the Senate could do today that would be of greater value to the country in the way of improving economic conditions than to authorize a study of this kind, that might result in legislation of a character which would be helpful to small business enterprises.

We have assisted practically every other economic group in the country. We set up in Washington many years ago a Bureau of Mines, which is of tremendous aid and assistance to the mining industry of the Nation. That agency carries on extensive investigations and studies in mining, and furnishes information to the mining industry which is of invaluable assistance. We have done the same thing for agriculture. We have done the same thing for big business enterprises, and for practically every other group that goes to make up our economic system; but nothing has been done for small business. It seems to me that now is the time to do something for small business.

Both the great national parties of the country have adopted platforms in which they pledge themselves to do something for small business. Therefore, I think there should be no opposition to a program of this kind; in fact, I believe there is no substantial opposition in this body to a proposal of this character. I made a very extensive study of it before presenting the resolution, and I have with me now a copy of the resolution as originally prepared which was endorsed by practically 60 percent of the members of this body.

Under those circumstances, it seems to me that there should be no hesitation in the adoption of the resolution. It could not possibly do any harm; it is not designed to stir up any opposition or to make any attack on any group; it is not a witch-hunting program; it is designed, wholly and entirely, to see if it is possible for us to find some way, some method, by which we may be able to aid the small business enterprises of the country.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat I should like to make a statement.

Mr. MURRAY. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. The Temporary National Economic Committee, of which the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] is the chairman, has been conducting hearings for 2 years in regard to every phase of our national business life, including banking, railroads, and corporations engaged both in small and large business of every kind and character and description. The testimony which has been adduced will fill scores of columns, thousands upon thousands of pages, bearing upon every phase of our industrial and business life, little business as well as big business, corporations as well as individuals.

It seems to me, I may say to my friend from Montana, that it would be merely an attempt to thrash over old straw and cover ground which would not be covered as perfectly as it has been covered not only by the agency to which I have referred but by many other agencies of the Government.

There appeared before the committee to which I have referred representatives of the Department of Commerce, which, as the Senator knows, has employees who have been studying for years and are still studying every phase of our business and industrial life. The representatives of the Department of Commerce have furnished the committee with valuable information and tables bearing upon all aspects of industry. I cannot conceive of the investigation proposed by the resolution giving us any information we do not now possess.

I have very great respect for my dear friend from Montana and ordinarily I would be very happy to go along with him in any activity in which he is engaged, but I inquire again whether there is any necessity for another examination and investigation? We know that millions and hundreds of millions of dollars have been loaned to small business enterprises by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. I saw some months ago a table showing the loans which had been made by that organization, and they ran into the hundreds of millions of dollars, indeed, exceeded several billions of dollars, and no inconsiderable part of that stupendous sum grew out of loans which had been made to small business activities. I know in my own State small-business activities and organizations have applied to the R. F. C. and have obtained loans, and that that organization as well as others have made very particular and acute studies of small business and our business life.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I am trespassing on the time of the Senator from Montana.

Mr. MURRAY. I agree with most of the observations of the distinguished Senator from Utah, but I think he entirely misconceives the purpose of the move that I have in mind. This is not intended as a raid on the Treasury, as the Senator from Utah seems to apprehend. It is not intended as anything of the kind. He also misapprehends the purpose of the resolution, in that it is not intended to provide for a continuation of investigations such as the one carried on by the committee to which the Senator has already referred. It is not intended to provide for an investigation at all. It is intended to bring about research and study of the various investigations which have already been made. Washington is filled with reports of investigations, but nothing is being done about them.

We have, for instance, at the present time, under the Comptroller of the Currency, a vast reservoir of information with regard to small business. That office has in its files records of the failures of small business all over the Nation. An investigation and study of those records would reveal the causes of the failures, and would enable Congress to do something that might provide relief and protection against similar failures in the future.

As I have already stated, we have acted in Congress for almost every group that goes to make up our economic system. The Senator from Utah comes from a mining State. He knows very well what great assistance we have rendered to the mining interests of his State. He knows very well what the Government of this country has done for the other interests in his State, such as the agricultural, sugar, and other interests there; but he knows that nothing whatever is being done for small business, while the mortality in small business is something like 98 percent.

We hear every day voluble talks expressing tremendous sympathy for the small businessmen of the country; but when we come to try to do something for small business, there is a lack of sympathy for any effort that a person attempts to make.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MURRAY. I yield.

Mr. KING. Let me say first, in reply to one of the Senator's suggestions that I conceived that this proposal was to be a raid upon the Treasury, that I did not so understand it, and did not intend that any observations I made should carry that connotation.

As a matter of fact, the investigations made by the committee of which I am a member were for the purpose of ascertaining the condition of our economic and industrial life. We went into the small-business end—if I may use that expression—of our industries and of our economic life. As the Senator states, thousands and hundreds of thousands of pages of testimony have been given, and thousands and tens of thousands of pages of printed matter have been presented showing the condition of industry, the small business and the large business. I concede that many small business activities have failed and many large business activities have failed.

There have been hundreds of failures, individual and corporate and partnership, because of the follies of individuals, or the lack of understanding, or the lack of capacity.

The Senator may go into any little town, where perhaps only one small store would meet all the demands of the people, and he will find half a dozen stores. The result is that in a little while, 2 or 3 years, half of them will fail. So these failures are the fault of the folly or the ambitions or the expectations and hopes of a large number of persons who are ill-prepared to engage in particular lines of industry in which it is quite evident that they will ultimately come to grief.

We have had banking failures, and we have had failures in nearly every industry, big failures and little failures. What does the Senator think will be accomplished by this investigation? The facts have all been elucidated, and are in printed form in the files of the various departments. The investigations have been made. Is the resolution submitted merely for the purpose of going into all these tomes, these thousands and tens of thousands of pages, and trying to analyze them and give to the public an analysis of them, or is there to be another investigation?

Mr. MURRAY. As I say, I think the Senator misapprehends the purport of the resolution. The Senator apprehends that most failures are due to the unjustified ambitions or folly of men. Is not that in itself a subject for verification? We do not intend to go over the matters which have already been investigated by the committee to which the Senator has reference. There are, however, a great many other subjects upon which that committee has not touched.

As I say, I have taken up the matter with the various departments of the Government in Washington which participated in the very investigations and studies of the committee the Senator refers to.

I have here, from the Department of Commerce, a communication from the Acting Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Hinckley, in which he says:

> The Department of Commerce, as the agency of the Government particularly charged with fostering and promoting the business economy of the Nation, is interested in all problems which affect that economy. Because of that interest and responsibility, the Department looks with sympathy on any legislation which offers the possibility of shedding some light on the nature of the problems affecting our national business economy, with the end in view of affording some contribution to the solution of those problems either through further legislative or administrative action.
> It is well recognized that the data upon which valid conclusions may be reached concerning the problems of small business are quite inadequate. The Department knows this from its own experience in attempting to secure information concerning specific aspects of small business enterprises. The resolution which you have introduced seems to offer a possibility of filling in the gaps now impeding any solution of the small businessman's problems and, therefore, the Department feels that the passage of this resolution will contribute to the solution of those problems.
> It is our thought that the research which has already been done in the small-business field will be of assistance to the committee set up under your resolution and, further, that so far as existing research has covered certain aspects of the situation, by so much the scope of your inquiry may be delimited.

I also have a letter from Mr. Thurman Arnold, who took an active part in the investigation mentioned by the Senator from Utah, in which he says:

> I am tremendously interested in your resolution and would like to help out in any survey that you can get across. I am particularly interested in food distribution and I think there is a lot to be done here. From the point of view of the antitrust laws, I would like to see developed before a research committee some of the ideas which I have very briefly expressed in the chapter of my book Bottle Necks Between the Farm and the Table. I am sending you a copy of the book under separate cover.

Again, later on, he says:

> In May 1939 the Temporary National Economic Committee conducted a hearing on savings and investments which touched on the problems of small business. Within the next 60 or 90 days the committee will release a monograph entitled, "Some Problems of Small Business." The antitrust division has not made an extensive study with respect to the problems of small business. However, many of our cases involve studies which touch upon restraints of trade which handicap small business. Although the files of the department and of the Temporary National Economic Committee should be helpful in the work which you propose, I do not feel that they contain the comprehensive picture which you desire.

Again, Mr. Henry Grady, Assistant Secretary of State, says:

> It seems to me that your proposal for a research survey of the problems of small business enterprises is a most worthy one. I think there definitely is a "small business" problem, and it should be given our constant attention. My only concern with your proposal, however, is that the sum of money you request for this survey would be so limited as to make it difficult to accomplish very much.

Mr. Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, says in a letter to me dated August 26, 1940:

> I do sincerely believe that there is an opportunity for such a committee to make some constructive suggestions. Particularly do I think this is true with regard to financing.

Again, the Federal Security Agency has considered the proposition and has issued a letter supporting it. Mr. Paul V. McNutt, Administrator, says—

> With the aims and purposes of this survey I am in hearty accord. It should do much to focus the attention of the Nation on one of the most acute unsolved problems in the entire field of American economic enterprise.

The Federal Trade Commission has done likewise. Before Mr. Ewin L. Davis, chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, would give any attention at all to the proposal, he took it up with the Bureau of the Budget, and was advised by the Bureau of the Budget that it was perfectly proper for such a resolution to be considered, and that it was in full accord with the program of the President. The Bureau of the Budget stated to him as follows:

> The original of the proposed report is returned herewith, and you are advised that there would be no objection to its submission to the committee.

Following that information, which he received from the Bureau of the Budget, the Federal Trade Commission, speaking through Mr. Ewin L. Davis as chairman, said:

> "This is in further reply to your letters of September 9, addressed to me and my colleagues, requesting our ideas and suggestions regarding the resolution introduced by you in the Senate on August 22 for the appointment of a committee to study and survey by means of research the problems of American small business enterprises."
> My colleagues and I are heartily in accord with your emphasis on "the importance of a healthy national small-business economy to a democratic form of government, to prosperity, to maximum employment, and to our internal morale." We believe that such a research survey might well be the means of assembling and correlating facts necessary for enlightenment in formulating plans and methods of assistance and relief to small business enterprises. The information accumulated should prove useful to existing law-enforcement agencies and may also serve as a basis for legislative action should additional aid or protection seem desirable.
> A determination of the causes of the high annual mortality rate among small businesses seems to us to be of particular importance. Of course, the law of survival of the fittest applies in business as elsewhere.

The Senator from Utah has made very cogent observations on that matter.

> Many new business ventures fail because ill conceived, undercapitalized, or badly managed. Our economic structure will not be strengthened by fostering or prolonging the life of such concerns by means of artificial stimulants. Nevertheless, it is important to find out whether the high mortality among small business enterprises is confined chiefly to anemic and unsound structures or whether it is not due, in part at least, to favoritism, oppression, monopoly, and unfair methods of competition. Ascertainment of the causes of failures of small businesses which previously had shown an ability to succeed over a period of years should be particularly enlightening.

Mr. President, that is the letter which I received from Mr. Davis, of the Federal Trade Commission. I could continue to refer to reports from various Federal agencies, all uniformly approving the resolution, but I do not think it is necessary. It seems to me that there should be no question in regard to the attitude of the Senate on this resolution.

I notice that the senior Senator from Utah has left the Chamber, so I assume his interest in the matter has subsided. I therefore submit the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY].

Mr. WHITE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. CARAWAY in the chair). Sixty Senators having answered, a quorum is present.

Mr. MURRAY. Mme. President, I have already made a statement in support of my motion. My understanding is that the Senator from Utah, who apparently opposed my motion, now intends to withdraw his objection. I therefore submit the motion.

Mr. WHITE. Mme. President, I wish to voice my opposition briefly to the Senate agreeing to the resolution now urged upon it. There seems to be no end to proposals for research or investigations, by whatsoever name one may wish to call them. There seems to be an irresistible desire to offer resolutions to confer upon committees authority to look here, there, and everywhere into matters involving manners and methods of our American life. Sometimes it seems to me there is nothing to do but to let this desire run its course. However, it seems to me the resolution now under consideration is subject to special objection, and it ought not to have the approval of the Senate; that the task ought not to be undertaken by the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, or by any special committee of the Senate.

Mme. President, in the first place the resolution, whatever may be its purpose, in its effect is a reflection upon the T. N. E. C., representing this body, the other branch of the Congress, and the executive departments of the Government. That committee has committed to it precisely the same character of study that is proposed by the pending resolution, and that committee over long months has been giving study to the problems of the small businessmen of America, as well as to the problems of the other business interests of our country.

I do not know whether or not it is intended by the adoption of the pending resolution to supplant the jurisdiction of the Temporary National Economic Committee presided over by the able Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], whether or not it is intended to end the study by that committee or the problems of small business, but in any event it will involve a duplication of the duties and the activities of the Temporary National Economic Committee.

I understand that the Committee on Banking and Currency of the Senate has held hearings of substantial length in respect to precisely the same problems that are proposed to be studied by the proposed new committee of the Senate. I have in mind also as a further illustration of this tendency to investigate, that only yesterday this body agreed to a resolution proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] which infringes upon the same subject matter. It involves an investigation of some of the same persons, some of the same activities, that would fall within the scope of the pending resolution.

I have in mind further that there is pending on the calendar of the Senate a resolution reported from the Commerce Committee of the Senate, which proposes that the Department of Commerce, in conjunction with various educational institutions of our country, shall cover this same subject matter, shall investigate and study problems of the small businessmen of America, and shall undertake to find solutions for those problems.

Offhand these three other committees of the Senate have occurred to me. These three other legislative proposals have run along precisely the same lines as the purpose set forth in the pending resolution. I go back for a moment to the T. N. E. C. I do not know whether it is proposed to disregard, to wipe from the record, and completely to ignore the studies of the T. N. E. C., or what the purpose may be, but I know that when we appoint a second committee to cover precisely the same ground which has been covered and is being covered by a constituted committee of the Senate, we shall indulge in duplication of effort, and we shall put to unnecessary burdens the business life of our country and our communities.

It seems to me we might let well enough alone, that we might with some degree of patience await the conclusion of the studies of the T. N. E. C., await its reports to this body, and give consideration to its recommendations, before we start another body of men out upon that same road, to bring in here either substantially the same recommendations which shall be made by the Temporary National Economic Committee, or to reject the recommendations of the T. N. E. C. and bring in other and different recommendations for the consideration of the Senate.

I listened to the statement of the junior Senator from Montana in presenting this matter. He referred at some length to various agencies of Government which are recommending this study; but I failed to hear from him a recommendation of a single business interest in the United States calling for any such study as is proposed. I venture the assertion, Mme. President, that if the question were left to the small business of this Nation there would be no support whatsoever for further investigation of its activities, further study of its troubles, or further recommendations by Congress as to the solution of its problems. So I feel that we are doing a wholly unnecessary thing. We are doing a wholly unwise thing. We are doing a prejudicial thing to the very interests which we pretend to be anxious to serve. I shall regret it exceedingly if the resolution shall have the approval of the Senate.

Mr. MURRAY. Mme. President, I shall briefly answer the remarks of the Senator from Maine.

The Senator says that we should let well enough alone. If the Senator feels that the condition of small business in the United States is satisfactory, of course his observation is appropriate; but I do not think anyone in the country would agree with that view.

Mr. WHITE. Mme. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MURRAY. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. I did not say that the condition of small business in the country is satisfactory. I said that we are already doing enough investigating.

Mr. MURRAY. I understand the Senator very well. We have helped every group except small business. The Senator is apprehensive that it is the intention to have the proposed committee supplant the Temporary National Economic Committee, to which he has referred. There is nothing further from the minds of the proponents of the resolution than to undertake to supplant the Temporary National Economic Committee. The Temporary National Economic Committee has performed a service. It has made investigations which, of course, would be utilized by the new committee, and which have been referred to in the several letters which I mentioned during the course of my opening remarks on the motion.

It seems to me the Senator is unduly sensitive with reference to the fear he has that we are infringing upon the jurisdiction of the Temporary National Economic Committee. The letters which I have read seem to indicate that the Temporary National Economic Committee has not covered the entire field. The proposed committee would not go back over the territory which the Temporary National Economic Committee has covered. It would be expected, of course, to take full advantage of the material and studies made by that committee; but it is necessary for further studies to be made, as indicated by the various departments of the Government which have given study to the problem, and by various Senators who have been studying the matter.

As I stated in my opening remarks, practically 60 percent of the Members of the Senate have already signified their support of the resolution. Both national political parties have indicated that they are desirous of having a study of this kind made for the purpose of attempting to bring some aid to an economic group in this country which represents a very important factor in the prosperity of the United States.

I think very few persons appreciate the significance of the small business enterprises of the country. Small and intermediate business employing up to 799 workers account for 15,493,000 employees as of March 1938; 69 percent of all reporting to the Social Security Board; and 41 percent of all gainfully employed in the United States on farms and in cities. Small businesses which employ from 1 to 29 workers account for 6,723,000 workers; 31 percent of all reporting to the Social Security Board as of March 1938; and 20 percent of all gainfully employed in the United States, both on farms and in cities.

I have heretofore stated that Congress has attempted to aid every other economic group in the United States. We have done great things for American agriculture. We have assisted the coal-mining industry, which I discussed off the floor with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] a few moments ago. We have established a Bituminous Coal Commission for the purpose of aiding that industry. We have a Bureau of Mines which renders enormous service to the mining industry of the Nation; but nothing is being done for small business. It is the most competitive business in the United States.

As I say, the Senator from Maine is apprehensive that the resolution is a reflection on the Temporary National Economic Committee. I think he is very much mistaken in that statement. As a matter of fact, the purpose of the proposed resolution is supplemental to those of the Temporary National Economic Committee.

I have before me a list of the various items which the committee I have in mind might take into consideration in connection with its investigations and research:

First. It would undoubtedly take into consideration the high mortality rate of small business.

Second. It would consider the need for and ways and means of providing risk capital and loans for small enterprises.

Third. Small businesses are now required to make endless reports to the Federal Government, which of itself is a severe burden on the small owner. Perhaps there has developed a large amount of duplication in these reports and forms and it may be found possible to simplify them and eliminate the duplications without any impairment in the value to the Government or the purposes for which the information is desired by Government departments.

Fourth. Treasury reports indicate that since 1928 small business enterprises as a class, under $100,000 capitalization, have made no profit. This is a serious threat to the survival of our capitalistic system which we seek to preserve. It is upon this system that we depend now for employment, prosperity, and economic advancement of the welfare of the masses of our people. There is only one other system, that of totalitarianism, which will provide a people any measure of these things. But totalitarianism implies regimentation and bureaucracy and these we seek to avoid.

Fifth. The United States Census of Manufactures in 1937 showed that since 1929, 42,000 small manufacturers have ceased to exist. This is a reduction of over 20 percent from the total of all manufacturing enterprises in operation in 1929 and the effect of this decline in productive enterprise on employment can only be surmised at this moment.

Sixth. A permanent program of research and education in the interests of small businessmen. We have for a number of years, through the Department of Labor, provided aid, assistance, education, and research for the benefit of labor.

For over 40 years, through the Department of Agriculture, our land-grant colleges, and our high schools we have provided an extensive program of research and education for the benefit of agriculture. It has been advocated for more than 10 years that a similar program of aid and assistance to small enterprise owners ought to be fostered in like manner.

I have just received from Secretary Henry A. Wallace a letter of endorsement of Senate Resolution 298, in which he says:

> I do sincerely believe there is an opportunity for such a committee, as provided in Senate Resolution 298, to make some constructive suggestions. Particularly do I think this is true with regard to the provision of a new financing mechanism to serve businesses needing loans of a million dollars or less.

Leading economic research organizations of the country have for some time also been advocating the need and advantage and good that may be accomplished by a research survey such as is proposed in Senate Resolution 298. The foremost of these is the well-known and highly regarded Brookings Institution. It is my hope that the committee will invite and be able to obtain the cooperation of the Brookings Institution and other highly regarded independent and factual research organizations in this research survey.

The records seem to indicate that even in 1929, in the period of the highest industrial actiivity in the United States, the vast majority of small business enterprises in the United States made no profits whatever. In 1937, when all other business in the country was proceeding rapidly toward recovery, the only economic group in the country which was falling behind was small business.

In view of the fact that both political parties seem to favor the proposal, it seems to me that there should be no hesitation on the part of the Senate. I therefore submit the motion.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mme. President, I wish to say a word in behalf of the motion of the Senator from Montana.

It is true that there are committees in the Senate and in the House which have investigated the problems of small business, and which may continue to do so. It is likewise true that those committees have many other functions to perform; and it is not always possible for them to give undivided attention to the problems of the small businessman.

I happen to be a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency. In connection with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation loans, the committee gave consideration to the problems of the small businessman. The Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], and other Senators came before the committee in behalf of some peculiar form of action which might be helpful to small business.

Undoubtedly the Temporary National Economic Committee has been giving consideration to that subject. I will say frankly that as a rule I have not been very enthusiastic about the appointment of special committees to consider subjects which are within the jurisdiction of standing committees; but in this particular situation the condition of small businessmen throughout the country has been so emergent that it seems to me that not only could no harm come, but considerable good might come from the ascertainment of facts by a committee set up especially to deal with the subject.

Of course, it is not contemplated that the committee would have legislative jurisdiction. I realize that any recommendations it might report would probably have to go to standing committees for their consideration. There is no effort to deprive a standing committee of its jurisdiction. However, in view of the situation, in view of the fact that at least on one occasion, if not more, the Government has called into Washington large groups of small-business men, and in view of the fact that the small businessmen have a national organization which at least thinks it has a problem which is a little different from that of other business, it strikes me that good might come from such an investigation. Certainly no harm could come from it.

I hope the Senator's motion will be agreed to, and that the resolution will be agreed to.

Mr. DANAHER. Mme. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. Has not the Banking and Currency Committee been conducting a series of hearings lasting for many weeks on this very subject?

Mr. BARKLEY. I am unable to say how long the hearings lasted, but when we had before the committee one of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation bills expanding the type of loans and somewhat relaxing the requirement for security, we dealt with the subject, and we thought we had amended the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act so as to be of some help to small-business men. However, the help did not materialize, because we still retained a requirement as to certain types of security which had to be put up. It is true that witnesses have been before the Banking and Currency Committee on the subject, but I do not recall that committee devoted weeks to it. Perhaps I am mistaken; I may not have been at all the meetings.

Mr. DANAHER. I think, if the Senator will permit me to refresh his recollection, it is easily possible he may have missed a series of hearings on the bill introduced by the junior Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD]. The Senator now that I mention it may recall the discussions about the Mead small-loan bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. I recall that, and the Senator from New York has displayed a commendable interest in assistance to small business, but the whole problem of small business is not necessarily encompassed within the terms of a loan that may be granted to it. The feature of the problem which the Committee on Banking and Currency dealt with largely was the making of loans by some Government agency, the R. F. C. or others, to small business, but there are other collateral and probably principal problems that face small-business men which are not necessarily encompassed within their ability or desire to secure loans from the Government.

Mr. DANAHER. Mme. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. Does the Senator recall that the Temporary National Economic Committee held hearings at very considerable length, under an appropriation that ran well over $1,000,000 in order to assist it in conducting the hearings and investigations into this subject among others; and does not the Senator recall, let me ask, that there was a 60- or 70-page brochure with reference to it prepared by the committee?

Mr. BARKLEY. I recall the committee went into that matter but, of course, the jurisdiction of the T. N. E. C. is so vast and complicated that it is not always easy for the average man or even for the average Senator or even for those who are above the average to dig out of a mass of other testimony all the facts which may have been elucidated in regard to this particular problem. Waiving my usual objection to special committees, which I think I am justified in entertaining, my view is that as to this particular subject it would be valuable to have a committee which would gather the facts without sidetracking, without detouring, and without complicating them with other facts regarding many other kinds of business, and other and different methods of transacting business affected by antitrust laws, and that is the core of the investigation carried on by the T. N. E. C., as well as other matters. So it seems to me that it would be valuable to have a small committee of the Senate operating on a single track with the single purpose of ascertaining something about the situation that surrounds small business in this country, not only from the standpoint of the antitrust laws, not only from the standpoint of laws which might be enacted by the Government, but from every other economic and industrial standpoint that might be a valid subject of investigation.

Mr. DANAHER. Mme. President, I thank the Senator from Kentucky first, and I will be happy to yield to the Senator from Montana in just a moment. I simply wish to have the RECORD show, speaking for my part, that I am deeply in sympathy with the general problems of the small-business men. While I was not on the subcommittee I took time to attend most of the hearings on the Mead bills and similar hearings before the Banking and Currency Committee, I did so as a matter of interest because of my concern for and my sympathy with the plight of the small-business man. But, Mme. President, it seems to me that the nub of the matter as presented to our committee lay more than any other single factor in the lack of available intermediate credit to the small-business man. There seems to be need for legislation which will make available that type of credit called intermediate money, and I would favor providing a type of loan which the bank ordinarily cannot grant, because the bank must have more liquid security than is possible in the circumstances surrounding small-business men today.

Equally we must make absolutely certain that we do not authorize some Government corporation, such as the R. F. C., or other corporate entity which we may later create, to go too far, to take too great a participation, and leave the element of risk entirely upon some governmental agency rather than upon the enterprise itself.

Mme. President, because of the fact that these matters have already been gone into so thoroughly with reference to the general banking situation, the general economic and industrial situation, the antitrust laws and their enforcement and operation, the many ramifications of our whole system, in which system, by the way, the small-business man, of course, plays an enormous part, it seems to me that under this resolution there can be an overlapping of activity so vast that there may result complications which would be unnecessary, and I feel that we should not create another special committee at this time. I believe that we ought to enable the existing Banking and Currency Committee to go forward and to carry over into the next session of the Congress the functions already being performed and the inquiry already being conducted.

I dare say that unless the Mead bills receive attention at the present session they will lapse, but there is no reason, it seems to me, why the Congress cannot authorize a continuous sitting of the subcommittees already in existence, rather than to undertake to create a brand new committee to start anew and fresh on a proposition that has already engaged countless hours of the time of Members of this body.

Mme. President, these thoughts occurred to me as we undertook consideration of the resolution of the Senator from Montana. I know of his interest in this subject and appreciate it and commend him for it, but my attitude of admiration for what he is seeking to do does not go the length of my being willing to say that we should add to the existing standing committees, a special committee to consider a subject which is already before a committee of the Senate authorized to conduct the investigation, which has already performed much of the work, and which can go forward in any new lines, if any new lines there be. Surely the result will be a duplication of effort and a waste of the time already allotted to this inquiry. With that thought, Mme. President, I want to say that, despite my interest in and sympathy for the position taken by the Senator from Montana, I think we should not create a new special committee. I think that the able majority leader, who is on the Committee on Banking and Currency might well have adhered to his well-known and previously announced opposition to the creation of special committees of inquiry.

Mr. MURRAY. Mme. President, I appreciate the attitude of the very able Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER], but I think his views are in conflict with the position of both the great political parties of the United States, which have gone on record in favor of a study of this kind. Furthermore, he is in conflict with the Temporary National Economic Committee, to which he has referred. I have before me a letter from Mr. Thurman Arnold, of that committee, who, of course, is one of the outstanding students of the United States on the problems of small business. He says:

> Although the files of the Department and of the Temporary National Economic Committee should be helpful in the work which you propose, I do not feel that they contain the comprehensive picture which you desire.

Earlier in my remarks I referred to letters from practically every department of the Government in Washington, which indicate accord with the sentiment expressed by Mr. Arnold. It seems to me that the Senator from Connecticut is not supported in his views on this matter, and I think that the proposed special committee is justified from every standpoint.

It is certainly wrong to permit to continue the conditions which exist, affecting the small enterprises of this country without some effort on the part of the Congress of the United States to render them assistance. It is not merely a matter of financing them. It might be possible that the Government in undertaking a financing program might go too far in financing small-business enterprises that might be found to be economically unsound. That is not the purpose of this movement. Its purpose is to ascertain what is the matter with small business, and what can be done by the Government of the United States, not only by the legislative department of the Government, but by the various executive departments. We have been assisting every other group in the United States for many years, but we have done nothing for small business. As I have said, it is the most competitive economic group in the United States, and yet, when we come to try to do something for them, we find that there is an apathy about it. It seems to me that the motion which I have made should be agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. Mme. President, will the Senator yield for an inquiry?

Mr. MURRAY. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. Does the Senator have any idea that there can be completed an investigation of this problem and a solution arrived at by the expenditure of the $10,000 provided by the resolution?

Mr. MURRAY. No; I do not think anything of the kind, and I do not think it is necessary to consider that we should have to do it within the $10,000 limit.

Mr. ADAMS. It merely occurs to me that this would merely be the beginning of it. If the problem is really to be studied, the expenditure of $10,000 will hardly make a beginning.

Mr. MURRAY. We expect to have the assistance of various departments of the Government and even outside institutions. I have, for instance, a letter from the Brookings Institution in which that organization, through one of its officers, says:

> As you have said, I do have a keen interest in the problems of small-business enterprise. I have been studying it for a long time. I shall be very happy to discuss this matter with you. * * *
> The Brookings Institution is always glad to be of service, and I hope in this case we may be of some help to you.

With the various economic research institutions which have been set up all over the United States, supported by endowments and otherwise, and with the various departments of the Government, and with the various reservoirs of information that we can seek, the committee can carry on very considerable research, and without question find it possible to do something to aid and support the small-business enterprises of the country.

It is not always necessary to have an enormous fund to conduct research of this kind. If we have men who are sincerely and honestly interested in trying to do something for small business, we can accomplish something. In this very body we have men who have spent many, many years studying the problems of small business. I do not see any reason why those Senators cannot be assembled in a committee to study these problems, and try to work out some means and method by which we may be able to assist small business. It is not a question of money; it is a question of sincerity, a question of an honest intention and devotion to a serious problem affecting our country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate Resolution 298.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, line 17, it is proposed to strike out "$15,000" and insert "$10,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution is open to further amendment.

Mr. MURRAY. I send to the desk two amendments, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments offered by the Senator from Montana will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 1, line 1, it is proposed to strike out "five" and insert "seven", so as to read:

> That a special committee consisting of seven Senators, to be appointed by the Vice President, is hereby authorized and directed—

And so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, line 9, after the word "assistants", it is proposed to insert:

> To request such assistance and information from any departments and agencies of the Government.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

MILITARY ORDER OF THE PURPLE HEART—VETO MESSAGE

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STEWART in the chair) laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I return herewith, without approval, Senate bill No. 2524, entitled "An act to incorporate the Military Order of the Purple Heart."

The Purple Heart is awarded by the War Department, acting for the President, to persons who, while serving in the Army of the United States, perform any singularly meritorious act of extraordinary fidelity or essential service. Awards having been made I feel that the Government should refrain from granting a special favor to a minority of the holders of the award by which they might obtain an advantage or benefit which they could withhold from or which might not be available to all holders.

The bill clearly would permit the corporation to be as restricted as those in control at first or at any later time might desire. It would permit a restricted membership of the corporation to carry on activities in the name of the Military Order of the Purple Heart, when, because of restrictions or cost of membership many holders of the award might be denied membership. It thus would create an order within an order, as is further confirmed in section 6.

The powers and rights to be granted the corporation would permit a discrimination between the member and the nonmember holders of the Purple Heart award in the wearing of badges and emblems, and in other respects. The Government should assure equal benefits to all holders of the award.

To prevent a tendency to destroy the significance of the award, the sole right of the proper Government departments to prescribe and define all medals, badges, and emblems in connection with an award or decoration should not be abridged.

I have heretofore withheld my approval of a similar bill S. 2324, enacted by the Seventy-fourth Congress.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, October 8, 1940.

ADDITIONAL APPROPRIATION FOR NATIONAL-DEFENSE HOUSING

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House Joint Resolution 614, making an additional appropriation for national-defense housing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Colorado.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (H. J. Res. 614) making an additional appropriation for national-defense housing for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, this measure has just been reported from the Appropriations Committee.

The Senate will recall that a day or two ago a measure was passed providing for an appropriation of $150,000,000 for additional housing. That measure was passed too late to be incorporated in the supplemental appropriation bill; and the House has sent to the Senate, in this joint resolution, an appropriation of the amount authorized by the bill.

The Senate Committee on Appropriations today took up the measure and reported it to the Senate. It provides for an appropriation of $75,000,000 and a contract authorization of $75,000,000. The expenditures are to be made for the purpose of providing housing which is essential, according to the reports which have been filed, for national-defense purposes.

The matter reduces itself to a statement as to units. The survey of the Advisory Commission of the Council of National Defense of housing needs in connection with national defense as of October 2, indicates requirements of 132,000 units. The Advisory Commission figure that the minimum needs in connection with the entire program are 160,000 units, at a total cost of $560,000,000. There has already been appropriated $100,000,000, providing for a total of 27,240 units, and there have been certain other items of appropriation. It is now recommended by the departments interested and by the Council of National Defense that this additional appropriation be made in order to meet the requirements of housing for national defense.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator answer an inquiry?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. AUSTIN. Is the 6-percent limitation on the fixed fee on the same level that is provided for other appropriations for the national defense?

Mr. ADAMS. That is my understanding. It is a maximum limitation of 6 percent on fixed-fee cost-plus contracts. That is, there will necessarily be made an audit of the contract; and while excess payments may be made, all in excess of 6 percent is to be refunded.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, one further question: I notice that the joint resolution carries an appropriation of $40,000,000 for the Department of Agriculture. I should like an explanation of how that item happens to come in at this time. What is it for?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, this appropriation was presented to the Senate Appropriations Committee, and was not incorporated in the supplemental bill. It is now urged in the House and is urged in the Senate that this appropriation is essential in order to provide additional money for the enforcement of an act recently passed by the Congress with reference to the administration of the Commodity Exchange Act, due to the fact that the Congress has seen fit to add to the products subject to that act cottonseed oil, tallow, lard, peanut oil, soybean oil, and other fats and oils. We are told that that involves an increased cost, and that this amount is necessary. I am perfectly frank to say to the Senator that the only information I have on the subject is that contained in the statement coming from the Budget Bureau.

Mr. AUSTIN. May I inquire if the Senator knows whether the Committee on Appropriations studied this item when it considered the supplemental agricultural appropriation bill, or was it merely overlooked?

Mr. ADAMS. It was not studied. On the other hand, it was not overlooked. It was not included because the bill had passed, but had not become law. That was the reason why it was not included.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution is open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the third reading and passage of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATION BILL, NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry because of an uncertainty which has arisen with reference to an amendment made to the deficiency bill while it was before us, in relation to the appropriation for the National Labor Relations Board. I have here a letter from Judge Padway, general counsel of the American Federation of Labor, expressing grave concern about the matter.

As the bill was before the Senate originally, it not only deprived the National Labor Relations Board of all appropriations to be used for the Division of Economic Research and the Division of Technical Service, but it also provided that no appropriation should be used for any of the functions which had been assigned by the Labor Board to either of those particular bureaus.

I called the attention of the Senate to the fact that if the provision were agreed to, it would in effect seriously cripple if not practically repeal the National Labor Relations Act, because functions which had been assigned to either of these research bureaus were absolutely essential for carrying out the purposes and the provisions of the law. For instance, they were frequently required, when a charge was filed, to ascertain by their research work whether or not the particular industry involved in the complaint was engaged in interstate commerce. Until that jurisdictional matter was settled, the Board could not determine the question as to whether it should issue a complaint.

After I called these facts to the attention of the Senate, and yielding to the demand of the House that the Economic Research Division and the Technical Service Division should be abolished, I offered an amendment providing for the elimination of the provisions of the bill which prohibited the Labor Relations Board from exercising the functions which had been assigned to this particular bureau. The amendment was adopted, together with another amendment which made it very clear that none of these provisions was intended in any way to affect the functions or duties of the Labor Relations Board under the act. In addition, the $3,200 limitation inserted in the bill by the Senate committee was subject to some misunderstanding, but this was clarified by the explanation given on the floor by the Senators in charge of the bill, in response to my questions.

Thereafter the bill went to conference, and the conferees of the House receded upon the amendments made by the Senate, so that the amendments became law. The new language inserted by the conferees, in fact, strengthened the intent of my amendment.

While the discussion of my amendment was proceeding in the House, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], the chairman of the House conferees, made a statement, I am sure unintentially, which is apt to confuse the situation, and to create an uncertainty which might in itself interfere with the administration of the act, since the Board would be uncertain as to whether there was an intent to repeal part of the Labor Relations Act. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], when he was asked a question, made this statement as it appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on page 13234:

> It is understood by the conferees that the revised Senate language as now contained in the conference report will discontinue the personnel and the functions of that Division.

With the exception, he said, of certain personnel permitted to be retained to collect certain records.

If this were an accurate statement of the purport of the bill, it would mean that such functions as I have just mentioned and others to which I referred the other day—functions which are absolutely essential for the administration of the act—would be wholly prohibited. The result would be to repeal major features of the act and to prevent the Board from functioning at all in many cases.

I know the conferees did not intend such a result, nor does the conference report itself lead to such a result; indeed, the language actually adopted shows the contrary. Of course, we all know that when there is a conflict between the wording of an act and the mere statement of someone upon the floor of either House as to the intent, the language of the act prevails.

I am sure the conferees did not intend to eliminate all of the functions to which I have referred, which are an essential part of the administration of the act. In order that there may be no uncertainty, I desire to inquire of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], who I think was chairman of the conference, whether he or the conferees construed the amendment not only to abolish the Economic Research Division and the Division of Technical Service, but also to discontinue functions which are, as I have said, essential to the administration of the act.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I think the bill as it came from the conference committee, and as it was approved by the Senate, is perfectly clear on its face. I do not know that anything could be stated more clearly than the bill itself states its purpose. I can see no ground for the contention that the functions of the Labor Relations Board were in any way repealed, because there was specific provision in the conference report that no part of the Labor Relations Act was repealed. I do not have the exact language, but such a thought was expressed.

So far as the abolishing of these two divisions or bureaus is concerned, the Senator from New York acquiesced in the desire of the House, so that they went out in accordance with the House desires, and the acquiescence of the Senator. But the functions of the National Labor Relations Board were specifically saved by the saving clause, which was the last sentence in the paragraph referred to.

Mr. WAGNER. Were they not also saved by the amendment which I had offered which eliminated from the bill as it appeared before the Senate that feature of it which abolished not only the economic research or technical service divisions, but also the functions which had been assigned to them?

Mr. ADAMS. As the Senator knows, the conference committee accepted the language which the Senator from New York had put in.

Mr. WAGNER. Exactly.

Mr. ADAMS. We assumed the Senator from New York knew just what he was doing, and it never occurred to us even to inquire or question the effect of the amendment.

Mr. WAGNER. I am sure the conferees knew what the purpose of the amendment was. I stated my purpose at length and with great clarity when the matter was before the Senate.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. I do not think the statement of any individual conferee on the floor of the House or on the floor of the Senate could affect the interpretation of the language in the conference report, because it is not ambiguous in any way.

The Senate adopted a proviso offered by the Senator from New York. The conferees on the part of the Senate, representing the view of the Senate, insisted upon its retention in the bill. It was retained with but one change, the addition of the word "specific." Just because there was some discussion about the matter, and because, as one member of the conference, I believed in insisting on the view of the Senate, in order to remove any doubt I offered the language which was added to the proviso of the Senator from New York, which was to the effect that nothing therein contained should be construed as repealing any provision of the Labor Relations Act. So that there can be no doubt that no function can be abolished unless we repeal some provision of the Labor Relations Act. We can do that only by an act repealing some such provision. The language of the House abolished bureaus which had been established by the Board in the administration of the law, but no provision of the Labor Relations Act was repealed. The conferees took the position of the Senate that that should not be done.

Mr. WAGNER. And any money appropriated and expended for the purpose of carrying out these functions is within the province of the act and is perfectly legal, I take it.

Mr. BYRNES. That certainly is my view.

Mr. WAGNER. I thank the Senator very much.

CONSIDERATION OF BILLS ON THE CALENDAR

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, since the last call of the calendar, which was on the 30th of September, a few bills have been reported by committees, and I think it is wiser to call the new bills on the calendar than to try to pick out measures which may be thought more meritorious than others and attempt to act upon them. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the call of the calendar for the consideration of unobjected-to bills, beginning with Calendar No. 2305.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will state the first order of business.

MONEY ALLOWANCE FOR NONCOMMISSIONED OFFICERS' QUARTERS

The bill (S. 4366) to provide for an extension of the conditions under which a money allowance for quarters may be paid to certain noncommissioned officers of the Army of the United States was announced as first in order.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. The House has passed a similar bill to the Senate bill. Therefore I ask that House bill 10527 be substituted for Senate bill 4366 and that the House bill be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 10527) to provide for an extension of the conditions under which a money allowance for quarters may be paid to certain noncommissioned officers of the Army of the United States; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. AUSTIN. May I inquire the calendar number of the Senate bill?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. It is Calendar No. 2305.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah that House bill 10527 be substituted for the Senate bill and be now considered?

There being no objection, the bill H. R. 10527 was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 4366 will be indefinitely postponed.

ORGANIZATION BY STATES OF MILITARY UNITS

The bill (S. 4175) to amend section 61 of the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, by adding a proviso which will permit States to organize military units not a part of the National Guard, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HOLT. I ask that the bill be passed over.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I trust the Senator from West Virginia will withhold his objection to the present consideration of the bill. This is the home guard bill, and it has been asked for by the Governors of several States.

Mr. HOLT. There is no protection in the bill in case a Governor wishes to set up a National Guard to be used in a labor controversy, is there?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Yes, I think such protection has been provided by the change in the language of the measure to meet the objections which have been made to the home-defense bill by certain persons who thought the organization provided for would not be a regular National Guard organization in the ordinary sense. The objections have now been overcome in the amendment set out in the House bill, which I shall move be substituted for the Senate bill, and be considered.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. HOLT. My objection is that I do not want a vigilante force set up by the different Governors. In this day of hysteria I think we ought to provide every safeguard against such procedure. As I read the bill I do not think it contains such a safeguard.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I think it would be easy to answer that objection. No one wishes a vigilante guard in the United States. There is no need for such an organization. In fact, the labor organizations, which were fearful that that might happen, made formal protests to the consideration of any bill which would make it possible for such a thing to happen. Of course, no member of the Military Affairs Committee wanted that sort of thing to take place. Probably the most remarkable compliment that has come to the National Guard in the course of its history came from the heads of one of the largest labor organizations, who wanted put behind the home-guard organizations all the rights, all the privileges, all the laws that pertain to the National Guard Act. That is what I think will result if we pass the bill as the House committee changed it and as the House accepted it.

Mr. HOLT. I admit I have not had a chance to read the bill thoroughly. If the bill should be passed and I should find that it does not clearly provide the protection I suggest, would the Senator object if I should make a motion to reconsider the vote by which the measure was passed?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado and Mr. AUSTIN rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I yield first to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I wish to say to the Senator from West Virginia that when the bill first came to the Committee on Military Affairs the Senator from Utah and I opposed it, until it was amended so as to take care of the very point the Senator from West Virginia has in mind. In other words, the House bill, and the bill as it came to the Senate, as I interpret it, and as some of the labor organizations in my own State interpret it, gave the Governor of a State a chance to set up a sort of vigilante organization within the State, but the Senate committee amendment is supposed to take care of that. I refer to the language in line 3, page 3, of the bill. The language is not clear to me. It seems rather awkward, but we were asked to draw the language in that way, and I presume it is correctly drawn. It says——

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a suggestion at that point?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I wish to finish my remarks, and then I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I wanted to help the Senator find that line.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. What line is it?

Mr. AUSTIN. Line 5. The language provides that the organizations are to be set up under the laws of the States; that the legislatures shall have control, instead of the Governors.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is what I am looking for.

Mr. AUSTIN. Is the Senator looking at the bill which it is proposed to substitute for the Senate bill—that is, House bill 10495?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I am looking at the wrong bill. What line is it on in the House bill?

Mr. AUSTIN. Page 3, line 5, of House bill 10495.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I have the right bill now. Beginning in line 3, page 3, as the Senator from Vermont stated, is the following language:

> That under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, the organization by and maintenance within any State of such military forces other than National Guard as may be provided by the laws of such State is hereby authorized—

And so forth. "By the laws of such State" is the saving clause in that whole situation; and, of course, if the State passes a law and the organization operates under a State law, it could not possibly be a vigilante organization. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from West Virginia to the fact that the House bill does authorize a vigilante organization, but we will amend the House bill. It will go to conference, and none of us know when it will come out of conference, and I think we ought to have some strong assurances from the Senator who is in charge of the bill that when it goes to conference the Senate amendment will be adhered to.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I am glad to yield.

Mr. HOLT. With that assurance from both the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Colorado, I have no objection. But I understood from what the Senator from Colorado said that the bill would allow a vigilante organization to be set up. Of course, we all know that in time of war, or preceding war, there is much hysteria, and great injustice is often done. That is why I objected. I think the House bill would allow a vigilante organization to be set up, and I think it could be used for strike breaking under the provisions of the House bill. I may be wrong in that respect. I was of that opinion after reading the measure. If it is amended by the Senate, of course that will make a difference, and with such an amendment I can see that there will be a vast improvement.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I wish to make an inquiry. As I see the bill, it is premised upon the principle that the right of the State to maintain a militia can absolutely be taken away by an act of Congress. In other words, it is provided in the measure that no State shall maintain troops in time of peace other than authorized by this measure. If that principle is sound, Congress can say that no State shall at any time maintain a militia.

It seems to me it is proposed to deny to the State or to attempt to deny to the State a right which I understood it has fundamentally; that is, the right to maintain a militia within the State for its defensive purposes within the State. That is something which belongs to the State as of right, and not something which is granted to the State as a privilege by the Federal Government. Am I correct in that interpretation?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. That, of course, is true, but since 1916, in the National Defense Act——

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. May I finish my answer to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. AUSTIN. I wish to say that I think that is not true, and therefore I should like the Senator to permit an interruption.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I would just as soon have the question answered by the Senator from Vermont as by the Senator from Utah. For that purpose I shall be glad to be interrupted.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, the difficulty with the position taken by the Senator from Colorado is that it is just the reverse of the fundamental situation. In the Constitution there is the flat prohibition which I read:

No State shall, without the consent of Congress, * * * keep troops—

Mr. ADAMS. Read the entire section.

Mr. AUSTIN. I will read the entire section:

No State shall, without the consent of Congress, lay any duty of tonnage, keep troops, or ships of war in time of peace, enter into any agreement or compact with another State, or with a foreign power, or engage in war, unless actually invaded, or in such imminent danger as will not admit of delay.

In order to conform this proposed legislation to the Constitution the language of the Constitution is employed. It is not smooth language; and there are some things about the style of the amendment which I think could be improved, which would make it more of a grant than it appears on its face to be. It undertakes to give the consent of Congress in a very limited way, and to retain the control of Congress to the extent that the Constitution requires in another provision, namely:

To provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia, and for governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States, reserving to the States, respectively, the appointment of officers, and the authority of training the militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress.

It was my intention, if the Senate should agree to proceed to the consideration of the substitute, to ask the Senate to accept an amendment by adding, in line 3 on page 3, the words which I have just read from the Constitution, "for discipline in training", so as to read:

That under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe for discipline in training, the organization by and maintenance within any State of such military forces other than National Guard as may be provided by the laws of such State is hereby authorized while any part of the National Guard of the State concerned is in active Federal service.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. AUSTIN. I have concluded.

Mr. ADAMS. May I make an inquiry, with the permission of the Senator from Utah?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. The second amendment to the Constitution asserts the right to maintain a militia. I gather that the Senator has construed that amendment as referring to what, in the previous discussion, has been called the unorganized militia. That is, it reserves the right of individual citizens to bear arms, rather than the right of the State to organize the individual citizens, with their arms, into any form of militia or guard organization.

Mr. AUSTIN. I concur in that idea, believing that when it comes to organization we are governed by the other provision of the Constitution relating to organization; namely, to provide for organizing the militia. That is exactly the language. Paragraph 16 of section 8 of article I of the Constitution reads:

To provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia—

And so forth. I think every State may have a well-regulated militia, under the second amendment, it being necessary to the security of a free State.

A well-regulated militia, being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear arms, shall not be infringed.

But in order for a State government as such to maintain troops which are organized into an effective military unit, I believe the State must conform to the provision of the Constitution relating to organization.

Mr. ADAMS. So the Senator does not feel that the second amendment was enacted to make provision for State-organized militia, which right, under the original Constitution, might be construed to be denied? As the Senator knows, the amendments were adopted largely to preserve the rights of the States and the rights of individual citizens. I am asking the two Senators, who are expert military men, to elucidate the matter.

Mr. AUSTIN. I appreciate the comedy of the Senator's remark.

Mr. President, I think we must construe all the provisions of the Constitution together—those in the original Constitution and those in the amendments—and they should all be given effect. None of them should be regarded as killing off any other if construction will permit life. They may all be construed together, keeping every one of them active and operative, upon our relationship in a federation—and reasonably, too, as I see it.

Mr. ADAMS. Then I am correct in my original theory that the argument is premised upon the view that no State organization bearing arms may be permitted except with the consent of Congress, regardless of the name or character of the organization?

Mr. AUSTIN. That is correct.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I yield.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont a question. If I correctly understand the Senator. he interprets the second amendment——

Mr. AUSTIN. Let me interpolate. I mean in time of peace, of course. Does the Senator understand that I answer on that assumption?

Mr. ADAMS. I understand; but it does not occur to me that there is any difference. If Congress may control in time of peace, it may control in time of war.

Mr. AUSTIN. No; the Constitution provides for that. The Constitution distinguishes between time of peace and time of war in respect to maintenance of troops. The prohibition is limited. Let me read it once more:

No State shall, without the consent of Congress, lay any duty of tonnage, keep troops or ships of war in time of peace, enter into any agreement or compact with another State, or with a foreign power, or engage in war, unless actually invaded, or in such imminent danger as will not admit of delay.

Altogether, it is perfectly clear, it seems to me, that there is nothing in this prohibition on the keeping of troops which would prevent a State in imminent danger of invasion, such as will not admit of delay, from calling out its militia to repel invasion, or in time of war maintaining troops or ships of war.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I yield.

Mr. KING. I confess that I am not in harmony with the views expounded by the able Senator from Vermont. The Senator will recall that during the time when the Constitution was under consideration by the various States there were apprehensions that too much power had been conferred upon the Federal Government and too little power had been reserved to the States; and many of those who participated in the Constitutional Convention, and many who did not, but who belonged to various State governments, were very much concerned about the power of the Federal Government to maintain an army, and all that sort of thing. They wanted the States to have the right to maintain their own militia.

It seems to me that the second amendment was a challenge in a way, or a modification in a way, of some of the provisions to which the Senator has called attention. The amendments to the Constitution, like a repealing statute, by implication if not directly, would supersede the Constitution if there were a conflict.

The second amendment reads:

A well-regulated militia, being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear arms, shall not be infringed.

Obviously, that would seem to connote that the States have the right to determine the form of the militia, the size of the militia, and the purposes for which the militia may be utilized. If I correctly understand the construction which the Senator places upon the second amendment, it would seem to subordinate the amendment to some of the provisions of the Constitution per se. I regard it as an amendment to the Constitution, a limitation upon some of the powers granted in the Constitution. All the amendments are supplemental to and in addition to the Constitution, and in some respects modify the Constitution.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I very much appreciate this discussion by the learned Senator from Utah, whose views regarding the Constitution and its history in the formation of the Government are of such great value.

My own view is to some degree affected by Washington's Barrack Book and his interpretation of the word "militia." From my study of this matter I am persuaded that Washington contemplated universal training, and that the militia of which he speaks, and the words "well regulated" which are found in the Constitution, mean exactly the same thing in the Constitution and in his Barrack Book; namely, a citizenry which is competent by training always to defend its rights and its Government and maintain peace and order. The amendment is, of course, a modification of the Constitution; but let me ask, in what respect does it appear to be in conflict with the Constitution, so that it could not stand and leave the Constitution in effect, too? I do not find a conflict. I find that it is an amendment of reassurance to the several States that the prohibition against the maintenance of troops in time of peace within a State shall not exclude the keeping of arms or the training of citizens and having them well regulated. I think the whole makes a well-unified provision for national and local defense, and corroborates the views I have held for some time, that the original plan of the Republic contemplated a citizenry that was well trained and competent at all times to bear arms in combat, if necessary, for the preservation of the principles upon which the Government was founded.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield to me?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I am glad to yield to my colleague.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Vermont, in my opinion, if I correctly understand his position, would make wholly unnecessary the amendment to which attention has been called, because, if I understand his interpretation, the Constitution gave to the Federal Government the right to determine the form of the militia, the character of the militia, and the purpose for which it was used. That would, of course, relate to regulation, to its activities, and, if that be true, then the amendment would be surplusage, and there would be no necessity of adopting it, if, under the Constitution, the power existed to maintain the militia and determine its activities. It seems to me it was a manifestation of a jealous regard for the rights of the States as against the aggressions of the Federal Government. I concede that the Federalists in those days—and we have some of them now—placed an interpretation upon the Constitution which I think is at variance with what I conceive to be its true interpretation, the one which connotes greater liberty to the individual and greater liberty to the sovereign States. It seems to me that those who drafted this amendment of the Constitution were all the time trying to limit the Federal Government and to restrain the power which some conceived to have been granted to it.

The Senator will recall that Patrick Henry and others in Virginia refused to vote for the ratification of the Constitution because they said it conferred too much power; and so they set themselves to the task of limiting the power of the Federal Government. The first 10 amendments were limitations upon the powers which were in the Federal Government or asserted by or granted to the Federal Government. As I construe it—and yet I defer to the learning of my dear friend from Vermont, whose understanding of constitutional government I gladly concede—I interpret it to mean a limitation upon the power of the Federal Government and to say that the States shall have the right to regulate the militia and maintain the militia, and that they cannot regulate it unless they have it. This gives them the power to have a militia and regulate it and maintain it as they may see fit, of course, not in contravention of any delegated powers that would be opposed to the maintenance of the Federal Government.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield further?

The PRESIDING OFFICER [Mr. MINTON in the chair]. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AUSTIN. I will detain the Senate but a moment further.

The difference between the organized and the unorganized militia has been recognized many times, and in the National Defense Act of 1916 and as it has been amended from time to time since then, the Senator will find that difference recognized. I do not have it before me, so I cannot turn to the chapter and paragraph, but I well remember the provisions therein relating to the unorganized militia of the country and the definition of members of the unorganized militia. There are provisions that deal with the organized militia, which resulted in the National Guard, and, ultimately, the National Guard of the United States. There is a difference. Whether it is theoretically improper or wrong, it is a difference that exists and is a reality in our life.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Utah some thoughts along this line. I think there is some confusion as to the distinction between troops and militia. The language of the original section of the Constitution reads:

No State shall, without the consent of Congress, lay any duty of tonnage, keep troops—

That, to my mind, carries the connotation of a regular armed force, a regular military force. I do not think that language contemplates the militia or the organized militia, nor do I think it includes the unorganized militia. Of course, the unorganized militia is a term of rather broad application. It means every man, whether he is in the Army or the National Guard, or anywhere else, subject to military duty, the mass of the citizenship. While I have not read the cases, I desire to refer to some Supreme Court decisions, and to read from the syllabus.

The States cannot, without the consent of Congress, levy war, or make peace, or enter into a compact with any other State. The organization and maintenance of an active State militia is not a keeping of troops in time of peace within the prohibition of this clause.

I commend this language to the Senator from Vermont.

The organization and maintenance of an active State militia is not a keeping of troops in time of peace within the prohibition of this clause. This clause contemplates the use of the State's military power to put down an armed insurrection too strong to be controlled by civil authority, and the State concerned must determine what degree of force the crisis demands.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. CONNALLY. I will yield in a moment. So I think the use of the word "troops" in the original Constitution contemplated something like a regular armed force, a standing army, as it were, and did not contemplate the organization by the State of the militia or the National Guard for the enforcement of civil responsibilities.

I now yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AUSTIN. I am interested to learn what the facts were in that case.

Mr. CONNALLY. There are several cases. I said that I had not read them in detail.

Mr. AUSTIN. I mean the facts with respect to the character of the danger involved.

Mr. CONNALLY. One of these cases arose in the neighborhood of the Senator from Vermont. It is the case of New Hampshire v. Louisiana (108 U. S. 76). Then there are the cases of Dunne v. People (94 Illinois 120); Luther v. Borden (7 Howard 45).

State v. Wagener (77 Northwestern 424), which was a State court decision, I assume.

Presser v. Illinois (116 U. S. 252) and Alabama Great South. Railroad Co. v. United States (49 C. C. 522).

I repeat I have not read all these decisions, but they are all listed under the syllabus which I read.

I will admit that, in my mind, the subject has been somewhat hazy as to just where the line of demarkation properly rests, but it seems to me quite clear that when the word "troops" is used, it does not mean the National Guard or the militia, but an army.

Mr. AUSTIN. I think, perhaps, the Senator may be correct; I do not know; I have never seen the cases to which he refers.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me state furthermore to the Senator from Utah that I do not go quite so far as does the Senator from Utah as to the second amendment. As will be remembered, most of the first 10 amendments were personal in their character; they were the Bill of Rights; they are guaranties to citizens—to the people:

A well-regulated militia, being necessary to the security of a free state, the right of the people—to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed.

Nothing is said about a State, but the right of individual citizens—

I think that was intended more as a personal guaranty, so that every citizen if he wanted to keep his old rifle hanging over the door would have the right to do so. But I do not believe the original clause of the Constitution inhibited the organization of State militia and State troops. I believe they could be organized without this bill if the States so desired; and I will say to the Senator, if he will permit me another word, I do not like the language of this bill which turns it all over to the Secretary of War and allows him to say.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield, if I have the floor.

Mr. AUSTIN. If the amendment should be agreed to which I propose to offer, it would not be turned over to the Secretary of War beyond the point required by the Constitution relating to discipline. I wish to add the words "for discipline in training." Those are the words which are contained in the provision relating to the organization of the militia in article I, section 8, paragraph 16, of the Constitution.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator will accept that amendment. I think it should be accepted.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will the Senator from Utah accept those words?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I should like to reach the point where I could accept those words, but the Senate has been somewhat disorderly, if we are proceeding under the rules which generally govern during the discussion of the Unanimous Consent Calendar. This is the parliamentary situation as I understand it: The calendar was called and the Senator from West Virginia objected to the consideration of Calendar No. 2306, Senate bill 4175. If the Senator from West Virginia will now withdraw his objection, I should like to move, Mr. President, that there be substituted House bill 10495, which is on the calendar, No. 2329, for Senate bill 2306, which is Calendar No. 2306. The House bill is found on the following page, next to the last item on page 12 of the calendar.

Mr. ADAMS. May I ask whether there is any difference between the two? That is, there is an amendment to each. Are they identical?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. They are not absolutely identical; and we desire to offer an amendment to the House bill. I should like to accept the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, and then either the House will accept our amendment or the matter will go to conference, and we can adjust what differences there are.

Mr. ADAMS. What the Senator wants to do then is to take up the House bill?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. That is true; to consider the House bill instead of the Senate bill, the former having already passed the House.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Does the House bill carry out the spirit, if not the letter, of the second amendment to the Constitution of the United States?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I think there is no doubt about that. We have all listened to this discussion. The Government in regard to its National Guard has been operating since 1916, and is operating today, under the existing law, which was passed in 1916; and all the constitutional points which have been discussed were faced in 1916 and discussed in 1916 much as they have been discussed today.

Section 61 of the act reads:

No State shall maintain troops in time of peace—

Notice the words "in time of peace"—

other than as authorized in accordance with the organization prescribed under this act: Provided,——

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, is the Senator reading from the House bill?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. No; I am reading from the National Defense Act of 1916, the law which is to be amended.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point for just a moment?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Along the lines I suggested a moment ago, I desire to remind the Senator that long before the enactment of the National Guard bill in 1916 practically all the States maintained their own State guards without any complaint from Congress or anybody else, which would bear out the idea that this language in the Constitution was never intended to prohibit the States from maintaining their regular militia for training, and so forth.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I think the law of 1916 was perfectly constitutional; that it worked out the various relationships between the armed forces of the States and the Nation; and, if I may be permitted to read the law as far as I shall go, it will be found that each one of these points is contained in the law:

Provided, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed as limiting the rights of the States and Territories in the use of the National Guard within their respective borders in time of peace: Provided further, That nothing contained in this act shall prevent the organization and maintenance of State police or constabulary.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. GIBSON. Has the committee considered the status of the National Guard when called into the Federal service and mustered into and becoming a part of the Army of the United States? Do they not then cease to be National Guard?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont has hit upon the very reason which has made necessary this home-guard bill, if we may call it that. It is the wrong term for it now, because it is merely an extension of the National Guard.

We are in time of peace. The Federal Government is calling out the National Guard of many of the States for a year's service. They do not become regular Federal troops in the sense that they become such in time of war.

For example, in time of war in 1917, when a National Guard regiment was called into the national service there was, of course, created in the State a National Guard vacancy. There were always in the regiment officers who did not go with their units to the front, around which nucleus the National Guard could be expanded; and under those circumstances the States were never left without any troop protection at all.

Since 1916 the scheme of the National Guard has been to be coordinate units with the Regular Army. Various units have been called out; and it is the larger unit training that was contemplated in the passage of the National Guard Act. Therefore, the States are almost entirely stripped of their complete allotments if they go.

It, of course, is understood that no unit is accepted entirely, because when it goes into the Federal service there are examinations and adjustments and other arrangements; but the law of the land controls the number of persons who may be in the National Guard in each of the States. They are limited to a certain number for each congressional district. As a result, it is impossible to expand the National Guard around this nucleus without new legislation. It is because of the various conditions I have mentioned that the States whose units have been called have come to the Federal Government and asked for an extension of the act so that they will not be left without military force.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, I still wish to get clear in my mind, if I can, this matter: When the National Guard goes into the Federal service at the present time, it does not become a part of the Army of the United States; does it?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. It becomes a part of the Army of the United States with this qualification: It does not lose its identity as the National Guard of the State and of the United States. The law governing the size of the National Guard still prevails.

Mr. GIBSON. Let me say to the Senator that I remember reading a decision of the Vermont Supreme Court when the militia of Vermont was called into the Spanish-American War. I think Governor Smith was then Governor of Vermont. He formed a new National Guard regiment. Somebody questioned his right to do it; and our supreme court at that time held that he had the right, because when the men were called into the service they ceased to be National Guard or State militia, but when they came back and went out of the Federal service they then became National Guard, and those who had taken their places were out.

It seems to me that is exactly the situation we now face. I certainly want to have some kind of a home guard, but I wonder if it is not the fact that when the National Guard is called into the Federal service a vacancy is created which, in accordance with the State law, the Governor may fill.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. At the time of the Spanish-American War the National Defense Act of 1916 was not on the statute books. The National Guard of the United States was not contemplated and was not organized—that is, the federalization of the National Guard of the various States. As a result of the passage of the National Defense Act of 1916, there has been a changed condition in the National Guard; and it is in order to fit these peacetime training requirements into the National Defense Act of 1916 that the enactment of this bill is necessary.

In the case of the Spanish-American War we were operating in wartime. The National Guard at present is being called into training in peacetime; and the attorneys in the War Department claim that the enactment of this bill is necessary in order to enable the States to have a military force.

Mr. GIBSON. Is it claimed that when the National Guard is federalized, when its members take the oath and are mustered into the Federal service, it is then still the National Guard of the States?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. It becomes the National Guard of the United States, and it maintains its units.

Mr. GIBSON. It is different than the National Guard of the State?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. It may be different. The two may go hand in hand. For instance, a federalized unit may have in it certain persons who have not yet been federally recognized. Under the law there is provision for the National Guard of the United States and the National Guard of the States.

Mr. GIBSON. Does the Senator think that when the men are mustered into the Federal service they are still the National Guard of the States?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I am sure that under the National Guard Act that condition has not entirely changed; that the men will serve during peacetime, during their year of training, and then return to the States. If the Senator puts to me the question as to who may command those soldiers the better—the President of the United States or the Governor of the State—of ccurse, the President of the United States, as he has the men under training, would have de facto control, if not de jure control.

Mr. GIBSON. When they are mustered into the Federal service, the adjutant general of the State ceases to have anything to do with them, does he not?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. The adjutant general?

Mr. GIBSON. Yes; once the National Guard is mustered into the Federal service, the adjutant general of a State has no more control over the troops?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I think that would be the case during the year's training, and then, when they came back, they would immediately return to their old State jurisdiction.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I should like to be very certain of the Senator's ground as to the legal status of this matter, as to what the status of the National Guard, when called out, will be when they return home.

I was a member of the National Guard in 1917 when we were drafted into the Federal service. When we returned we found that during our absence some States, New York, Missouri, and Pennsylvania, I believe, to mention only three of them, had set up home guards. They claimed to be the National Guard when we returned after serving 2 years abroad.

I should like to be very certain as to the effect of the bill which the Senator is now proposing, because I heard several very violent disputes about that matter when I returned from my Army service. As a matter of fact, I was myself elected president of the National Guard Association of the United States in a dispute as to whether the so-called home guards from such States as New York, Pennsylvania, and Missouri, were to control the National Guard Association, or whether the men who had actually gone overseas and done the fighting were to control it. As I have said, I was myself elected president of the National Guard Association of the United States on that issue. So I should like to be very certain as to the information of the Senator in this matter.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. There are some differences, because by this amendment the men who may come into the National Guard under the home-guard arrangement will have a different status, and they will serve in a way different from that of the ordinary guard.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Of course, they are not ordinary guardsmen. In other words, they are not subject, as the National Guard is, to being ordered or drafted into the Federal service.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. That is true, they are not subject to duty outside of the State. They are an entity quite different from the ordinary National Guard unit which has gone into training.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am afraid that the Senator from Utah will find, if unfortunately we should get into war, as it seems today we are about to do, that the National Guard, the men who have enlisted to serve in the United States Army, are ordered overseas, when they return home will find that the so-called home-guard men are trying to usurp the title of National Guard men, and to occupy the place the National Guard should occupy in the national-defense scheme of the United States.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I am in entire agreement with the Senator from Missouri. That did happen, and it was in time of war, when the National Guard units were taken into the Federal service and became members of the Army of the United States, which included all of the various units.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. We were all taken into one family by draft on August 4, 1917, the whole National Guard of the United States—generals, colonels, majors, captains, sergeants, corporals, privates—we were all taken in at the same time.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I remember that very well; but still they were not all 100-percent accepted, because there was always an officer here or a man there who did not qualify. Those units were expanded and brought up to wartime strength, and during the entire war there were always enough men who did not go to keep the organizations together. For instance, in one State a squadron of cavalry, for example, a State unit, was turned into artillery, and the cavalry officers were not qualified for the new State unit, and no cavalry was called at that particular time. So that the Governor did have a nucleus, and he built around that nucleus; and when the rivalry came, I think it came not from the ordinary home guard, but it came from the National Guard man who was left at home, who found himself in command of what might be termed the "home guard," and then when regular units came back he was rather jealous; and it took time to adjust those matters.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I should like to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWELLENBACH in the chair). The Senator will state it.

Mr. DANAHER. I should like to know whether there is some way reasonably and courteously by which a noncombatant here may suggest that this bill go back to the foot of the list, so that we may finish the calendar. I should like to have the Senate get through the calendar and then come back to this bill, if the Senate desires to proceed with it. I do not want to act discourteously to the Senator from Utah, but I certainly should like to conclude the calendar.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, if the two motions I have made are agreed to, we will be at the foot of the calendar, so far as the bill is concerned.

I inquire if the Senator from West Virginia has withdrawn his objection. I presume we are operating under the rules which govern the procedure during the unanimous-consent call of the calendar.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, before withdrawing my objection, I should like to ask the Senator a question. Does the bill which he wants passed contain the amendment which I desire relative to furnishing protection in labor disputes against vigilantes? I think there is a difference between the two bills.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. There is a difference between the two bills, but the Senator will recall that these units will be controlled by the rules governing the National Guard. There is no more fear about them being used as vigilantes than of the present National Guard being so used. That is what persons who were afraid of the home-guard idea wanted, namely, that the units should be controlled by the laws which control the National Guard.

Mr. HOLT. Then I have no objection to the Senator continuing with the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am not a member of the committee, and I have not seen the House bill and am not familiar with its terms. If I can be assured that it does not impinge upon or in any way modify or attempt to modify the provisions of the second amendment to the Constitution of the United States I shall be inclined to vote for the bill, but if it does interfere with the right of a State to regulate its own militia for the security of a free State and the rights of the people, and so forth, I shall feel constrained to vote against it. I shall not object to consideration, but before I vote for it I want to be assured that it does not interfere in any way with the second amendment to the Constitution. In view of the fact that the gravitational forces in this Republic are so powerful today, sweeping aside too often the rights of individuals and States, I look with suspicion upon some of the measures which have been brought before us, which tend, as I interpret them, to consolidate all State governments with the National Government and to interfere with the rights of the States.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, let me give the Senator assurance that the bill answers exactly the question propounded by him. Let me read:

Provided further, That such forces shall not be called, ordered, or in any manner drafted as such into the military service of the United States.

The bill provides more for a State militia than anything we have ever previously devised. We have never had anything so completely narrowed down and under the control of the legislatures of the several States as what this bill provides for, if the amendment I desire to offer shall be agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I may say further, in answer to my colleague, that when the President of the United States calls the organized militia out of a State and has it in training several miles from the State, probably the provision of the Constitution has been pretty well overcome—that is, he has control—and if we do not have provision whereby a State may reorganize its own militia, we are depriving the State of its military protection.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for me to propound a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. As I understand, the parliamentary situation at the present time, Senate bill 4175, calendar number 2306, has been called, and the Senator from Utah has asked unanimous consent to substitute for it a House bill to the same tenor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's statement is correct.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does that request require unanimous consent?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah has asked unanimous consent.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I ask, does that request require unanimous consent? I am addressing a parliamentary inquiry to the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The parliamentarian informs the present occupant of the chair that it would require unanimous consent, because of the fact that the House bill has not yet been reached on the calendar. The House bill is on the calendar as No. 2329.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Then I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard, and the clerk will call the next bill on the calendar.

SURPLUS WAR DEPARTMENT REAL PROPERTY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4240) to authorize the sale under the provisions of the act of March 12, 1926, of surplus War Department real property, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to dispose of by transfer, sale, or otherwise, under the provisions of the act of March 12, 1926 (44 Stat. 203), the several tracts or parcels of real property hereinafter designated, or any portion thereof, upon determination by him that said tracts or parcels are no longer needed for military purposes, and to execute and deliver in the name of the United States and in its behalf any and all contracts, conveyances, or other instruments necessary to effectuate such sale and conveyance: Provided, That the net proceeds from the sale of said properties shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of miscellaneous receipts.

Names of reservations with approximate amount of land involved in each instance:

Luverne National Guard Target Range, Ala., 4.96 acres.
Dunn National Guard Target Range, N. C., 7.7 acres.
Alpena National Guard Target Range, Mich., 24.44 acres.
East Jordan National Guard Target Range, Mich., 4.37 acres.
Saginaw National Guard Target Range, Mich., 26.75 acres.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I should like to have an explanation of this bill.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, this is another bill which comes from the War Department. It merely provides for the transference of certain property, and provides where the credit incident to the transfer of that property shall go.

When real property acquired for military purposes becomes useless for such purposes the Secretary of War, under the act of March 12, 1926, must report such facts to Congress in order that authorization for its disposition in accordance with that act may be granted.

Recently the War Department reported certain real property to be no longer required for military purposes, and the property is listed in the act. The Department has requested that legislation be enacted to authorize the Secretary of War to dispose of this property by transfer, sale, or otherwise, and the net proceeds from the sales to be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of miscellaneous receipts. That is all the bill provides, and it is in complete conformity with long practice of the Government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION AND REHABILITATION IN THE VIRGIN ISLANDS

The bill (S. 4218) to extend to the Virgin Islands the provisions of certain laws relating to vocational education and civilian rehabilitation was announced as next in order.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, is any Senator prepared to make an explanation of that measure?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the bill was prepared by the Department of the Interior. Its purpose is to extend to the people of the Virgin Islands the same provisions regarding vocational help which the Federal Government gives to Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and to our territorial possessions. That is the only purpose of the measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs with amendments.

The first committee amendment was in section 1, page 2, line 5, after "June 30," to strike out "1941" and to insert "1942", so as to make the section read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Virgin Islands shall be entitled to share in the benefits of the act entitled "An act to provide for the promotion of vocational education; to provide for cooperation with the States in the promotion of such education in agriculture and the trades and industries; to provide for cooperation with the States in the preparation of teachers of vocational subjects; and to appropriate money and regulate its expenditure," approved February 23, 1917 (39 Stat. 929), and any act amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto, upon the same terms and conditions as any of the several States. There is authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1942, and annually thereafter, the sum of $40,000 to be available for allotment under such act to the Virgin Islands.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next committee amendment was, in section 2, page 2, to strike out lines 8 to 17, both inclusive, as follows:

SEC. 2. Any sums appropriated pursuant to the authorization contained in section 1 shall be allocated to the following purposes in the proportions specified by the Office of Education with the approval of the Federal Security Administrator:

1. Salaries and necessary travel expenses of teachers of the following subjects: Agricultural, home economics, trade and industrial, distributive occupational; and

2. Maintenance of teacher training, including supervision, in the subjects enumerated in this section.

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 2. Any sums appropriated pursuant to the authority contained in section 1 shall be allocated to the following purposes in the proportions specified by the Commissioner of Education with the approval of the Federal Security Administrator:

(1) For the salaries and necessary travel expenses of teachers, supervisors, and directors of agricultural subjects.

(2) For the salaries and necessary travel expenses of teachers, supervisors, and directors of home-economics subjects.

(3) For the salaries and necessary travel expenses of teachers, supervisors, and directors of trade and industrial subjects.

(4) For the salaries and necessary travel expenses of teachers, supervisors, and directors of, and maintenance of teacher training in, distributive occupational subjects.

(5) For preparing teachers, supervisors, and directors of agricultural, trade and industrial, and home-economics subjects.

The Government of the Virgin Islands shall be required to match by insular or local funds, or both, 50 percent of the moneys appropriated pursuant to this act, until June 30, 1945; 60 percent for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1946; 70 percent for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947; 80 percent for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948; 90 percent for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949; annually thereafter 100 percent of moneys so appropriated.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. Any sums appropriated pursuant to the authority contained in section 1 shall be allocated to the following purposes in the proportions specified by the Commissioner of Education with the approval of the Federal Security Administrator:

(1) For the salaries and necessary travel expenses of teachers, supervisors, and directors of agricultural subjects.

(2) For the salaries and necessary travel expenses of teachers, supervisors, and directors of home-economics subjects.

(3) For the salaries and necessary travel expenses of teachers, supervisors, and directors of trade and industrial subjects.

(4) For the salaries and necessary travel expenses of teachers, supervisors, and directors of, and maintenance of teacher training in, distributive occupational subjects.

(5) For preparing teachers, supervisors, and directors of agricultural, trade and industrial, and home-economics subjects.

The Government of the Virgin Islands shall be required to match by insular or local funds, or both, 50 percent of the moneys appropriated pursuant to this act, until June 30, 1945; 60 percent for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1946; 70 percent for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947; 80 percent for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948; 90 percent for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949; annually thereafter 100 percent of moneys so appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 3, line 2, after the word "States", to strike out: "There is authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $10,000 annually for a period of 5 years commencing July 1, 1940, to be available for allotment under such act to the Virgin Islands regardless of the amount of local funds available for matching purposes."

And to insert in lieu thereof the following: "There is authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $10,000 annually commencing July 1, 1941, to be available for allotment under such act to the Virgin Islands." So as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. The Virgin Islands shall be entitled to share in the benefits of the act entitled "An act to provide for the promotion of vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in industry or otherwise and their return to civil employment," approved June 2, 1920 (41 Stat. 735), and any act amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto, upon the same terms and conditions as any of the several States. There is authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $10,000 annually commencing July 1, 1941, to be available for allotment under such act to the Virgin Islands.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RALPH W. DAGGETT

The bill (H. R. 8333) for the relief of Ralph W. Daggett, formerly lieutenant, Quartermaster Corps, United States Army, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RETIREMENT OF DISABLED NURSES OF THE ARMY AND NAVY

The bill (H. R. 8613) to amend the act to provide for the retirement of disabled nurses of the Army and the Navy, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (H. R. 10194) for the relief of the late John L. Summers, former disbursing clerk, Treasury Department, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, this bill and another one following it call for very large sums in the aggregate—between fifty thousand and sixty thousand dollars, for the relief of a former disbursing clerk, and a disbursing clerk now in the Treasury Department. I was wondering if there was any reason for such large appropriations.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, I think the amounts suggested by the Senator from Utah are a little high. The first bill calls for $12,000, and the second bill, I believe, calls for $7,000. Both bills are recommended by the Treasury Department for the purpose of adjusting the accounts of disbursing officers. In the first place, John L. Summers was disbursing clerk in charge of disbursements under N. R. A. He disbursed something over $344,000,000, and now in adjusting all those accounts it is found that through various technicalities there are amounts totaling $12,000 in connection with which there was some technical error in the payment, and the matter cannot be cleared through the Accounting Office; it cannot be taken care of without clearing it up in the way provided in the bill. The second bill is much the same.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is this bill in the interest of bonding companies who might have been on Mr. Summers' bond, or in the interest of Mr. Summers' own estate?

Mr. BURKE. That matter was gone into very fully in the Claims Committee, particularly with reference to the point as to whether we were asked to pass a measure for the relief of a bonding company, and the officials assured us that that element was not involved in the case at all; that this was merely an adjustment, and any benefit would go to the estate of the deceased person.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am glad to hear that, because I feel when an official employs a bonding company and pays it a fee for going on his bond, and there is a loss, that the bonding company should pay it, and under no circumstances should we give relief to the bonding company, because at the time the bond was executed it took the risk. I am very happy to know that bonding companies are not involved in this matter.

Mr. BURKE. I think the Senator is entirely correct in his statement. The Claims Committee assigned these claims to the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], who is not present in the Senate Chamber at the moment. He made a very thorough study of the cases. When he presented the matter to the Government officials to back him up, the first question asked was, "What about the bonding companies? Are we relieving them?" It was shown that the bonding companies were not involved.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator is in error in attributing error to me. I stated that the amounts aggregated more than $50,000 in the bill we are speaking of and in the bill which follows it. I find that in House bill 10354 there is provision for $34,000, $4,000, $44,000, and $77,000.

Mr. BURKE. I was looking first at House bill 10194, which is the bill we are now speaking of, which involves $12,033.

Mr. KING. Yes. I called attention to both bills because I was wondering why these large sums were permitted to be charged against the Federal Government and if there was any reason for it. If the Senator will look at House bill 10354——

Mr. BURKE. Yes; I see in that bill the amounts are larger. I do not have the totals in mind, but I know the matter was gone into very thoroughly by the Claims Committee. The present occupant of the chair [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH], who is a member of that committee and has since assumed judicial status, I am sure examined the measures with very great care, along with the others members of the committee, and we were satisfied from the representations made that there was no injustice being done to the taxpayers of the country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill H. R. 10194 was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GUY F. ALLEN

The bill (H. R. 10354) for the relief of Guy F. Allen, chief disbursing officer, Treasury Department, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS IN VETERANS' LAWS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8930) to amend section 202 (3), World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended, to provide more adequate and uniform administrative provisions in veterans' laws, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with amendments.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of that measure.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the bill deals with section 202 of the World War Veterans' Act, and contains several amendments which have been approved by the Veterans' Administration.

In the first place, section 1 of the bill simply allows the Administrator to waive overpayments made under the act to a beneficiary when such overpayments have been made without any fault on the part of the beneficiary, and when it would be inequitable, and unjust, and decidedly against good conscience, to insist upon a refund of such overpayments. For the most part, the Administrator has that authority any way, but in certain instances he cannot waive the overpayments.

Section 2 of the bill relates to burial allowance. It allows $100, as in the present law. It also allows the filing of the claim for the burial allowance within 2 years. Under the present law the claim must be filed within 1 year. It also allows the filing of a claim for the burial allowance of the veteran back to the date of the passage of the original act, giving that benefit, provided the claim is filed within 2 years. It also simplifies one other provision. It is provided in the present law that the burial allowance plus such allowances as have been made by any State, county, or other political subdivision, lodge, union, fraternal organization, society or beneficial organization, insurance company, Workmen's Compensation Commission, State industrial accident board, or employer, and so forth, may not exceed the actual cost of the burial and funeral.

That is modified in this measure so as to eliminate contributions made by insurance companies and unions, and confines it to contributions made by the State, or the county, or a political subdivision, or some agency of the State, such as the Workmen's Compensation Commission.

The next section of the bill provides for uniform apportionment of the veterans' benefits; that is to say, when a veteran who is receiving benefit payments is living apart from his wife or children, or in the case of the benefit going to the widow, if she is living apart from the children, the bill gives to the Veterans' Administration authority to apportion the payments among all who are equitably entitled to them.

That is the law with respect to payments made to World War veterans, but by the act of March 3, 1899, the Veterans' Administrator who succeeded the old Commissioner of Pensions, as will be recalled, is directed to divide in equal portions the award going to the husband who is living separate from his wife, or wife and children, or the widow living separate from the children, as the case may be. This simply makes a uniform practice in conformity with the present veterans' regulations and laws.

The next provision of the bill relates to the hospitalization of veterans who live abroad. Under the present law the Administrator cannot provide for hospitalization of any veteran who happens to be in any foreign country. The measure amends the law so as to permit the Administrator to provide for medical care and treatment of disabilities due to war service in the armed forces of the United States, suffered by a veteran who is a citizen of the United States, and who is temporarily sojourning or residing abroad. In other words, there must be a service-connected disability in a case of that kind.

The next section provides for the exemption of veterans' benefits from set-offs under certain claims. That is a very just provision, and is recommended by General Hines, the Administrator. It does not allow a set-off as against the benefit or award due the veteran unless the amount which is desired to be set off has some specific connection with the type of the award which is being administered.

The next section is important. It increases the compensation for the complete loss of one foot or one arm from $25 to $35 a month. Already the Congress has increased the statutory award of $25 in the case of the anatomical loss of a foot, arm, or hand. The bill increases the award from $25 to $35 a month in the case of the complete, permanent loss of the use of an arm or foot. That is the one important provision in the bill which may cost the Treasury some money, but not very much.

The total cost of the bill is estimated at not to exceed $300,000 a year.

There are other provisions in the bill which give certain additional benefits to veterans who are suffering from paralysis, paresis, or blindness, and who are bedridden, and gives certain additional benefits to their children or their widows.

Section 8 of the bill simply states the effective date.

Section 9 of the bill relates to the payment of service-connected benefits to the dependents of veterans who have forfeited their right thereto. The veteran may have been guilty of fraud, and may have forfeited his right to receive compensation. Nevertheless, his wife and children may be given the benefit, although the veteran himself is barred by reason of fraud. Of course, the beneficiaries themselves must not have participated in the fraud.

There is one other provision in the bill by way of amendment which is made necessary because of the passage of House bill 7731 at the present session of Congress. It is necessary to insert an amendment regarding a provision in the bill in order to prevent it from working a repeal.

I believe that disposes of all the material features of the bill. I may say that all of it, with the possible exception of section 5 or section 6—I do not recall which—has the express approval of the Administrator.

There is one provision of the bill to which I should call attention, which appears in it by reason of an amendment made by the committee. The amendment makes final the findings and adjudications of the Veterans' Administrator, except with reference to war-risk or United States life-insurance contracts, and matters pertaining thereto, as to which the veteran has a right of action in the courts; and except further a provision in the recent excess-profits tax act, which has not yet been approved by the President, but which is before the President, providing for a special form of insurance for the draftees or those called into service under recent legislation enacted in behalf of the national defense. In those cases also the findings of the Veterans' Administrator on the main question of the validity of the policy, and so forth, is reserved to the beneficiary of the policy, who may go into the courts notwithstanding an adverse finding of the Veterans' Administration. However, with respect to all grants, pensions, gratuities, and all other matters administered by the Veterans' Administration, the finding of the Administrator is made final.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the Chair ask a question. Have any material rights of veterans been taken into court with respect to anything except insurance policies?

Mr. GEORGE. No; the bill only confirms what has been the accepted belief and conviction, that with respect to any pension, gratuity, compensation, or anything in the nature of a gratuity or pension, there is no right of action in the courts, but the courts have held that under the War Risk Insurance Act, and under the United States insurance, which has been substituted for it, or made available to veterans holding war-risk policies, beneficiaries under such policies have the right to go into court. It is not so much a limitation as a restatement of what is believed to be the law upon the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the first committee amendment.

The first amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in section 2, on page 2, line 12, after the word "war" the first time it occurs, to strike out "or"; in the same line, after the words "pension or", to strike out "compensation" and insert "compensation, a veteran discharged from the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard for disability incurred in line of duty, or a veteran of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard in receipt of pension for service-connected disability"; and on page 4, line 21, after the word "Provided", to strike out "That the Administrator is authorized and directed to adjudicate any unpaid claim filed within 2 years after the enactment of this act where death occurred on or after March 20, 1933, and claim was not filed within the regulatory period, and to grant burial allowance under the laws and regulations in effect on the date of adjudication after the enactment of this act, if all other requirements are met" and insert "That where the death of a veteran occurred on or after March 20, 1933, and claim for burial allowance was not filed, or was filed after the expiration of the regulatory period, or was filed within the regulatory period and disallowed, the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is hereby authorized and directed to receive and adjudicate a claim filed within 2 years after the date of enactment of this act and to grant burial allowance under the provisions of laws and regulations governing such allowance as amended by this act", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. (a) That paragraphs II, III, and IV of Veterans Regulation No. 9 (a), as amended, be further amended to read as follows:

"II. Where an honorably discharged veteran of any war, a veteran of any war in receipt of pension or compensation, a veteran discharged from the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard for disability incurred in line of duty, or a veteran of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard in receipt of pension for service-connected disability dies after discharge, the Administrator, in his discretion and with due regard to the circumstances in each case, shall pay, for burial and funeral expenses and transportation of the body (including preparation of the body) to the place of burial, a sum not exceeding $100 to cover such items and to be paid to such person or persons as may be prescribed by the Administrator. The Administrator may, in his discretion, make contracts for burial and funeral services within the limits of the amount herein allowed without regard to the laws prescribing advertisement for proposals for supplies and services for the Veterans' Administration. No deduction shall be made from the burial allowance because of any contribution from any source toward the burial and funeral (including transportation) unless the amount of expenses incurred is covered by the amount actually paid for burial and funeral (including transportation) purposes by a State, county, or other political subdivision, workmen's compensation commission, State industrial accident board, employer, burial association, or Federal agency: Provided, That no claim shall be allowed for more than the difference between the entire amount of the expenses incurred and the amount paid by any or all of the foregoing agencies or organizations: Provided further, That nothing herein shall be construed to cause the denial of or a reduction in the amount of the burial allowance otherwise payable because of a cash contribution made by a burial association to any person other than the person rendering burial and funeral services: And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed so as to cause payment of the burial allowance or any part thereof in any case where specific provision is otherwise made for payment of expenses of funeral, transportation, and interment under any other act.

"III. Where death occurs in a Veterans' Administration facility within the continental limits of the United States, the Veterans' Administration will (a) assume the actual cost (not to exceed $100) of burial and funeral, and (b) transport the body to the place of burial within the continental limits of the United States or to the place of burial in Alaska if the veteran was a resident of Alaska and had been brought to the United States as beneficiary of the Veterans' Administration for hospital or domiciliary care. Where a veteran dies while hospitalized under authority of the Veterans' Administration in a Territory or possession of the United States the Veterans' Administration will (a) assume the actual cost (not to exceed $100) of burial and funeral, and (b) transport the body to the place of burial within the Territory or possession.

"IV. Claims for reimbursement must be filed within 2 years subsequent to the date of burial of the veteran. In the event the claimant's application is not complete at the time of original submission, the Veterans' Administration will notify the claimant of the evidence necessary to complete the application, and if such evidence is not received within 1 year from the date of the request therefor no allowance may be paid: Provided, That where the death of a veteran occurred on or after March 20, 1933, and claim for burial allowance was not filed, or was filed after the expiration of the regulatory period, or was filed within the regulatory period and disallowed, the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is hereby authorized and directed to receive and adjudicate a claim filed within 2 years after the date of enactment of this act and to grant burial allowance under the provisions of laws and regulations governing such allowance as amended by this act."

(b) That paragraph III of Veterans Regulation No. 6 (a), as amended, be further amended to read as follows:

"III. To persons unable to defray the cost thereof, transportation and other necessary expenses incidental thereto will be supplied to cover travel to a Veterans' Administration facility for domiciliary or hospital care; to cover return travel to the place from which the person proceeded to the facility, when he is regularly discharged upon completion of such care; and to cover travel involved in a transfer, deemed necessary, from one Veterans' Administration facility to another. All such travel will be subject to grant of prior authorization therefor. In the event of death of any such person within the continental limits of the United States prior to his discharge from such care, transportation expenses (including preparation of the body) for the return of the body to the place of burial within the continental limits of the United States, or to the place of burial in Alaska if the veteran was a resident of Alaska and had been brought to the United States as a beneficiary of the Veterans' Administration for hospital or domiciliary care, may be paid in the discretion of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, when deemed necessary and as an administrative necessity. In the event of death of any such person in a Territory or possession of the United States transportation expenses (including preparation of the body) for the return of the body to place of burial within the Territory or possession may be paid."

(c) This section shall be applied to any claim for burial benefits pending in the Veterans' Administration on the date of its enactment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, on page 8, line 17, after the words "inapplicable to", to strike out "liens existing against the particular insurance contract on the maturity of which the claim is based, to secure unpaid premiums or loans on such contract, or interest on such premiums or loans", and insert "indebtedness existing against the particular insurance contract upon the maturity of which the claim is based, whether such indebtedness be in the form of liens to secure unpaid premiums, or loans, or interest on such premiums or loans, or indebtedness arising from overpayments of dividends, refunds, loans, or other insurance benefits", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That section 3 of Public Law No. 262, Seventy-fourth Congress, approved August 12, 1935, is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following sentence: "From and after the date of approval of this amendatory act this section shall be construed to prohibit the collection by set-off or otherwise out of any benefits payable pursuant to any law administered by the Veterans' Administration and relating to veterans, their estates, or their dependents, of any claim of the United States or any agency thereof against (a) any person other than the indebted beneficiary or his estate; or (b) any beneficiary or his estate except amounts due the United States by such beneficiary or his estate by reason of overpayments or illegal payments made under such laws relating to veterans, to such beneficiary or his estate or to his dependents as such: Provided, however, That if the benefits be insurance payable by reason of yearly renewable term or of United States Government life (converted) insurance issued by the United States, the exemption herein provided shall be inapplicable to indebtedness existing against the particular insurance contract upon the maturity of which the claim is based, whether such indebtedness be in the form of liens to secure unpaid premiums, or loans, or interest on such premiums or loans, or indebtedness arising from overpayments of dividends, refunds, loans, or other insurance benefits: Provided further, That nothing in this amendatory act shall be construed to modify or repeal section 7 of Public Law No. 425, Seventy-fourth Congress, enacted January 27, 1936 (38 U. S. C. 687–b; 49 Stat. 1001)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7, on page 9, after line 24, to strike out:

SEC. 8. Public Law No. 196, Seventy-sixth Congress, July 19, 1939, is further amended by adding thereto a new section to be known as section 3, as follows:

"SEC. 3. Payments to veterans and their dependents under the provisions of this amendment shall be effective the date of application for benefits thereunder."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, after line 5, to insert:

SEC. 8. Except as provided in section 6 of Public Law No. 304, Seventy-fifth Congress, approved August 16, 1937 (U. S. C., title 38, sec. 472d), compensation authorized by section 7 of this act shall not be payable effective prior to the receipt of application therefor in the Veterans' Administration, and in no event shall compensation therein authorized be effective prior to the date of enactment of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 9, on page 11, at the beginning of line 4, to strike out "The" and insert "Forfeiture of benefits by a veteran under the", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 9. That when disability compensation or pension based upon service-connected disability has been forfeited by a veteran under section 504 of the World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended (43 Stat. 1312; U. S. C., title 38, sec. 555), or section 15 of Public Law No. 2, Seventy-third Congress (48 Stat. 11; U. S. C., title 38, sec. 715), compensation or pension payable except for the forfeiture, from and after the date of suspension of payments to the veteran, shall be paid to his wife, child or children, and/or dependent parents, such payments not to exceed the amount payable in case such veteran had died from such service-connected disability: Provided, That no compensation or pension shall be paid to any dependent who has participated in the fraud for which the forfeiture was imposed.

Forfeiture of benefits by a veteran under the provisions of section 504, World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended, or section 15 of Public Law No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, shall not be construed to prohibit reimbursement on account of expenses incurred in the burial of such veteran otherwise authorized by law, or to prohibit payments of death compensation benefits for service-connected death or under Public Law No. 484, Seventy-third Congress, as amended.

Benefits authorized by this section shall not be paid for any period prior to the date of this enactment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 14, to insert:

SEC. 10. Veterans Regulation No. 11 (U. S. C., title 38, ch. 12, appendix), promulgated under the act of March 20, 1933 (Public, No. 2, 73d Cong.), is hereby amended by adding a new paragraph thereto numbered "III," to read as follows:

"III. The provisions of Veterans Regulation No. 11 shall apply to all claims under any of the laws administered by the Veterans' Administration: Provided, That the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs may release information, statistics, or reports, to individuals or organizations when in his judgment such release would serve a useful purpose."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 2, to insert:

SEC. 11. Notwithstanding any other provisions of law, except as provided in section 19 of the World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended, and in section 817 of the National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940, the decisions of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs on any question of law or fact concerning a claim for benefits or payments under this or any other act administered by the Veterans' Administration shall be final and conclusive and no other official or any court of the United States shall have power or jurisdiction to review any such decisions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 12, to insert:

SEC. 12. Where any veteran suffers or has suffered an injury, or an aggravation of any existing injury, as the result of having submitted to an examination under authority of any of the laws granting monetary or other benefits to World War veterans, and not the result of his misconduct, and such injury or aggravation results in additional disability to or the death of such veteran, the veteran or his dependents shall be entitled to the same benefits as are provided for those who suffer an injury or an aggravation of any existing injury as a result of training, hospitalization, or medical or surgical treatment under the provisions of section 31 of Public Law No. 141, Seventy-third Congress, March 28, 1934. No benefits under this section shall be awarded unless application be made therefor within 2 years after such injury or aggravation was suffered, or such death occurred, or after the date of enactment of this act, whichever is the later date.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] and myself, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the end of the bill it is proposed to insert the following new section:

SEC. 13. Paragraph I (f) of part III of Veterans Regulation No. I (a) is amended to read as follows:

"(f) The amount of pension payable under the terms of part III shall be $40 monthly: Provided, That—."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. KING. Does the amendment which the Senator offers deal with the measure which the President vetoed some time ago because it added a cost of $6,000,000?

Mr. ELLENDER. It does.

Mr. KING. The Senator still persists, in the face of the veto?

Mr. ELLENDER. I am of the opinion that the President will sign the measure this time.

Mr. KING. Obviously he must have had good reasons for his veto.

Mr. ELLENDER. Perhaps so, but a different situation exists at this time. A world war is on and the cost of living is increasing.

Mr. President, the purpose of the amendment is to restore $40 pensions to totally and permanently disabled soldiers who served in the World War for 90 days or more. The amendment simply increases these pensions to what they were before the so-called Economy Act went into effect. I believe that soldiers who are totally and permanently disabled should receive at least $40 a month. All of us know that a man who is disabled and who cannot work and who has a family to support certainly cannot properly take care of it on $30 a month, which is the present amount of the pension.

It is impossible for him to provide sufficient nutrition, clothing, and housing for his family. It is a disgrace to our vaunted American civilization to continue this policy of paying the penurious pension of only $30 per month to those unemployable veterans.

Veterans suffering with permanent and total service-connected disabilities receive $100. Those in the Regular service, so-called peacetime veterans, receive $75 per month for permanent and total service-connected disabilities. Why Senators, W. P. A. workers receive a minimum of $55 a month from the Government to support their families. We are dealing with a class of men who served their country in good faith and who are now permanently disabled and unable to earn anything for their families. The Government is being asked to increase their pensions $10 a month.

My amendment, if adopted, would affect 60,000 World War veterans and about 200 Spanish-American War veterans. For the first year it would cost the Government approximately $7,696,000, and thereafter, of course, the cost would decrease, depending upon the number who die in the meantime. A very small amount is being asked of the Government for men who have served it and who are totally disabled and unable to take care of their loved ones. The Senate and the House have gone on record in the past in favor of this amendment, and I hope that the Senate will again vote for it.

I had occasion to talk to the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], who is in charge of the pending bill, with respect to this amendment He said he had no objection to it. As a matter of fact, I believe he himself introduced a bill asking that these unfortunates be paid at least $40 a month.

Mr. President, as I stated a few minutes ago, the amendment is also being sponsored by the junior Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD], who is unavoidably detained from the Senate. He has asked that I express his strong approval of the amendment.

I do hope that Senators will again vote favorably for this meritorious legislation.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, with regard to the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana I have only this to say:

During the last Congress I introduced a bill to increase the disability allowance from $30 to $40 a month in the case of permanently and totally disabled veterans with nonservice-connected disabilities. That bill was vetoed by the President. The veto came at the end of the session. It was what we know as a pocket veto. The bill contained one simple amendment, which the Senator from Louisiana has offered, with a somewhat liberalized definition of permanent and total disability.

My only fear about the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana is that the President might feel constrained to veto the bill, which contains very many helpful administrative as well as substantive amendments to existing laws, and is a bill the enactment of which, in the main at least, is greatly desired by the Veterans' Administration.

I originally introduced the bill to increase the permanent total disability from $30 to $40 per month. I thoroughly believe that is a just amendment, and ought to be made. At the same time, I have grave apprehension that the President might feel constrained again to veto the bill if this amendment should be put on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] on behalf of himself and the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. For the convenience of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], I send a copy to him.

I ask that the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to insert in the bill a new section, to read as follows:

SEC. 13. The Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is hereby authorized and directed to include, in the regulations governing proofs and evidence pertaining to service connection of disabilities, additional provisions requiring: That, in each case where a veteran is seeking service connection for any disability, consideration shall be given to the places, types, and circumstances of his service as shown by his service record, the official history of each organization in which he served, his medical records, and all medical and lay evidence; that, where the veteran is shown to have been engaged in combat with an enemy of the United States, or during service in some war, campaign, or expedition, to have been subjected to other arduous conditions of military or naval service, such disability as can reasonably be considered to have been due to or aggravated by the conditions of all of his active military or naval service, shall be determined to be directly due to or aggravated by such service in line of duty, under all laws administered by the Veterans' Administration, unless it shall have been clearly established by clear and unmistakable evidence that any such disability was not originated in or aggravated by his military or naval service; and that the reasons for granting or denying service connection in any case considered under this law shall be recorded in full in each such case.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if the amendment offered by him is not identical with a bill which passed the House on September 30?

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, it is precisely that. It is a bill which bore the legend H. R. 6450, and is entitled "A bill to provide for the issuance, by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, of regulations providing for more liberal policies in determining the service connection of disabilities, and for other purposes."

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to make a statement, this amendment is identically the same as a separate bill which passed the House of Representatives on the 30th day of last month. The bill is now before the Finance Committee of the Senate, and was brought up before the committee on the last day on which the committee was in session, when the sugar joint resolution was reported.

I can see very great merit in the proposal; but I am bound to say to the distinguished Senator from Connecticut that if it is attached to this bill under the circumstances, veto will certainly follow, because I have called upon the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs General Hines and he said he was not yet ready to be heard upon the bill, but was certainly very anxious to be heard upon it.

The bill was reported by the House committee without a favorable recommendation from the Veterans' Administration. I hope the Senator will allow the bill to take its regular course, because it is before the Finance Committee; and if, as now seems probable, we are not to recess except every third day until perhaps sometime in November, we certainly shall have an opportunity to consider the bill in the committee and to report it, if it is the sense of the committee that it should pass, and take it up in the Senate long before the present session adjourns.

I merely submit those facts to the Senator.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. DANAHER. Yes; gladly.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I think anybody in the Senate or anywhere else will agree that no one is more interested than I am in the welfare of veterans. I appeal to the Senator from Connecticut now, not only in my capacity as a Senator but in my capacity as a past national commander of the American Legion and a member of every veterans' organization there is, I think, not to complicate the passage of the bill now before the Senate by offering another proposition as an amendment to the bill. I am fearful that if the Senate were to adopt and the House were to agree to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut, the bill would be killed, and a veto would be brought about.

I am very much interested in this subject matter. I am a member of the Veterans' Subcommittee of the Finance Committee. I think the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] has done a magnificent service. He has had a subcommittee composed of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], and several other Senators, who have been devoted to the interests of the veterans. We have reported this bill feeling that it is as far as we can go at this time. I appeal to my friend from Connecticut—who, I know, wants to help the veterans—not to bring about the defeat of a measure which might be sound by offering as an amendment to it an entirely separate and different proposition.

So far as I am concerned, I intend to vote for the bill which the Senator from Connecticut has offered as an amendment. I dare say it can be reported out of the Finance Committee, although I do not know about that; but I do not think the Senator from Connecticut is doing the veterans of the country any service by offering it at this time as an amendment to this bill.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, let me read briefly from the report of the House Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation. Representative VOORHIS of California, reporting for the committee, says:

> There can be no doubt whatsoever that the records of veterans were kept much more carefully as to those who served only in this country than was so as to those who served overseas. Moreover, there can be no doubt but what much more careful examinations were ordinarily made prior to the discharge of those veterans who served only in this country than was the case as to those who served abroad. This fact is very definitely substantiated by the careful tabulation which was made as to World War veterans who were enlisted from the 81 counties in Mississippi, and who were examined at time of discharge. This study, which appears in the booklet of hearings before the House Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation concerning H. R. 7925, beginning on page 124, shows that as to the 30,867 white veterans who enlisted from the 81 counties in Mississippi, 2.93 percent of the 15,904 who served overseas were found at time of discharge to be suffering with a disability, whereas 11.26 percent of those 14,963 who served only in this country were found to have disabilities at time of discharge.
> This difference as to the percentage of overseas and home-service veterans found to be suffering with disabilities at time of discharge is even more astounding as to the colored veterans.

Mr. President, I cease reading merely to emphasize the point that it becomes perfectly obvious that those who served overseas, and whose records were lost or mutilated, those veterans whose buddies, who could have made affidavits as to their service and to their disabilities, have died, are placed in an unusual status, which regulations properly drawn would alleviate.

It seems to me proper to call attention to a case which happened within my own knowledge. The mother of a veteran brought suit on his contract of war-risk insurance only to find, when the records were sought, that the company clerk's field desk had been demolished by a direct hit, and the company clerk's records completely destroyed, so there was no record of the fact of the issuance of insurance to the deceased veteran. His mother lost her case, and did not recover anything whatever.

It seems to me a situation of that kind can be corrected with reference to existing records by giving a presumption to the veteran applicant. This particular amendment will still authorize the Veterans' Administration out of its experience to formulate proper regulations to cover this type of case.

I ask unanimous consent that there be incorporated in the RECORD as part of my remarks the House report with reference to House bill H. R. 8930, which is in fact the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the report (No. 2982), was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

> The Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6450) to establish certain rights for combat veterans of wars of the United States, having considered the same, recommend the enactment thereof with an amendment, to wit:
> Strike out all following the enacting clause and substitute the following:
> "That the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is hereby authorized and directed to include, in the regulations governing proofs and evidence pertaining to service connection of disabilities, additional provisions requiring: That, in each case where a veteran is seeking service connection for any disability, consideration shall be given to the places, types, and circumstances of his service as shown by his service record, the official history of each organization in which he served, his medical records, and all medical and lay evidence; that, where the veteran is shown to have been engaged in combat with an enemy of the United States, or during service in some war, campaign, or expedition, to have been subjected to other arduous conditions of military or naval service, such disability as can reasonably be considered to have been due to or aggravated by the conditions of all of his active military or naval service, shall be determined to be directly due to or aggravated by such service in line of duty, under all laws administered by the Veterans' Administration, unless it shall have been clearly established by clear and unmistakable evidence that any such disability was not originated in or aggravated by his military or naval service; and that the reasons for granting or denying service connection in any case considered under this law shall be recorded in full in each such case."
> Change the title of the bill to read as follows: "A bill to provide for the issuance, by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, of regulations providing for more liberal policies in determining the service connection of disabilities, and for other purposes."
> The general purpose of this bill is to place the combat veteran more nearly on a par with the home-service veteran insofar as the opportunity for establishing service connection of disabilities is concerned.
> It is the purpose of the bill as herewith reported to provide for more liberal policies in the evaluation of all the facts, factors, and circumstances as to a veteran's military or naval service in determining the service connection of any disability with which he may be suffering, and consequently in deciding upon his eligibilty to receive compensation or pension by reason of a service-connected disability. It is the further purpose of this bill to provide that, as to those veterans who are shown to have been engaged in combat with an enemy of the United States, or during service in some war, campaign, or expedition to have been subjected to other arduous conditions of military and naval service, any subsequent disability which can reasonably be considered to have been due to or aggravated by the conditions of all of any such veteran's active military and naval service, shall be adjudicated as being directly due to or aggravated by his service in line of duty, and that such adjudications shall be applicable under all laws administered by the Veterans' Administration, except where it shall have been clearly established by clear and unmistakable evidence that any such disability was not originated in or aggravated by his military or naval service.
> In other words, where a veteran is shown to have been engaged in combat with an enemy of the United States, or where he is shown to have been subjected to other arduous conditions during his service in some war, campaign, or expedition, then any disability with which he may afterward be found to be suffering, which can reasonably be considered to have been due to or aggravated by the conditions of his active service, shall be so rated, for all purposes, unless clear and unmistakable evidence definitely establishes that such disability was not due to or aggravated by his military service. It should be noted that such an assumption of service connection, rebuttable by clear and unmistakable evidence, is only to be applicable where the necessary conditions precedent have first been shown to exist.
> No such assumption of service connection of a disability is to be made, on the basis of the provisions of this bill, except as to a war, campaign, or expedition veteran who had had arduous conditions of service or who had been engaged in combat with the enemy, and only then in the event that the rating agency of the Veterans' Administration should come to the conclusion that such disability could reasonably be considered to be due to or aggravated by the conditions of his active service, and only then where evidence may not have definitely established that any such disability was not caused by or aggravated by his active service.
> In all cases rated by the Veterans' Administration, however, this bill would require that, in addition to existing instructions as to the factors to be taken into consideration in determining service connection of disabilities, due consideration should also be given to the places, types, and circumstances of the veteran's service as shown by his service record, the official history of each organization in which he served, his medical record, and all other medical and lay evidence.

The committee has long been convinced that there are many equitable claims for service connection on the part of front-line combat veterans, and other war, campaign, and expedition veterans who have been submitted to strenuous conditions of military service—who naturally ordinarily find it much more difficult legally and technically to establish the service connection of their disabilities than is the case as to a veteran who served only in this country, who remained in the same outfit from the date of his enlistment to the date of his discharge within easy access of sickbeds or hospitals, and of medical service, where careful records were kept and maintained. The committee is of the opinion that there have been many equitable claims considered by rating agencies of the Veterans' Administration, where members of the rating boards have personally been of the conviction that the veteran's disability was caused by his military service but where, because of existing policies as to the evaluation of evidence, they have not been able officially to come to the conclusion that the veteran's disability was due to or aggravated by his military service.

All of the members of the committee have had the experience of assisting some deserving veteran in the prosecution of his claim for service connection and compensation, for disabilities which the veteran and his Representative in Congress, or the service officer in one of the various veteran organizations, has conscientiously believed to have been caused by his military service but where, because of the very circumstances of the man's military service—the death or disappearance of buddies, the loss of memories with the lapsation of time, the lack or loss of records, the grim, dogged determination of the veteran to stay with his own outfit in spite of his own ailments, and a hundred and one other factors beyond his reasonable control—the veteran has been unable to furnish sufficient substantiating factual proof of his contentions that his disabilities were traceable to the arduous conditions of his military service.

It has been noted that denials of service connection, in apparently meritorious and justifiable claims, have occurred altogether too frequently, particularly as to the claims of former front-line fighters.

There can be no doubt whatsoever that the records of veterans were kept much more carefully as to those who served only in this country than was so as to those who served overseas. Moreover, there can be no doubt but what much more careful examinations were ordinarily made prior to the discharge of those veterans who served only in this country than was the case as to those who served abroad. This fact is very definitely substantiated by the careful tabulation which was made as to World War veterans who were enlisted from the 81 counties in Mississippi, and who were examined at time of discharge. This study, which appears in the booklet of hearings before the House Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation concerning H. R. 7925, beginning on page 124, shows that as to the 30,867 white veterans who enlisted from the 81 counties in Mississippi, 2.93 percent of the 15,904 who served overseas were found at time of discharge to be suffering with a disability, whereas 11.26 percent of those 14,963 who served only in this country were found to have disabilities at time of discharge.

This difference as to the percentage of overseas and home-service veterans found to be suffering with disabilities at time of discharge, is even more astounding as to the colored veterans who enlisted from the State of Mississippi, showing that whereas only 1.34 percent of the 12,163 colored veterans who served overseas were noted as having disabilities at time of discharge, 17.41 percent of the 12,030 who served only in this country were noted as having disabilities at time of discharge.

Combining both white and colored veterans who enlisted from the State of Mississippi, we find that the tabulations made by local Veterans of Foreign Wars post in Jackson, Miss., taken from data compiled by a local Work Projects Administration project, show that among the 28,067 Mississippi veterans who served overseas, only 2.24 percent were noted at time of discharge as suffering with disabilities, whereas, among the 26,993 who served only in this country, 14.007 percent were noted as having disabilities at time of discharge. In other words, nearly seven times as many veterans, proportionately, who served only in this country, were noted as having disabilities at time of discharge, as compared with those who served overseas. Obviously, such examinations failed miserably to disclose the existence of disabilities among those who had returned from overseas, primarily because of the great anxiety on the part of the returning overseas veterans to return to their homes just as speedily as possible, and also accountable for by the fact that the examining doctors were evidently also very anxious by that time to get back home. These figures statistically prove the assertion that it is ordinarily much easier for a home-service veteran to substantiate his claim for service connection of his disability—because of the greater detail of his medical examinations during military service and prior to his discharge, and the availability of such examination reports, as compared with the much lesser number of medical examinations on the part of veterans who served overseas, and the much speedier, perfunctory medical examinations on the part of returning overseas veterans prior to their discharges from military service.

Because of all of these factors, it seems that a much more liberal policy, as to the evaluation of such evidence as is obtainable and submittable on behalf of former front-line combat veterans, and other combat badge veterans, is much needed, so as to enable such rating board members to give due consideration to the probabilities and possibilities as to the inception and aggravation of disabilities incident to the exposure and hardships, and the stress and strain of combat service, or service under other arduous conditions—factors as to which it may have been impossible for the veteran ordinarily to submit detailed, factual, technically sufficient evidence.

The committee is not convinced that all of the local rating agencies of the Veterans' Administration have as reasonably and liberally applied such policies, in the evaluation of all of the evidence, factors, and circumstances as to a man's service, in determining the service connection of his disabilities, as it is believed would be possible on the basis of the provisions of this bill.

It was hoped that the service letter under date of August 10, 1938, issued by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, in effect directing the type and character of a man's military service to be taken into consideration in determining the service connection of any disability with which he might be suffering, would enable justice to be extended in these equitable border-line cases, particularly as to overseas veterans. Although there can be no doubt that the instructions of such letter have been helpful in some instances, it would appear that the instructions in such service letter are hedged with such qualifications that cautious members of claims and rating boards—naturally not wanting to be accused of being too liberal, for fear that such a policy on their part might not meet with the approval of their immediate superiors—have generally been inclined to proceed on the assumption that they have previously adhered to such a rating policy, and that there was therefore no reason for them, on the basis of the issuance of such service letter, to grant service connections in cases where they had previously denied such service connection.

The provisions of this bill would in effect require the more liberal policies enunciated in the service letter under date of August 10, 1938, together with the other more precise assumptions of service connection, for certain classifications of veterans, provided for by this bill, to be issued in the form of regulations by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, under the direction of Congress, thus probably giving considerably more force to the intention of liberality in determining the question of service connection where the arduous conditions of the war veteran's military service would make it appear reasonably possible that such circumstances could have caused the origin or aggravation of his disability, except where clear and unmistakable evidence established that such was not the case.

It is believed that the enactment of this bill, and the subsequent issuance of explanatory regulations by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, directed under the terms hereof, to all rating agencies of the Veterans' Administration, will eventually result in the favorable adjudication of hundreds, if not thousands, of pending claims for service connection or disabilities, which the veteran applicants conscientiously believed to have been due to their military service, which they have previously been unable technically and legally to prove to the satisfaction of such rating agencies. For these reasons, the committee believes that this bill should be promptly passed by the House of Representatives.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I also invite the Senator's attention to page 12880 of the RECORD, and following pages, where Representative RANKIN, Representative ROGERS of Massachusetts, and others in the House most interested in this type of legislation gave full discussion and ample consideration to this bill, which was passed after discussion in the House on September 30. I submit the case on the statement of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER].

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

HOWARD MONDT

The bill (H. R. 8705) for the relief of Howard Mondt was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOWARD R. M. BROWNE

The bill (H. R. 7784) for the relief of Howard R. M. Browne was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ST. NICHOLAS PARK CO.

The bill (S. 3240) for the relief of the St. Nicholas Park Co. was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the St. Nicholas Park

Co., of Jacksonville, Fla., the sum of $1,550 in full satisfaction of its claim against the United States for reimbursement of amounts expended by such company in removing the hull of a partially burned vessel from a position in the St. Johns River in front of its property, known as St. Nicholas Park, a residential development in South Jacksonville, Fla., such hull having been placed in such position with the knowledge and acquiescence of the United States district engineer, located at Jacksonville, Fla., and without obtaining the permission of such company: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

CAFFEY ROBERTSON-SMITH, INC.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4215) for the relief of Caffey Robertson-Smith, Inc., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 8, to strike out "$9,448.86" and insert "$9,348.86", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any funds available for carrying out the provisions of section 32 of the act entitled "An act to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes," approved August 24, 1935, as amended, the sum of $9,348.86, to Caffey Robertson-Smith, Inc., of Memphis, Tenn., in full satisfaction of its claims against the United States for payments for the exportation of certain quantities of cotton at the rates in effect at the time of the sales thereof for export, notices of such sales having been given prior to December 6, 1939, but the payments therefor having been withheld for the reason that the said Caffey Robertson-Smith, Inc., did not promptly file a bond supporting the agreement of compliance, dated August 1, 1939, which it entered into in connection with the cotton and cotton products export program of the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year 1940: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, inasmuch as we will have to meet tomorrow, and we have not very much to do, I think we might suspend at this point.

HOMING PIGEONS

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, there has been sent to the Senate a bill passed by the House for safeguarding homing pigeons. The War Department is interested in the bill, which it says is needed for national defense. It is emergency legislation. I ask that the Senate consider the bill at this time.

The Chair laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 7813) to safeguard the homing pigeon, which was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. THOMAS of Utah, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of sundry persons to be second lieutenants in the Regular Army under the provisions of law.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the first nomination on the calendar.

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of William E. Flournoy, Jr., to be consul.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTER—NOMINATION REPORTED ADVERSELY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Eva L. Herndon to be postmaster at Warrensburg, Mo., which had been adversely reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to this nomination?

The nomination was rejected.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters, which had been reported favorably.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE ARMY

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Committee on Military Affairs has favorably reported a group of routine Army appointments and promotions. I ask unanimous consent that they be now considered, and that action be taken on them en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I also ask that the usual order with respect to the printing of these nominations be entered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations will not again be printed, but reference will be made to the pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD where they have previously been printed.

DISCHARGE OF COMMITTEE FROM CONSIDERATION OF CERTAIN RESOLUTIONS

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, is it the intention of the Senator from Kentucky to proceed with the calendar tomorrow?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; until it is finished. There are only a few more bills on the calendar.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I have already given notice that as soon as I can obtain the floor I shall move that the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate be discharged from the further consideration of Senate Resolution 186. I am perfectly agreeable to going on and finishing the calendar, but I should like to have the notice stand that as soon as I can obtain the floor I shall move to discharge the Committee to Audit and Control from the consideration of the resolution referred to. I think I am entitled to the floor on a motion of that sort. As soon as that motion shall be disposed of, I intend to move that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of Senate Resolution 307, providing for an investigation into the Lundeen accident.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I do not think those motions should be taken up in the absence of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], the chairman of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. One or both of them may lead to considerable discussion, although I do not know that they will.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I have no idea of taking up the motions in the absence of the Senator from South Carolina. I notified the Senator's office yesterday and the day before that it was my intention to make the motions to discharge the committee at the first opportunity, because I think very important questions of committee jurisdiction, if nothing else, are to be presented to the Senate in connection with the motions. The Senator from South Carolina will be afforded every opportunity, so far as I am concerned, to be present when I make the motions to discharge.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Wednesday, October 9, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 8, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed Lord, let us pause and recall that the humanity of our Saviour is an everlasting, continuous, and unchanging revelation of the divine heart. What He was, He is the same—warm sympathetic Elder Brother who feels our sorrows and is touched with a feeling of our infirmities. Teach us that there were wounds in that tender heart deeper and more painful than even the crown of thorns. In His tragic moments, with pathos so deep and strange, and with human surprise He asked: "Could ye not watch with me 1 hour?" Forbid that we should ever be thoughtless or faithless to any trust placed upon us. Almighty God, look with pity and mercy upon this world. Pity it in its tendencies, in its iron cruelties, in its debasing selfishness, and in all its wickedness. Our Lord and Saviour is still assailed by the cruel mockeries of men; the reed is still in His hand, the crown of thorns is still tearing His brow, and the multitudes are still leading Him to Calvary. O Heavenly Father, fill us with the light of the morning and allow no sorrowing memories to crowd our thoughts. In these solemn moments we pray: Let the words of our mouths and the meditations of our hearts be always acceptable in Thy sight, O Lord, our strength and our Redeemer. Through Christ our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 8512. An act to provide for the acquisition of additional lands for the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 10127. An act to amend the Federal Reserve Act, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 7738) entitled "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to lease or sell certain lands of the Agua Caliente or Palm Springs Reservation, Calif., for public airport use, and for other purposes,'" disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. WHEELER, and Mr. FRAZIER to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate further insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 960) entitled "An act extending the classified executive civil service of the United States," disagreed to by the House; agrees to a further conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. MEAD, Mr. BULOW, Mr. GEORGE, Mr. WHITE, and Mr. FRAZIER to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10412) entitled "An act to expedite the provision of housing in connection with national defense, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 4270) entitled "An act to promote and strengthen the national defense by suspending enforcement of certain civil liabilities of certain persons serving in the Military and Naval Establishments, including the Coast Guard."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HESS, by unanimous consent, was granted permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

NEW DEAL TAXES

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, a very high-class and intelligent working man, a friend of mine, put an oil burner in his home last year and made a contract for oil at 5¾ cents a gallon. He told me yesterday that the price this year had been increased to 6¾ cents, with a ceiling of 7¾ cents. In the contract this appears:

> All taxes, charges, and fees, and all increases therein, that are now or may hereafter be imposed by any governmental authority on, against, or in respect of any of said products, or in the importation, production, sale, transportation, or delivery thereof, or upon us or our business with respect to this sale, or on this agreement, shall be added to the prices herein provided.

This shows us that when the New Deal big Government joins big business the little fellow has to pay. [Applause.]

During the long years' delirium of reckless and wasteful spending of the people's money by the New Deal, the theory always dinned into our ears has been that it was all for the benefit of the little man. But this one incident which can be duplicated by millions of cases proves that the converse—the little man always pays the bill. Hidden taxes, like termites, are eating the foundation from under every little home in America today. The cure is to put a man in the White House in November, backed by a Republican Congress, who knows the value of money and who can lead us back to economic sanity. [Applause.]

NATIONAL DEFENSE HOUSING

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 10412) to expedite the provision of housing in connection with national defense, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10412) to expedite the provision of housing in connection with national defense, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 7, 8, 10, 11, 12, and 13.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 9, 14, 15, 16, and 17, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "and that such housing would not be provided by private capital when needed"; and the Senate agree to the same.

FRITZ G. LANHAM,
EUGENE B. CROWE,
PEHR G. HOLMES,
Managers on the part of the House.
TOM CONNALLY,
THEODORE FRANCIS GREEN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10412) to expedite the provision of housing in connection with national defense, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

Amendment No. 1: Section 1 of the House bill limits the providing of housing, under the bill, to those areas or localities in which "the President shall find that an acute shortage of housing exists or impends which would impede national defense activities". This amendment requires an additional finding, by adding the following after the language quoted above: "and that such housing would not be provided by private capital when needed (but such finding shall not be made until notice shall be given to the Federal Housing Administrator of the proposed construction, stating the number of units proposed and the areas in which they are to be located)". The House recedes with an amendment which retains all of the Senate amendment except the part included in parentheses.

Amendment No. 2: Under section 1 of the House bill the Federal Works Administrator is to exercise his authority "acting through the Public Buildings Administration". This amendment strikes out the words above quoted, so that the Federal Works Administrator will not be required to act through the Public Buildings Administration.

The House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 3 and 4: Section 1 (a) of the House bill authorizes the Federal Works Administrator to acquire, for purposes of the program provided for in the bill, improved or unimproved lands, without regard to certain provisions of law, among which is section 355, as amended, of the Revised Statutes, which prohibits spending public money upon any site or land purchased by the United States for the purpose of erecting thereon an arsenal, etc., until the written opinion of the Attorney General shall be had in favor of the validity of the title. Amendment No. 3 adds language which would authorize the Public Works Administrator to acquire the land in question prior to the approval of title by the Attorney General. Amendment No. 4 strikes out the reference to section 355 of the Revised Statutes.

The House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 5 and 6: Section 1 (b) of the House bill authorizes the Federal Works Administrator, by contract or otherwise, to make surveys and investigations, plan, design, construct, remodel, extend, repair, or demolish structures, buildings, improvements, and community facilities, on lands acquired under subsection (a), and provides that such authority may be exercised without regard to certain provisions of law, among which is section 355, as amended, of the Revised Statutes referred to in the comment on the preceding amendment. Amendment No. 5 strikes out the reference to section 355 of the Revised Statutes. Amendment No. 6 authorizes the Federal Works Administrator to exercise the granted powers prior to the approval of title by the Attorney General.

The House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 7, 8, 10, and 11: Section 1 (b) of the House bill contains a proviso reading as follows: "Provided, That the cost per family dwelling unit shall not exceed an average of $3,000 for those units located within the continental United States nor an average of $4,000 for those located elsewhere, and the cost of no dwelling unit shall exceed $3,950 within the continental United States or $4,750 elsewhere, exclusive of expenses of administration, land acquisition, public utilities, and community facilities, and the aggregate cost of community facilities shall not exceed 3 per centum of the total cost of all projects." These amendments change the amounts specified in such proviso, respectively, as follows: $3,500, $4,500, $4,450, and $5,250.

The Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 9: In the proviso of the House bill, above quoted, it is provided that "the cost of no dwelling unit shall exceed $3,950". This amendment inserts the word "family" before the words "dwelling unit".

The House recedes.

Amendment No. 12: In the proviso above quoted it is provided that the specified amounts for maximum expenditure shall be exclusive of expenses of administration, land acquisition, public utilities, and community facilities. This amendment modifies this provision by inserting the words "but including" before the words "land acquisition, public utilities, and community facilities", with the result that the only expenses excluded from the specified limits of cost would be expenses of administration.

The Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 13: The proviso above quoted contains the following: ", and the aggregate cost of community facilities shall not exceed 3 per centum of the total cost of all projects". This amendment strikes out this language.

The Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 14: Section 6 of the House bill directs that moneys derived from rental or operation of property acquired or constructed under the provisions of the Act shall be returned to the appropriation authorized by the Act and shall be available for expenses of operation and maintenance, including administrative expenses in connection therewith, and provides that the "unexpended balance" of the moneys so deposited shall be covered into the Treasury at the end of each fiscal year as miscellaneous receipts. This amendment strikes out the word "unexpended" and inserts in lieu thereof the word "unobligated".

The House recedes.

Amendment No. 15: This amendment, in conformity with amendment No. 2, eliminates the requirement that the Administrator shall act through the Public Buildings Administration.

The House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 16 and 17: Section 8 of the House bill provides that "In carrying out the provisions of this Act the Administrator is authorized to utilize employees and facilities of the Federal Works Agency and other Federal agencies and of any local public agency, with the consent of such agency". These amendments eliminate the authority to utilize "employees and facilities of" such agencies, and grant in lieu thereof the authority to "act through" such agencies.

The House recedes.

FRITZ G. LANHAM,
EUGENE B. CROWE,
PEHR G. HOLMES,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas is recognized.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, this is a conference report upon the bill for national-defense housing, primarily of civilian workers. The conference report has been agreed to unanimously by the conferees and has been adopted by the Senate. The report has practically no important variation from the bill as it passed the House, there being a few clarifying amendments. The cost provisions remain as they were in the House bill. It is so largely the bill that was passed by the House without any variation in the effect of its provisions that I shall move the previous question, unless someone wishes to make inquiry.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. Does not the gentleman feel it was a mistake for the House to recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment numbered 15, which eliminated the requirement that the Administrator shall act through the Public Buildings Administration? Here you have an organization all set up and, by reason of the fact that the House has reduced the appropriation for public buildings this year, is in a position to and is willing to do any type of construction work. It has always performed a good job, as we all know. Is it sound to set up in the Navy and in the Army additional construction divisions to do housing work when the Public Buildings Administration could do it? Then, again, you have the engineers of the Army. We have reduced the appropriations for flood control and for rivers and harbors, and the engineers of the Army are not so busy as they have been in the past. Why can they not take over some of this work for the Army?

Mr. LANHAM. May I say in reply to my good friend, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN], that it is contemplated that practically all of this work will be done through the Public Buildings Administration? However, in the bill as it passed the House the provision was made that the Administrator might act through various Federal or local housing agencies, without any authority, however, to lend any funds to those agencies, but merely to reimburse them to the extent used. If in every instance action had to be through the Public Buildings Administration when using some of the local organizations which might have better data and facilities in certain localities, then it would require double bookkeeping and accounting in clearing through the Public Buildings Administration. They who will have charge of the administration of this measure state that it is their purpose to do practically all of this construction through the Public Buildings Administration, and that the elimination of this phrasing from the bill is quite in keeping with the provisions of section 8 of the bill. In those instances where these other agencies can be utilized to advantage, without any loans to them, it will not be necessary for them to have to clear through the Public Buildings Administration before clearing through the Administrator. It is simply a matter of simplifying the procedure and avoiding duplication in those cases where such agencies can be used to advantage.

Mr. COCHRAN. I thank the gentleman and express the hope these agencies that are already set up, ready to go, having the organization to do the work, are used instead of setting up new agencies.

Mr. LANHAM. I may say to my friend that that provision was in the bill as it passed the House and is still in the bill as presented in the conference report.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield.

Mr. SCHULTE. Can the gentleman from Texas tell me whether my amendment, which was offered on the floor and accepted by the House relative to the prevailing rate of wages, is still in the bill.

Mr. LANHAM. It is still in the bill as it was incorporated in the House; yes.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. Yes; I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. An organization has been created in the War Department, and I think in the Navy Department also, composed of men formerly, if not now, connected with contracting firms. Will these organizations have supervision of this construction program we have in mind?

Mr. LANHAM. No. May I say in reply to the gentleman from Illinois that appropriations have already been made of very considerable proportions for the use of the Army and the Navy in the kind of construction to which he refers. The services of the agencies he has mentioned may be used primarily of course with reference to the other appropriations. This will be for civilian workers in isolated plants and in suburban sections of cities and towns where housing is not available.

An amendment was placed on the bill in the Senate to the effect that this construction should not proceed unless it was shown that private capital was not interested or that private dwelling space was not available for these workers.

The agencies to which the gentleman from Illinois refers would be concerned more with the appropriations which have been made to the Army and the Navy for housing.

Mr. SABATH. The aim therefore is to give private industry an opportunity to construct some of this housing?

Mr. LANHAM. In every way possible. Whenever private industry is in any way interested in it, it is to be importuned to do this work. I may say further in this regard, as the gentleman probably knows, the Government is to recoup much of this appropriation from the disposition of this housing after the period of the emergency has passed.

Mr. SABATH. One more question, if the gentleman will permit. I am a little skeptical about work being done by private capital in view of the fact that some of the members of these Army-Navy organizations who have been brought into the departments are or have been connected with construction companies. I wonder whether these present or past connections will not somehow or other be detrimental to the best interests of the Government. It is stated that these gentlemen divorced themselves from their past connections. I think it is worth while to determine to what extent they have done so.

Mr. LANHAM. I may say to the gentleman from Illinois that I do not think that comes within the purview of the provisions of this particular bill. It might possibly have some connection with appropriations that have been passed for the Army and the Navy, but I cannot see how it would have anything to do with this measure according to its present provisions.

Mr. SABATH. I hope the gentleman's confidence has not been misplaced, that this program will be carried out economically and soundly. I may say, however, that I shall watch carefully these activities, because I am interested in the national-defense workers, and especially the trainees, who need to be and should be taken care of with decent housing. That is my primary interest.

Mr. LANHAM. I cherish the same hope as does the gentleman from Illinois, that operations under this measure will be quite satisfactory and will provide the housing of the sort to which he refers for those civilian workers primarily who will be helpful in the matter of preparation for our national defense.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield.

Mr. RICH. In order to get private capital to do this construction work, is it going to be necessary to do away with competitive bidding; will it be on a cost-plus basis?

Mr. LANHAM. It is not going to be on a cost-plus basis. It will be on a cost-plus-a-fixed-fee basis except in those cases where there is ample time to ask for competitive bids.

Mr. RICH. That part of it will be done on a cost-plus-a-fixed-fee basis where you have to have it done immediately without having opportunity of calling for bids.

Mr. LANHAM. The gentleman is quite correct. With winter approaching, the gentleman can readily see that there will be much of this construction which necessarily will have to be considered on a cost-plus-a-fixed-fee basis.

Mr. RICH. How long a time would be necessary to have bids submitted rather than awarding it on a cost-plus basis?

Mr. LANHAM. That matter is purely conjectural, of course. We are living in a time when no day can be the herald of the morrow. I suppose it is impossible to tell. At any rate, in every way possible they are going to try to persuade private capital to become interested in this, and where that is not possible, then it will be done on a cost-plus-a-fixed-fee basis. They will proceed at once with the construction that must be done immediately.

Mr. RICH. One other important question: Will "Chip" Robert do the drafting and draw up the specifications?

Mr. LANHAM. The gentleman will readily understand that he is asking a question that does not come within the province of my authority. I think the bill specifies the necessary and proper provisions of procedure.

Mr. RICH. He has probably been pretty well taken care of already, I imagine.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Texas.

Mr. THOMASON. Does the bill provide for permanent or temporary housing at existing Army posts?

Mr. LANHAM. The bill contains provisions dealing with family dwelling units for civilian workers, and also other provisions whereby part of these funds could be used for a similar purpose with reference to Army and Navy construction. In this connection I may say, however, that large appropriations have been made already for the very purpose about which the gentleman inquires.

The primary purpose of this bill is to provide housing for civilian workers who will be required at many of these plants, like the powder plant that is to be constructed in Virginia and which necessarily will be in an isolated region.

Mr. THOMASON. If at an existing Army post there is inadequate housing for the officer personnel, could more housing be provided under the terms of this bill where there is not already sufficient funds in other appropriation bills to take care of it?

Mr. LANHAM. I am somewhat doubtful whether there would be provision here for officer housing, because I think we have made rather liberal provision for them in other appropriation bills. The purpose of this bill primarily is to take care of these civilian workers, and the need for this measure and its enactment is urgent because winter is coming on and we must have this housing if we are to proceed with due diligence and speed in our preparation for national defense.

Mr. THOMASON. It would provide for housing at existing Army posts for noncommissioned officers and enlisted men with families?

Mr. LANHAM. Possibly; but there was provision of that character made in a recent appropriation bill of $100,000,000, which provided for the Army and Navy, upon land in proximity to their various posts, and they could use a part of the $100,000,000. If civilian workers are to be employed near an Army or Navy station, then of course part of this fund could very readily be applied to housing for those civilian workers. This measure is concerned primarily with such workers.

Mr. HOLMES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOLMES. As a matter of fact, the primary purpose of this legislation is to take care of civilian workers in industrial plants who are working on war goods?

Mr. LANHAM. The gentleman is correct. It is very doubtful indeed if these funds here provided will be more than sufficient to take care of that particular need.

Mr. HOLMES. They will not be anywhere near enough, as a matter of fact.

Mr. LANHAM. I think the gentleman is probably correct in that assumption.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Does the gentleman know if the Department of Justice or some other department has figured on doing anything about this 30 to 50 percent increase that lumber has taken in the last 90 days? I have not heard much said about that. They are asking the Government from 30 to 50 percent more for lumber in this emergency, and I cannot find that the Attorney General is doing anything but sleeping between the Labor Board and the 50-destroyer proposition.

Mr. LANHAM. That inquiry might more appropriately be directed to the Department of Justice, because it is a little beside the mark with reference to this particular legislation and the functions of the committee which reported it.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. I think it is tremendously important to the people of this country and the whole defense program if we have a trust that can increase the cost of lumber to the Government 30 to 50 percent in 60 days.

Mr. LANHAM. I am just as much interested as the gentleman is in having the Government get at the lowest possible cost the materials that are necessary.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. There is no excuse for it. It is just tolerated, that is all.

Mr. SABATH. As I understand, Mr. John M. Carmody, Administrator of the Federal Works Agency, will have jurisdiction and power in this construction program.

Mr. LANHAM. That is right; the Director of the Federal Works Agency.

Mr. SABATH. I have the most complete confidence in that gentleman. I am informed he is an excellent man of proved ability and 30 successful years' experience in private enterprise. I do not want to leave any implication that I question his ability or sincerity in supervising and looking after the housing needs of our defense workers. What I had reference to and what I fear, as I have stated, is that the gentlemen who have been brought in by the War and Navy Departments are, or have been, so connected that the contracts might be awarded with preference given to their former associates.

Mr. LANHAM. I hope and believe the gentleman's fears are unfounded.

Mr. SABATH. That does not apply to Mr. Carmody, of course.

Mr. LANHAM. May I say, furthermore, that the Administrator will act in cooperation and collaboration with the Council of National Defense in providing this housing for civilian workers.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Carmody has construction jurisdiction under the bill as agreed to?

Mr. LANHAM. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. STEFAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. STEFAN. I note in the conference report these dwellings are each to cost around $3,500 to $4,000. Will the gentleman tell us for how much, approximately, they will rent? What will be the rent?

Mr. LANHAM. I cannot tell the gentleman definitely what the rent will be, but there is a provision in the bill that the rental shall be reasonable. That is as far as it is possible for the legislation to go in view of the fact that the housing will necessarily be of a different character in different localities.

Mr. STEFAN. As I understand it, these dwellings are to be rented to civilian employees at these various plants?

Mr. LANHAM. That is correct.

Mr. STEFAN. Will the gentleman tell me approximately how much money is contained in this particular bill? What is the total?

Mr. LANHAM. One hundred and fifty million dollars.

Mr. STEFAN. The gentleman is aware of the fact that very soon we will have another bill here that will entail around $500,000,000 in which I understand groups of enlisted men will have the opportunity to rent one of these houses or dwellings at from around $15 to $20 each. These dwellings cost $3,500. I was wondering whether there was any connection between the two.

Mr. LANHAM. No; of course, the housing for the enlisted men or men who will be drafted into the service is provided in another measure. This is for civilian workers primarily and principally at industrial plants that are to furnish the material necessary for our national-defense preparation.

Mr. STEFAN. Only civilian employees will be given the privilege of renting these houses. The gentleman cannot tell us now what the rental basis will be, because these houses are to be located in different localities and the types of houses are different?

Mr. LANHAM. I believe the gentleman will readily see that it would be impossible to establish a standard of rentals in the bill, in view of the fact that the rentals will necessarily vary because in some isolated regions the charge would be less, perhaps, on account of the character of construction than in certain suburban areas of the cities; so all we could provide was that from the standpoint of the worker and from the standpoint of the Government the rentals would be reasonable.

Mr. STEFAN. What will the highest-priced dwelling cost?

Mr. LANHAM. If the gentleman will look on page 3 of the bill as passed by the House, he will see that it is $3,000 for those units located within the continental United States.

Mr. STEFAN. And $4,750 for others.

Mr. LANHAM. As a maximum for those outside our continental limits. As a matter of fact, they expect to construct many of these buildings for very much less than the minimum.

Mr. STEFAN. Was any maximum price set by the Government as to what we are going to pay for the land on which we are putting these houses?

Mr. LANHAM. There was not, because, necessarily, that will vary in different localities. It costs more to purchase a piece of land in a suburban area near a city than it does in some isolated spot where we might establish a powder plant, for instance.

Mr. STEFAN. There is no connection between the bill we are now considering and the bill we are going to get very soon, which has to do with the housing of certain enlisted men and some civilians?

Mr. LANHAM. The bill that is coming up just after this, as I understand, is the appropriation bill carrying into effect the provisions of this bill.

Mr. STEFAN. They are dovetailing bills?

Mr. LANHAM. Yes. That bill, based upon this authorization, is to provide the appropriation for the housing mentioned in this measure.

Mr. STEFAN. The gentleman has answered the questions I wanted to have answered, and I thank the gentleman.

Mr. CROWE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield to my friend from Indiana.

Mr. CROWE. On the matter of the cost of the units, may I say that they shall not exceed an average of $3,000, and no single unit can exceed $3,950. That answers further the question of the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. STEFAN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. CROWE. No single unit costs more than $3,950, and the average cannot be above $3,000. Many of the houses will cost much less than that, of course.

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio, a member of the committee.

Mr. McGREGOR. The same figures are in the bill the conference committee has reported as the House voted upon prior to the bill going to the conferees?

Mr. LANHAM. That is correct.

Mr. McGREGOR. Does not the same situation apply to the utilities and to the land that we voted on prior to the conference?

Mr. LANHAM. This report contains exactly the same provisions in the bill as passed by the House.

Mr. Speaker, if there are no further questions, I move the previous question upon the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SCHULTE and Mr. VREELAND asked and were given permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD two times and to insert certain statistics and quotations.

The SPEAKER. Is there obection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include therein two radio broadcasts of mine.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a radio address of the President of Fordham University.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a speech by George Hill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Speaker, I have spent considerable time on the floor of the House speaking of the Reserve officers and their duties and functions. I am very much interested in the Reserve. I called the Adjutant General the other day because of the many requests to receive commissions in the Army and was told that all Reserve appointments were closed except in the medical department, and then for initial rank only, meaning first lieutenants. I was very much surprised to learn that Mr. Elliott Roosevelt was appointed a captain without any service in the initial ranks. I am a captain, too, but it took me 7 years of hard work to get it. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KINZER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial in last Sunday's issue of the Baltimore Sun.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the close of the legislative business today, I may proceed for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD an editorial from the Big Timber Pioneer, and I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

[Mr. O'CONNOR addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein the balance of this editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

Mr. HOFFMAN. A point of order, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. RICH. I reserve the right to object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan will state his point of order.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Under the rule that was announced yesterday, has the gentleman the right to extend that in the RECORD at this point?

The SPEAKER. He has not.

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman was speaking about Wendell Willkie and his getting to Montana. We realize it is very difficult for a man to get to Montana, but you will find that he will be the President over the people of Montana on November 5, and the people of Montana are going to support him. We are going to carry Montana by a big majority.

Mr. O'CONNOR. We will have the same President after November 5 that we have now.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SECCOMBE, Mr. HAWKS, and Mr. CHIPPERFIELD asked and were given permission to revise and extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a short letter from a constituent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the legislative business has been disposed of today, and following any other special order, I may be permitted to proceed for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. YOUNGDAHL and Mr. MILLER asked and were given permission to revise and extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to revise and extend my own remarks in the RERORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the House to the extension of remarks by the gentleman from Ohio, the Honorable THOMAS A. JENKINS, on page 6186 of the Appendix of the RECORD entitled "A Brief Explanation of the New Excess-Profits Tax.

This explanation, which takes slightly more than one page, was prepared by our colleague at the request of a number of Members of the Congress who desire to have a brief explanation of this rather comprehensive and hard-to-understand tax law. I believe this will be of great value to every Member of Congress.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BLACKNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include two short quotations.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein excerpts from a speech I delivered at Valley Forge on Michigan Day.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, we cannot hear a word that is being said, therefore we do not know what requests are being made. I looked at the RECORD this morning and find one Member, acting within his rights, put 41 pages of a statement prepared by some attorney not a Member of the Congress in the RECORD. It took 41 pages for this person to disclose what is wrong with the United States. The extension is labeled "Who Wants the Key to Prosperity?"

When you consider it costs about $65 a page for small type you will realize what this means to the taxpayers.

On last Friday the gentleman asked permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD, and I admit he called attention to the fact that it was over the legal limit, stating he had an estimate from the Public Printer. However, the gentleman did not state what the estimate was, but the RECORD this morning shows that it is 41 pages. I think we should know what these requests are, so that in the event it is over the legal limit we will be able to find out just exactly how much over the limit and how much it is going to cost. I do not think there is a Member on this floor, if he or she knew there were 41 pages of small type going to be put in the RECORD by any Member, containing a statement prepared by someone who was not a Member of the House, who would not object to the request. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I think Members should remain out of the Well of the House, as the rules provide, so that we may hear what is going on, and prevent in the future a recurrence of what happened in this morning's RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I want to say in connection with what the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] has said that that is all right. The RECORD is not the record of Congress but a conglomeration of news and statements of the world. It is not only being disobeyed by Members on this side but Members on that side have put in the same article as high as nine times, taking up the same amount in space of the RECORD. Did the majority party object? No. We ought to have men on that side who will say that we are going to change the rules and regulations and not permit it. I have tried to stop it for 7 years. It is the duty of the majority party, which is responsible for this RECORD, that they should take some action on the insertion of extraneous matter. I congratulate the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] in trying to stop it; it is the first help I have had from the majority party for years. I hope others will join him in making it a RECORD of Congress. That is what it is supposed to be. But it is anything but the RECORD of Congress when it contains everything it should not contain.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARSHALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and to include a short table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks twice very briefly. I also ask unanimous consent to insert a brief statement by Abraham Lincoln.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the requests are granted.

There was no objection.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include an editorial appearing in the Cleveland Plain Dealer of October 8, 1940.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

By unanimous consent, Mr. SHAFER of Michigan and Mr. BENDER were granted permission to revise and extend their own remarks.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, and I ask permission to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

[Mr. FULMER addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

ADDITIONAL APPROPRIATION FOR NATIONAL-DEFENSE HOUSING, FISCAL YEAR ENDING JUNE 30, 1941

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Joint Resolution 614, making an additional appropriation for national-defense housing for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the House joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 614; and pending that motion I ask unanimous consent that general debate extend for 1 hour, the time to be equally divided between the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] and myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 614, with Mr. BEAM in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the House joint resolution.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the House joint resolution was dispensed with.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, this joint resolution provides the appropriation to carry into effect the authorization for national-defense housing contained in H. R. 10412, on which bill the conference report, presented by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] was just adopted by the House a short time ago. We have heretofore provided $100,000,000 for housing for the defense program by direct appropriation; $40,000,000 in addition to that was provided by the Federal Housing Administration, and $10,000,000 was advanced out of the emergency funds granted to the President, making a total of $150,000,000. If this joint resolution is agreed to, there will have been provided a gross total of $300,000,000 for this housing, and deducting the $10,000,000 which may be repaid to the emergency fund of the President, leaves a net of $290,000,000.

We are told by the representatives of the Advisory Commission of the Council on National Defense and by the Army and Navy that the best estimates they are able to make for housing needs will require approximately $560,000,000, but that they have received very encouraging cooperation from private industry and private capital, and they are hopeful that this $290,000,000, which is about half of the needs, will take care of the amount that the Government will have to put up for this purpose.

We provide in this joint resolution $75,000,000 in cash and $75,000,000 in contract authorizations.

The Committee on Appropriations has also written into this bill a provision which we think is fair, carrying the same limitation that is in most of the other defense appropriation bills limiting the profit on any cost-plus-a-fixed-fee contract to not to exceed 6 percent of the contract exclusive of the fee.

In addition to the housing item, there is an amount of $40,000 for the further enforcement of the Commodity Exchange Act, made necessary because of an enlargement of the law by House bill 4088, which brought under the Commodity Exchange Act 10 additional commodities. Unless there are some questions, I reserve the balance of my time. The housing matter was thoroughly discussed on the floor a few moments ago when the gentleman from Texas had the conference report on H. R. 10412 up in the House.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. RICH. We have already appropriated, as the gentleman says, $150,000,000 for the housing needs of the defense program. We are now asked to pass another bill, making $75,000,000 of direct appropriations and granting authority for $75,000,000 of additional contracts. This makes a total of $300,000,000, and the gentleman figures we are going to get a request for $200,000,000 more.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. No; I did not figure that.

Mr. RICH. How are we going to get it up to $500,000,000, then?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I said the Advisory Commission of the Council on National Defense feels that it will be able to interest private capital in taking care of the rest of the housing needs. They are hopeful at any rate. They cannot promise definitely that they will not have to ask for any more funds on this proposition.

Mr. RICH. Does the gentleman figure we are going to have any more appropriation bills of this kind before this session of Congress adjourns?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Hope springs eternal in the human breast. I am hopeful, but the gentleman knows that hopes are dashed to pieces very suddenly sometimes.

Mr. RICH. I know, but the gentleman from Virginia, whom we all love and respect, made the statement about a week ago that the bill then under consideration was the last appropriation bill for the Congress, but we have one here today for $150,000,000 more. The gentleman from Virginia is not responsible for it. If the gentleman had his way, many of these bills would not go through; but they expect him, nevertheless, to railroad them through, and there is nobody else in the House who can do it. The gentleman has just got us all where they give him anything he wants; but I ask the gentleman whether the administration, in asking him to bring in appropriation bill after appropriation bill, has ever asked the gentleman where we are going to get the money to pay for these expenditures?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks that every day or two. I confess it is a problem that worries me considerably.

Mr. RICH. It has been worrying me. I am worried so much about it I am afraid I am going to get sick worrying about it, and I do not want to get sick. I would like to get the administration sick and let them think about it for a while.

Mr. SABATH. We will get it from those able to pay.

Mr. RICH. Is the gentleman a spokesman for the administration?

Mr. SABATH. No.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman speaks up every time I ask that question, but he never answers it. He is like all the rest; they do not know, and, what is worse, they do not care.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. At Camp Custer, in the Third Michigan District, the Government is building barracks. I have letters from men who have applied for work on that project. They state that even though they belong to a union in the adjoining county and are in good standing, yet when they go over to Camp Custer, which is in Calhoun County, from either Kalamazoo or Ottawa Counties, they are required, before they are allowed to work on the Camp Custer project, to pay the difference in the union dues, which are less in Kalamazoo and Ottawa Counties than they are in Calhoun County. Will not that practice tend to increase the cost to the United States of this building program?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I believe that any differences in labor-union dues would have no effect on the cost of the housing. Is that what the gentleman means?

Mr. HOFFMAN. That is what I mean.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I believe that would not affect the cost to the United States. That is an intraunion matter and I understand it would not reflect in the costs of the contract.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Certainly it would. If the worker has to pay higher fees and dues to the union, he must necessarily be paid a higher wage, and it comes out of the contractor, and, in the end, out of the taxpayer.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. We were told there has been no difference, certainly no appreciable difference, in labor costs recently. That specific question was asked.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I shall call the gentleman's attention this afternoon or tomorrow to the fact that the difference in the union fees is $20, the amount that has to be paid to the union representative. Is there anything in this bill which would give authority to any department having to do with the building of these houses to require that a man shall pay a fee to a union before he may go to work for the United States Government?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. There is nothing whatever in this bill affecting that at all. The gentleman knows, of course, that that is a matter between trade-unions. The Government has provided in other organic laws which we have passed that men may belong to unions. There is nothing in this bill that in any way affects that.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Is there any provision in this bill that protects the right of the individual who does not belong to a union, that does not require him to belong to a union before he can get a job?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That has nothing to do with the bill at all. The gentleman knows it has nothing to do with it whatsoever.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I call the gentleman's attention to an item appearing in this morning's paper saying that a certain union representative, one Emile Chatak, at Buffalo said that Grace, president of Bethlehem Steel, would sit down and negotiate with him or we will not get any steel. That is with reference to the Bethlehem plant, where 70,000 men are employed to produce steel. This union organizer says that plant will be closed unless the president of the company sits down with that particular organizer. Does not the gentleman believe we ought to be protected against that kind of procedure?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. What has that to do with this bill, I ask the gentleman?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I imagine they will use some steel in these houses; there will be plumbing, and they certainly would be affected to that extent.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. These are very simply constructed houses.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Even if they were constructed of hot air and the hot air were controlled by a union, the cost of the houses would be affected by a union organizer's interfering with the supply of hot air.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. If we could can some of the hot air we hear in the House, we might not have to make this appropriation.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Or some we get from the Executive Mansion.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That is the gentleman's opinion, with which I do not agree.

Mr. HOFFMAN. If we translated some of those things the Executive says into action, we would not even need Congress in session.

Mr. MACIEJEWSKI. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MACIEJEWSKI. Is it necessary to house these men that we are taking into the Army by this appropriation?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. No. This is not Army enlisted personnel. Let me reiterate what was said by the gentleman from Texas when the conference report was agreed to. The housing provided for in this resolution is principally for civilian workers in war industries, where they are building plants and expanding plants at places where there is not sufficient housing to take care of the civilian workers who work in those plants. A relatively small portion of it may be used for the housing of families of enlisted men at Army and Navy posts, but the major part of it is for the housing of civilian workers.

Mr. HOLMES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOLMES. In connection with the defense program at these industrial plants, quite frequently we find that the Army and Navy may have to designate an officer to stay right there at the works for inspection purposes and to see to it that the Government's interests are protected.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. HOLMES. Is it not well to emphasize the fact, and I think it should be brought out so the membership know it, that while these appropriations are made available to the Public Works Division, it in no way augments the W. P. A. in any sense of the word?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. No. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. HOLMES. This is purely and entirely a different project. The construction of these units will be let on a basis of carefully drawn plans and specifications?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. HOLMES. And lay-outs, and no doubt will be done by contracts so the mechanics will get the benefit of that work?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Will the gentleman explain the amount of $40,000 that is appropriated to the Department of Agriculture? While the amount is not large, it is the type of appropriation that we should know a little bit more about.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The Congress amended the Commodity Exchange Act by the passage of H. R. 4088, which has just been sent to the President. By that amendment it brought under the provisions of the Commodity Exchange Act new commodities, namely, fats and oils—including lard, tallow, cottonseed oil, peanut oil, soybean oil, and all other fats and oils—cottonseed meal, cottonseed, peanuts, soybeans and soybean meal. Hides were also in H. R. 4088 at one time, but were omitted in conference; so the Budget estimate of $90,000 for the additional administration of the Commodity Exchange Act was curtailed to $66,590 by the elimination of hides. The Appropriations Committee in passing this bill cut the $66,590 to $40,000.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. In building homes for these civilian workers has the committee that has decided on the location of these particular plants tried to keep in mind where they locate the plants and that they might do so where there are already housing facilities to take care of employees at manufacturing plants, where the Government could use plants already constructed. If they gave a little time to investigate practical places to do emergency work, thereby saving the construction of a lot of houses now under this bill, that would not be necessary.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. They have taken that into consideration, I may say to the gentleman.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. May I ask the gentleman why it is necessary in connection with this particular project to make it possible to suspend competitive bidding? It seems to me that is a protection, particularly for small contractors. I just wondered why, in connection with this housing, it had to be suspended. I can understand it in other cases.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. This housing is for men working in defense plants. If you had to draw plans and specifications, and go through the routine, formality, and red tape of the provisions of the law in that respect you would delay it several months, and winter is approaching. We were told they would follow the competitive practice where it could be done and not delay the defense program. These are very simple mass-production houses. Admiral Moreell, of the Navy; Major Wilson, of the Army; as well as Mr. Reynolds, of the Federal Works Agency, say they can save money and expedite this housing by being relieved of competitive bidding. The authorization bill just passed permits that to be done.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, to be perfectly frank with the House, I do not know whether this appropriation of $150,000,000 is necessary or not. I do not know that it is not necessary, therefore I am not going to oppose it. I have tried to find out about it the best I can, and these are the facts as I get them.

They are proposing to build under the Advisory Commission to the Council for National Defense and under Mr. Reynolds, of the Public Buildings Division of the Public Works Administration, about 80,000 units of housing for either Army and Navy enlisted men of the three top grades or for workers in these defense plants or navy yards in connection with the building of guns, ammunition, ships, and all that sort of thing that is necessary in connection with national defense. These houses are to be rented at from $15 to $20 a month. The average cost of the set-up, including such facilities as waterworks, sewers, streets, and such roads as may be put in, will be approximately $3,500 per rental unit.

It is perfectly apparent that a rental of $15 to $20 a month is only going to cover the depreciation on these properties, with nothing for interest and nothing for obsolescence. We all know that the period these houses will be used will not be very long. Five years would be a peak, and perhaps 2 or perhaps 1 year would be the period of their use. Therefore, it means that this expenditure, which runs $150,000,000 under this proposition and $140,000,000 in addition under a previous appropriation of $100,000,000, and an allocation by the Federal Housing Authority of $40,000,000, is undoubtedly a nonrecoverable item in connection with the national-defense program. Undoubtedly we must have housing for the families of the three top grades of enlisted men in both the Army and in the Navy. As I understand, that takes up about half of the housing units that are to be provided. The other half is for civilian workers in the navy yards, the arsenals, the powder plants, the aluminum plants, and the airplane plants that are to be engaged and that are engaged on war work. We are told that they would require altogether 160,000 units. The number provided by this $290,000,000 is about 80,000 units, a small number of which will cost more than the average of $3,500 because they are in isolated places where the labor has to be carried in. Frankly, it is a rather expensive and extravagant program, but I am not able to say that it is not necessary, therefore I do not propose to oppose it.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. With reference to these houses at the various plants engaged in preparation for war, does the Government intend to rent these houses or does it expect to give them to the workers if they will come to the plants and accept the jobs?

Mr. TABER. They evidently intend to rent them for from $15 to $20 a month, because that was the set-up provided for according to the testimony given before us yesterday in our hearings.

Mr. RICH. When this preparation for war is concluded, what will they do with these plants and the houses when we find out that we are going to get into war or that we are not going to get into war?

Mr. TABER. Those that are not required for any particular governmental purposes will undoubtedly be sold or salvaged in some way or other by the Government, just as we did before.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LANHAM. I may say that that is the provision in the bill upon which this appropriation measure is predicated, that these are to be disposed of when the time has passed making their use necessary by the Government.

Mr. RICH. Does the gentleman believe we are actually preparing for a war?

Mr. LANHAM. What we are preparing to do is defend this country against any aggression on our shores. Certainly, matériel is a very important part of that preparation. This appropriation is designed primarily to house the workers who will be preparing that matériel.

Mr. RICH. I realize that everybody wants national defense, but does the gentleman have any idea that anything will develop from the situation we see in Europe and Asia now whereby somebody in this country will want us to defend our rights here by sending boys over to Europe or Asia?

Mr. LANHAM. I hope not, but I am neither a seer nor a prophet. When it comes to the proposition of a declaration of war, that is peculiarly within the province of the Congress itself and would come before us for determination if such an exigency should arise.

Mr. RICH. Perhaps the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] can answer that question. Does the gentleman believe from all the evidence that has been given in these hearings that there is anyone in this country who has the idea that eventually we must send boys over to Europe to defend America?

Mr. TABER. I would not want to say there is anyone who believes we would have to send boys over to Europe or to Asia to defend America. I would say that although there may be considerable waste, and there always is in connection with war activities and preparation for war, we stand a great deal less chance of getting into war if we are in shape to defend ourselves than if we are flat. That is the position I take, and that is why I am not opposing this request.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I am a member of the committee which reported this New Deal socialistic government in the housing-business program which has been clothed in the robes of national defense. I opposed it then and I am opposed to it now. This program is an unwarranted raid on our almost bankrupt Federal Treasury to the tune of $150,000,000 under cover of a national-defense smoke screen. Is it not a fact that a Government Treasury which is not bankrupt or almost bankrupt is one of the most essential requirements for national defense?

Mr. TABER. Undoubtedly it is, and undoubtedly our Treasury is in a precarious position, with the tremendous bond issues that have been made and into which the people have been obliged to put the money that should be used to keep the wheels of industry turning and to make the mare go and provide employment. If it were not for that terrific build-up and for the lack of confidence people have in the administration, there undoubtedly would be very considerable employment, which would result in not only larger income taxes but a very much smaller demand for relief.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. In view of the fact that our Federal Treasury, after 7 long years of New Deal maladministration and spending spree on public money is almost bankrupt, would it not be in the interest of national defense to save this $150,000,000 and require that $10 to $15 a day navy yard and other defense workers who are unable to rent homes for their families near their places of employment, to leave their families in the homes in which they are now residing, just as we require the $30-a-month drafted men and members of the National Guard who are called into Federal service to leave their families home when they have to leave them and learn to goose-step in Fuehrer Roosevelt's New Deal Stalin-Hitler type of conscript army?

Mr. TABER. I would not want to answer that question. I believe there is enough of a case made for the requirement of proper housing for the folks who have to work in the neighborhood of these defense requirements that I would not want to oppose the bill.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. There is one more question I would like to ask the gentleman. The chairman of our committee which reported the $150,000,000 Government housing authorization, which I opposed, stated that this Government housing program was necessary in order to produce the essential material for national defense, did he not?

Mr. TABER. I understood that, but I do not know whether he did or not. I would not say.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Let us look at the facts. You observed in the press this morning, October 8, 1940, that our New Deal brethren have sold Canada, a foreign belligerent nation, 137 of our wholly inadequate supply of army tanks. Our New Deal brethren have also sold a foreign belligerent nation about one-seventh of our wholly inadequate Navy. They have also stripped and sold essential portions of our whole inadequate aviation arm of our national defense to a foreign belligerent nation which has also purchased most of Uncle Sam's reserve artillery, rifles, and munitions of war. In the last week of August of this year many units of the National Guard which were called into active training did not have sufficient equipment because our New Deal brethren had stripped our country's national-defense machine and sold many essential portions of it to a European belligerent country. They had to use old rustry farm-implement wheels on which were mounted planks for artillery practice. Many had to use fish poles, broomsticks, and old crutches for rifle training, because our New Deal brethren had sold many thousands of our Government's rifles to the British. They did not have sufficient tanks and had to use old auto trucks for tank training. They had to use old logs and fence posts for trench-mortar training. In view of the record do you not think that insofar as our New Deal brethren being in favor of national defense is concerned, Uncle Sam finds himself in the same position as Isaac of old who said "the voice is Jacob's voice, but the hands are the hands of Esau."

Mr. TABER. I gather from what the gentleman says that the thing the New Deal is training the soldiers in is how to operate a manure spreader.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. No; our New Deal brethren have sold so much of Uncle Sam's artillery to a foreign belligerent European nation that many of the members of the National Guard who were called into training in the last week of August 1940 had no artillery for artillery practice and training. At Camp Douglas, Wis., members of the Michigan and Wisconsin National Guard were furnished with artillery designed by New Deal brain trusters. They were given artillery training with New Deal guns which consisted of planks mounted on old manure spreaders and other old farm implement wheels. They were given trench-mortar training with fence posts instead of trench mortars.

Although our New Deal brethren have stripped Uncle Sam's national-defense machine and sold many essential portions of it to a foreign European belligerent nation they have the gall to raid our almost bankrupt Federal Treasury of $150,000,000 for a socialistic Government housing program in the name of national defense.

Mr. TABER. I had supposed the National Guard all had rifles and artillery.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOLMES. I want to make this observation and as a member of the Appropriations Committee the gentleman can correct me if I am wrong. Up to the present time we have practically appropriated about $14,000,000,000 for national defense.

Mr. TABER. Including the billion and a half that came out of the R. F. C. to provide loans for war industries and loans to South America, I would say it ran somewhere around $12,000,000,000.

Mr. HOLMES. As a matter of fact, with these huge appropriations, we have asked private industry to expand the manufacture of implements of war, and we all note the expansion of the airplane-manufacturing industry, and as we go along our various coasts we see the expansion of our navy yards and private shipbuilding yards manufacturing these boats that the Navy has contracted for, and we also see the tremendous number of men the United States Government is asking and urging to go into the employment of the Federal Government at the various yards and arsenals, and so forth. And is there not an obligation on the part of the Congress, insofar as it possibly can, to make it possible for the men working in these industries to live in the community where these goods are manufactured for the Government?

Mr. TABER. We are not going to get men to work in the factories, or in the shipyards, or any of these establishments unless they are able to find a place to live in that territory.

Mr. HOLMES. In other words, we have to have a housing program.

Mr. TABER. It is just as important to house one group as another. Of course, in connection with this program, we are told by the Advisory Commission to the Council of National Defense that approximately 80,000 of these housing units are to be provided by private industry.

Mr. HOLMES. I was just going to make that observation.

Mr. TABER. I understand that is so.

Mr. HOLMES. And as far as the Administrator is concerned, following the purport and intent of the legislation, we were assured that insofar as humanly possible the Administrator would try to utilize private capital in connection with this building program, especially in congested areas where the type of construction has to be more or less of a permanent nature which will still exist after the emergency has passed.

So we have a different type of housing. It was suggested to us by those who came before our committee representing the workers, when they were asked what was the fair rent on these houses averaging $3,000, that $25 or $30 a month would be about right.

Mr. TABER. I think that is so, but that is not what they intend charging them, according to the information we were furnished yesterday. They intend charging them $15 or $20 a month. Frankly, I do not think that is fair. I think they ought to be prepared to pay at least $35 a month for a housing unit that costs $3,500.

Mr. HOLMES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. HOLMES. We may go out in some isolated spot and build four or five thousand houses in connection with a powder plant and the average cost will be $1,500 or $1,800 or $2,000 per unit. You would not say that $35 a month would be a fair charge for that type of house.

Mr. TABER. Not for a unit that only cost $1,500, of course, but if it cost $3,500 I would say so.

Mr. HOLMES. This makes it possible for the Administrator to determine on the value of the cost of the project.

Mr. TABER. That is true.

Mr. HINSHAW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. HINSHAW. I would like to ask the gentleman two or three questions. In the first place, do I understand him to say that the rentals fixed on these properties for civilian use will not be based on a competitive figure, but on some figure set up by some administration?

Mr. TABER. I do not believe they can be based on a competitive figure, but they should be as near as possible to what people have to charge to break even on private operations. If they are not, they are going to be a menace to the building industry everywhere.

Mr. HINSHAW. The reason I asked that question is because I have one of the large industries in my district and recently there have been hundreds and hundreds of new small homes built on vacant property around those industries and sold on some kind of an F. H. A. basis for $2,950 and figures approximating that, with a very small down payment. Now, if this housing is going to compete with those houses the workers who have bought those houses at $2,950 and who pay $30 a month are going to find that the values have considerably decreased, I should think. Would the gentleman comment on that?

Mr. TABER. I do not think that this housing program should compete with private industry in that way. I do not think it is fair. It is destructive.

Mr. HINSHAW. This competes with the F. H. A.

Mr. TABER. It should not. I do not know whether it will or not. I hope it will not, but I have no assurance from anyone that it will not.

Mr. LANHAM. Will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. LANHAM. I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that in the Senate amendment there was this provision about a finding with reference to the necessity for housing, "but such finding shall not be made until notice shall be given to the Federal Housing Administration of the proposed construction, stating the number of units proposed and the areas in which they are to be located." That was stricken from the bill in the conference report by reason of the fact that in section 8 of the bill the Administrator is authorized to act through any of these various agencies and there was no reason to name one of them and give it that priority. There is no disposition, according to the information before us, to seek to interfere in any way with those who build or those who own private dwellings, but necessarily no exact standard of rentals could be fixed when the structures would vary in character in different localities.

Mr. HINSHAW. Knowing the gentleman as we do in the House, we know he would not want to see defense housing placed in a position to defeat the purposes of the F. H. A., through competition.

Mr. LANHAM. That is true.

Mr. HINSHAW. If the gentleman can assure us that this will not be the case, then I shall be delighted and very much relieved.

Mr. HOLMES. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. HOLMES. As a matter of fact, does not this legislation open up a wider avenue for cooperation with the Federal Housing Administration?

Mr. LANHAM. That is my understanding of the measure. As a matter of fact, when the emergency has passed there will be a great many people who will be able to buy these homes and carry on. There is certainly no intention to have competition, because it is the purpose to use all private housing wherever it is available, and to supplement that with these appropriations where it is not available. But the rental will necessarily have to depend upon the character of the building and the location of the building, and it would make for lack of harmony if a monkey wrench were thrown into the machinery by placing very low rentals that were not reasonable.

Mr. HINSHAW. The gentleman assures us that arbitrary rentals will not be placed upon this property in such a way that it will tend to defeat the F. H. A. program in small housing?

Mr. LANHAM. Those who appeared before our committee told us that if they did anything like that it would make for a lack of harmony in carrying out this program and that harmony was absolutely essential, and that they would avoid every circumstance of that kind that they possibly could.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RICH. Where you build these plants which are temporary plants, for the purpose of supplying war munitions today, it is not like it was 20 years ago when you had to have a house right alongside of the plant.

Everybody today has an automobile and he can travel 25 miles to reach the plant, if necessary, without great inconvenience. If the industrial plant is of temporary construction, for instance, for the purpose of making war munitions for this emergency, is it necessary to locate these plants so that we are forced into the construction of a lot of these houses?

Mr. LANHAM. I will say to the gentleman that houses will be built upon the basis of need. This program is going to be carried out according to the need of the circumstances.

Mr. RICH. Will the chairman guarantee that we are not going to waste money that way?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, there was one thing in the testimony before the committee that I had overlooked but which I believe should be called to the attention of the Members. There was testimony to the effect that where these workers were housed the rental would be approximately 20 percent of the wage they received. This, to a certain extent, would be a safeguard, because most of these fellows will receive in the neighborhood of $35 a week, as I understand it. This would mean a rental of somewhere around $30 a month.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. BENDER. I would like to make a brief observation if the gentleman will be kind enough to give me a little time.

Mr. TABER. Would the gentleman rather have time in his own right? I will yield to him in a minute.

Mr. BENDER. If the gentleman will.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield for one question.

Mr. STEFAN. We have heard considerable discussion on the floor concerning the terrible economic problem that will face this country after this is all over. In the hearings on this bill did the committee give some thought in the $500,000,000 construction program as to whether the houses would be an entire waste, that there would be something we could use for the economic recovery which will be necessary after this war scare is over?

Mr. TABER. In the case of any houses that had to be abandoned the salvage would not go very far, nor would they go very far toward providing permanent housing.

Mr. STEFAN. Then it will represent a waste after a while.

Mr. TABER. It is mostly a washout, this $300,000,000 we are providing. The total amount we have provided already with this item, for housing of one kind and another for the Army and Navy within the last few weeks runs somewhere around $756,000,000. There was $128,000,000 for housing for the National Guard; $338,000,000 for housing for the drafted troops; and approximately $140,000,000 on the appropriation that went through a couple of weeks ago; and $150,000,000 now. This makes a total of approximately $756,000,000.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Does the gentleman have any idea how the Congress might safeguard these funds so that we would not have any repetition of the experience we had with housing under the Tennessee Valley Authority?

Mr. TABER. I do not know whether anything can be done to prevent the repetition of such experience or not. I criticized these people yesterday because one of these outfits specified that the pine to be used in that particular construction had to be of a certain kind. That kind grew in a single State. The result was that it shot the market for that particular type of pine all out of sight.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York reserves the balance of his time.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, in my own State of Ohio the recent census figures reveal that the New Deal is creating many ghost cities. Population has decreased during the last 10-year period in many industrial centers. What concerns me is that we are erecting these alleged national-defense plants far from industrial centers, thereby creating a greater problem and then spending the taxpayers' money to build new houses where there are plenty of houses in these industrial centers now.

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, there are about half a dozen resolutions pending before the Committee on Rules for the appointment of committees to investigate expenditures by the War and Navy Departments. Personally, having the utmost confidence in the Appropriations Committee, especially its chairman, and the chairmen of its subcommittees, and in view of the further fact that we have the Bureau of the Budget and a Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, the Committee on Rules has felt it unnecessary or untimely at this time to act favorably on these resolutions, looking to appointment of investigating committees. I feel, however, that the Appropriations Committee will, as was promised me, explore very carefully when representatives of the departments request appropriations for national defense. I shall not say anything more on the matter at this time.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] has again questioned the gentleman from Virginia as to the increased cost of housing, and is alarmed that the Government, or contractors, again will be precluded from hiring nonunion, or what is generally known as scab labor. Day after day, he unjustifiably attacks labor, and he fears that the cost of preparedness will increase—even retard proper preparedness—by the action of labor unions. He does not, however, pay any attention to the fact that such organizations as the United States Chamber of Commerce, the National Manufacturers' Association, and others, have strong and very aggressive organizations to protect and promote their interests. Those employed in construction work invariably work but 5 or 6 months a year. Their wages, consequently, must be a little higher than if their employment were regular. I think they are entitled to higher wages when they work so they may live properly in enforced idleness. I hope, therefore, that in the future the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] will give some critical attention to these manufacturers and industrialists in whose welfare he is so vitally interested, fearing that their profits may be reduced. I say to him that they have made more money than ever before in the history of America. Some of these concerns have increased their profits all the way from 30 to 600 percent in the last 6 months, or during the last year. This I have shown in my remarks appearing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of September 19, wherein I set forth the following table:

	Net profits for first 6 months, 1933	Net profits for first 6 months, 1940	Percent increase
General Electric	$5,953,605	$25,871,572	334
United Fruit	5,073,000	9,379,000	85
Republic Steel Co	2,929,019	6,449,453	120
Atlantic Refining Co	1,002,000	5,256,000	425
Libby-Owens-Ford Glass	2,157,083	5,176,748	140
Caterpillar Tractor	470,765	3,509,514	646
American Brake Shoe & Foundry Co	241,486	1,266,636	425
Beech-Nut Packing Co	744,487	1,461,018	96
Kimberly-Clark Corporation	311,511	1,373,651	340
Container Corporation of America	240,177	1,128,735	369
Hanna (M. A.) Co	394,909	1,104,307	179
Eaton Manufacturing Co	31,253	1,903,348	6,054
Borg-Warner Corporation	335,172	2,830,983	747
General Cigar	441,058	574,068	30

These companies have increased their profits inordinately, but the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] pays no attention to that. It does not interest him. He has depreciating interest in a wage earner who might earn a few dollars more than he has heretofore, but no more than that to which he is entitled and actually needs for himself and his family.

Mr. FULMER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. FULMER. Is it not a fact that all of these industries that the gentleman is apparently so interested in when he speaks about wage earners and their organizations, are all hog-tied in an organization or association of which they are members, and in which they thresh out all of their problems, formulate rules and regulations governing production, distribution, and actually fix prices?

Mr. SABATH. Does the gentleman mean the members of the chamber of commerce and the National Manufacturers' Association?

Mr. FULMER. All of these manufacturers.

Mr. SABATH. Why, yes. The small relative amount that a wage earner receives in comparison with what these corporations receive is infinitesimal; and I am sorry that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] takes so much time making these unfair statements.

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, as to the pending appropriation bill, I do not want to be misunderstood. I think the appropriation is needed and the bill should be passed. As I stated heretofore, I have complete confidence in the Appropriations Committee. However, having had experience during the last World War, and having observed very closely some of the then existing practices, I shall endeavor, to the best of my ability, to be kept informed how the money is expended, to see whether or not real economy is practiced, and whether or not favoritism is shown. Later on the Appropriations Committee will have sufficient time to carefully question each and every representative of a department who appears before it asking for additional money or authority.

Mr. HOLMES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOLMES. I think the gentleman is touching on a very sensible suggestion, and I want to give him one concrete example to work on right away. The National Guard of Massachusetts has been called out. According to the President, they are going to be housed at Cape Cod. I have been informed that a dredging contractor from California has been given the contract to build those barracks and he has never built a building in his life.

Mr. SABATH. I have been reliably informed that in my own State three or four contracts for these large construction projects amounting to many millions of dollars have been awarded to New York contractors.

Mr. Chairman, as I have said before I know that in Illinois we have many well-qualified, competent contractors and builders who are more than anxious to serve the Government honestly, faithfully, and economically. Ordinarily, all departments are required by law to award contracts to the lowest, responsible bidders and to require each successful bidder to post an adequate performance bond, but this construction work has been and is being awarded on a negotiated-fee-contract basis. Due to the present emergency, I do not find fault with this practice, but I fear there is discrimination.

When we consult the Army and the Navy, we are assured it is the practice to award contracts to those qualified in the locality of the projects; yet what actually happens is, as pointed out by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOLMES], that a contractor from California is given an award for work in Massachusetts, and a contractor from, say, New York comes to my own State of Illinois to do this Government work, while both Massachusetts and Illinois have competent contractors to do all such Government work.

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, for the purposes enumerated:

FEDERAL WORKS AGENCY

National-defense housing: To enable the Federal Works Administrator to carry out the purposes of the act entitled "An act to expedite the provision of housing in connection with national defense, and for other purposes," H. R. 10412, as enacted into law during the Seventy-sixth Congress, $75,000,000, to be expended in accordance with the provisions of such act, to remain available until expended, and to be available for all necessary administrative expenses for the purposes hereof, including personal services and rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, printing and binding, and purchase, repair, operation, and maintenance of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles; and in addition to such appropriation, authority is granted to enter into contracts or otherwise to incur obligations for the above purposes in amounts not to exceed in the aggregate $75,000,000: Provided, That in no case under the foregoing appropriation or contractual authorization shall the fixed fee to be paid the contractor under any contract entered into without reference to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes of the United States on a cost-plus-a-fixed-fee basis exceed 6 percent of the estimated cost of the contract, exclusive of the fee, as determined by the Administrator or the head of such Federal agency through which he may act: Provided further, That the fact that a contract is entered into under the provisions of the above-mentioned act without reference to section 3707 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall not be construed to render inapplicable the provisions of the act of March 3, 1931, as amended by the act of August 30, 1935 (49 Stat. 1011; U. S. C., title 40, sec. 276 (a)), or the provisions of the act of June 30, 1936 (49 Stat. 2036; U. S. C., title 41, secs. 35–45), to any contract to which the provisions of either or both of such acts would otherwise apply.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, on page 2, line 22, the "3707" should be "3709." That is a typographical error and I ask unanimous consent that it may be corrected.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin: On page 1, line 7, strike out "National-defense."

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, coming from a great industrial center that has shown a decrease in population in the last decade, I am very much concerned with the direction in which we are moving in this country. Cleveland has shown a decrease in population, as have Akron and Youngstown; in fact, practically every large industrial center in the country has either remained static or has shown a decrease in population.

I know that the stoppage of immigration in 1924 had something to do with this situation. I know, too, that during the last 10 years, with two families living under one roof, the growth of families has naturally not been as great as was true previously. It is extremely important to call to your attention the fact that because private enterprise has been discouraged and has been in the dog house during the reign of the New Deal many of our people have moved from these large centers, thereby causing this decrease in population. Now we are erecting national-defense plants far removed from present industrial centers.

It seems to me we might have planned a little better in establishing more of these industries in the centers where no housing problem exists. I know there are some national-defense industries which cannot be located in the large centers, for example the shipbuilding industry, but there are many more industries that could be established in these large centers, rather than separating families and uprooting homes as will be uprooted when we transplant these industries to other parts of the country.

I am greatly concerned with the wastefulness of this whole program. We have wasted so much money during the last 7 years that it ill behooves us in the name of national defense to go on with our Government's ruinous and wasteful policy.

The Baltimore Sun, a Democratic newspaper, last Sunday showed that the Federal jobholders in 1933 numbered 572,091, and that we now have 1,023,341 Federal employees. In other words, about the only city where there has been a substantial increase in population, apart from Los Angeles and certain towns in Florida, is Washington, D. C., while our great industrial centers upon which the prosperity of our Nation depends, along with the prosperity of agriculture, have lost in population. Now, in the name of national defense we are traveling the same road we have traveled the past 7 years and that has only created great trouble for all of us in this country. Our unemployment situation has not improved in America, even in the face of all the New Deal experiments. The forgotten man, of whom we heard so much in 1933, has never been remembered. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Enforcement of the Commodity Exchange Act: For an additional amount to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the Commodity Exchange Act, as amended (7 U. S. C. 1–17a), and as further amended by the Act entitled "An act to amend the Commodity Exchange Act, as amended, to extend its provisions to fats and oils, cottonseed, cottonseed meal, and peanuts," H. R. 4088, as enacted into law during the Seventy-sixth Congress, $40,000.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House, with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BEAM, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee having had under consideration the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 614) making an additional appropriation for national-defense housing for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendment to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is not a quorum present.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 311 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

CHICKAMAUGA AND CHATTANOOGA NATIONAL MILITARY PARK

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 8512) to provide for the acquisition of additional lands for the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park, and for other purposes, and agree to the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 2, line 8, after "appropriated", insert "a sum not to exceed $125,000."

Page 2, lines 9 and 10, strike out "such sums as the Congress may from time to time determine."

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain just what the amendments do?

Mr. HILL. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER] will explain the amendments.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, the bill passed the House without any limitation on the amount which might be appropriated thereunder being contained in the bill and the Senate fixed a limitation on the amount which might hereafter be appropriated by the Congress. So the effect of the amendment is to limit the bill to less than what was contained in the House action. I spoke to the gentleman from Michigan about the bill some little time ago.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. TABER. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. TARVER. I do not know, of course, the basis of the gentleman's objection, but the effect of the amendment which was proposed in the Senate is one of economy, which I know the gentleman strongly favors. The House action was had without the placing of any limitation on the amount or the authorization whatever, whereas the Senate action imposes limitations.

Mr. TABER. How much of a limitation?

Mr. TARVER. One hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars.

Mr. TABER. That is quite liberal.

Mr. TARVER. May I say to the gentleman that the bill involves the acquisition of certain designated lots of land which were originally within the limits of the Chickamauga-Chattanooga National Military Park. The amount of the limitation is reasonable, the land can be acquired within the limitations imposed by the Senate amendment and it certainly seems to me there ought not to be any valid ground for objection.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HILL. The House bill, as it passed the House originally, had no limitation, and now the Senate bill has a limitation and I do not see any valid ground for the gentleman's objection.

Mr. TABER. If the gentleman would accept an amendment reducing the $125,000 limitation to $25,000, I think it might be in order.

Mr. TARVER. May I say to the gentleman that the land in question could not be bought for $25,000. The gentleman, together with other Members of the House, permitted the bill to pass the House with no limitation whatever upon the amount which might be appropriated under the unanimous-consent rule, and it certainly seems to me there ought not to be any objection to the placing of a limitation upon what was heretofore unlimited when the House acted.

Mr. TABER. What appeals to me is this: $125,000 is a very liberal figure, and if the request should be changed so that the limitation were reduced to $25,000 I would not feel obliged to object, but if it is to be $125,000 I think I should feel obliged to object.

Mr. TARVER. Of course, the gentleman understands that the effect of his request would be to defeat the purpose of the bill. If the gentleman entertains the conclusion that he must object unless the very reasonable limitation placed in the bill by the Senate is reduced, then I know of nothing we can do except to permit the gentleman to exercise that privilege of objecting; but I think it is a very unreasonable position for the gentleman to take, because he permitted the bill to pass the House without objection when his objection could have killed it, when no limitation whatever upon the amount to be appropriated was in the bill, and he now objects to a Senate amendment which proposes a definite limitation.

Mr. TABER. Of course, I have been tied up on committee a great deal and have not always been able to be present when bills were called up by unanimous consent, and many times they go through without limitations that should be in.

Mr. TARVER. May I say this to the gentleman before he makes his objection, that in the event the gentleman objects to the concurrence of the House in the Senate amendment, the probable effect will be that the Senate will recede from its amendment and thereby leave the bill without any limitation whatever. It is just a question for the gentleman to determine as to whether he wants a reasonable limitation or whether he wants no limitation at all.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and eighty-seven Members are present; not a quorum.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. COOPER. I moved it, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken; and, on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER), there were—ayes 99 and noes 75.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is not required to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 222, nays 76, not voting 131, as follows:

VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—EVYLINE VAUGHN (H. DOC. NO. 965)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I am returning without my approval the bill (H. R. 5400) entitled "For the relief of those rendering medical and hospital services to Evyline Vaughn."

The bill proposes to provide for the payment of bills for medical services and hospitalization of Evyline Vaughn, a child 8 years of age, who was injured as a result of being struck by an automobile belonging to the Forest Service.

It appears that Evyline Vaughn was hanging to the rear of a wagon proceeding in a direction opposite to that in which the Government vehicle was being driven at the time of the accident, which took place on April 25, 1938, in Clarksville, Ark. A pedestrian called to the little girl to leave the wagon and return to the sidewalk; whereupon the little girl jumped from the wagon just as it was passing the Government automobile. She ran directly in front of the Government vehicle and was struck by the bumper and knocked down. It is not disputed that the driver of the Government vehicle was traveling at a low rate of speed and in a careful and prudent manner, and was unable to see the child before she jumped from the wagon. Clearly no fault attaches to the driver of the Government vehicle.

This circumstance is apparently recognized in the fact that the bill does not propose to make any compensation to the little girl for the personal injuries which she sustained, although she was rendered partly lame as a result of the lamentable occurrence. The legislation merely proposes to provide for the direct payment of the bills of the doctors who attended her and of the hospital where she received attention. Obviously the Government would not be liable in this instance as a matter of law, even if it waived its immunity from suit in tort. Similarly, it is difficult to discern any moral obligation on the part of the Government under the circumstances, and therefore no reason is perceived why the Government should undertake to pay the doctors and the hospital who rendered services to the child.

While this regrettable accident is to be deplored and the little girl is entitled to our sympathy, I am unable to find sufficient reason why the Government should assume the obligation to pay the bills referred to in this legislation.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, October 8, 1940.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal.

FLOOD CONTROL IN THE CONNECTICUT RIVER BASIN

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4362) to provide for the completion of certain local protection works at East Hartford, Conn.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain what this bill is and how much money will be taken from our almost bankrupt Federal Treasury if we pass it?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I shall be pleased to explain the bill.

Mr. Speaker, this is a bill which authorizes the appropriation of $1,640,000 for flood protection at East Hartford, Conn. Under the Flood Control Act of 1938 provision was made for local protective works at Hartford, East Hartford, and other cities along the Connecticut River. After the work was in progress the Chief of Engineers reported that because of the extension of the project it would be necessary to increase the authorization by approximately $1,600,000, and he made a favorable report for the increase of the authorization so as to provide protection of additional territory at East Hartford, Conn. Among other areas to be protected is that in which are located three large aircraft plants in which aircraft engines and airplanes are produced. Recently, Mr. Knudsen of the Defense Commission visited the area, and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] was advised by Mr. Knudsen and by the President of the United States, and by Mr. Carmody, the Administrator of the Public Works Agency, that this was an emergency flood-control project and they recommended the enactment of this bill. I may also state that this project was embraced in the flood-control bill reported by the Committee on Flood Control on May 7. That bill has not been considered by the House because a river and harbor bill was vetoed by the President. This pending measure is said to be an emergency bill. A separate measure was introduced in the House by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER], and in the Senate by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY]. The bill passed the Senate and has been favorably reported by the House Flood Control Committee. The project is recommended by the Chief of Engineers, by the Defense Commission, and is requested by the President of the United States as an emergency flood-control project in the aid of national defense.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Then this is an emergency flood-control proposition to conserve and protect the lives of our countrymen, as well as an emergency national-defense proposition. I therefore believe that the gentleman's bill should be passed, and I am glad that he has explained it in such a fine manner. [Applause.]

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER], appeared before the Appropriations Subcommittee for the War Department, when we were considering the civil-functions bill, and both there and at other times in explanation of his project has convinced the members of that subcommittee that this is one of the most outstandingly meritorious projects of flood control.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. It is fair to say in this connection also that the river and harbor bill which was acted on yesterday originally contained this item, but because it was a flood-control project, rather than a river and harbor project, it was stricken from that bill.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I am glad the committee is reporting the bill today.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Yes; I am pleased to yield to the distinguished gentleman from California.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I might add further that this bill, as stated by the chairman, was considered at an extensive hearing of the Flood Control Committee. It was considered as one of the important projects and is in the flood-control bill that has not yet been taken up by the House.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. And it is only taken up at this time, so far as the chairman is concerned, at the request of the Commander in Chief of our Army and Navy and at the request of Mr. Knudsen of the National Defense Commission, and of Mr. Carmody of the Public Works agency.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. I said yesterday I wanted to thank the members of the Rivers and Harbors Committee for their help, and I would not let this matter close without expressing my appreciation to the members of the Committee on Flood Control for their activity and willingness to consider this as a separate bill due to the effect it might have on the approaches to the Pratt & Whitney plant particularly. And I would like to call the attention of the Members to the fact that on page 561 of the hearings on the supplementary civil functions appropriation bill will be found a letter from the president of the United Aircraft Corporation saying that the plant was closed for 7 days during the last two floods; that the work to be done as a result of this additional authorization will close the only gap that threatens to close this factory. If this plant were shut for 1 week it would mean the loss of 750 engines during that time.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. I think the RECORD ought to show that the only reason the conferees took this item out of the river and harbor bill was not because the project was without merit but because it did not belong in that bill but properly belonged to the gentleman's committee—and for that reason only.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I made that statement a few minutes ago, and it is correct.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the comprehensive plan for flood control in the Connecticut River Basin provided for in the act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes," approved June 28, 1938, is hereby modified to include the local protection works at East Hartford, Conn., recommended by the Chief of Engineers in House Document No. 653, Seventy-sixth Congress, third session; and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the completion of the said works the sum of $1,640,000.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

STATE AID TO FLOOD-CONTROL PROJECTS

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3612) to authorize the Secretary of War to accept, as loans, from States and political subdivisions thereof, funds to be immediately used in the prosecution of authorized flood-control work, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON]?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman from California [Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT], the ranking member of the committee, is present. Is this agreeable to him?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. It is.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I think it is fair to make a statement. Under existing law in river and harbor works where there are local contributions, the local sponsors are permitted to make advances to the War Department for the prosecution of the work, to be subsequently repaid out of appropriations for those projects without interest.

The Chief of Engineers recommended a similar law with respect to flood-control projects and in the flood-control bill that our committee has reported to the House but which the House has not considered, there is a section that provides for the receipt of advances by the War Department from local interests, so that the law with respect to flood control may be identical with that which is now the law with respect to rivers and harbors.

This bill is brought up at this time because in the case of Cincinnati, Ohio, where there is an important flood-control project, and an authorization was made under the act of 1938, a rather large contribution was made by the city of Cincinnati. There was a bond issue, and it has been stated to the Committee on Flood Control that the authority to issue bonds will expire before Congress convenes in January 1941. So this bill merely authorizes that which is presently in effect with respect to river and harbor projects. The bill has been recommended by the Chief of Engineers, it has passed the Senate, and it has been recommended by the Committee on Flood Control.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. In response to the inquiry made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER], I may say that this bill was considered by the Flood Control Committee and it was considered an emergency matter.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. It does not authorize a single cent. It does not appropriate a dollar now or in the future. It merely amends existing law to put flood-control projects on a parity with river and harbor projects.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I may say further that this has the unanimous report of the Committee on Flood Control. It also has the unanimous support of the minority members of the Flood Control Committee.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. In view of the fact there is no opposition to this, and that it is very meritorious, may I say, on behalf of the people who live in Ohio, that we thank the gentleman for his kindness and may I announce at the same time that Cincinnati won the pennant.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. As chairman of the Committee on Flood Control, I regret exceedingly that the flood-control bill reported to this House has not been considered during the present session. There are other projects which are emergency propositions, and it is my purpose in the next Congress to bring that bill up for consideration as early as possible.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON]?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever any State or political subdivision thereof shall offer to advance funds for a flood-control project duly adopted and authorized by law the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, receive such funds and expend the same in the immediate prosecution of such work. The Secretary of War is authorized and directed to repay without interest, from appropriations which may be provided by Congress for flood-control work, the moneys so contributed and expended: Provided, however, That no repayment of funds which may be contributed for the purpose of meeting any conditions of local cooperation imposed by Congress, or under the authority of section 5 of the Flood Control Act approved June 22, 1936, as amended, shall be made.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TRANSPORTATION OF STOLEN ANIMALS IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3786) to provide for the punishment of persons transporting stolen animals in interstate commerce, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Utah [Mr. MURDOCK]?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman state the situation?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Speaker, this bill has passed the Congress twice. It has recently passed the Senate. The President vetoed it on two occasions, stating his reasons therefor. The bill, as the gentleman knows, makes unlawful the transportation in interstate or foreign commerce of any stolen animal, and the definition of "animal" is "any hog, horse, mule, or cattle," and the receiving of any horse, mule, cattle, or hog which has become a part of interstate commerce or which is being transported in interstate commerce is also included. It is an offense to receive such property knowing it has been stolen.

We are all familiar, especially in my part of the country and the territory west of the Mississippi River, with the fact that truckers today will swoop down on a farm and just about wipe a man out of the livestock business, and be gone out of the country when the theft is discovered. We find also out on the ranges in the Western States, due to their accessibility today, as the result of C. C. C. roads, that the truckers go out there, shoot down a number of cattle, load them, and they are gone into another State by the time the owner finds that his cattle or sheep are gone. There is no remedy whatever unless we can under a Federal statute invoke the help of the Federal Government.

Mr. MICHENER. When this matter was before the Congress previously, and before the President vetoed the bill, it contained chickens. I opposed it then. Has the gentleman taken chickens out?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. It will not be a Federal offense now to steal a chicken and take it across the State line?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. No.

Mr. MICHENER. One further thing. I presume the gentleman has conferred with the President and feels sure that the President will sign this bill that he has heretofore vetoed?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. I have every assurance from sources that claim to know that the President will sign the bill if we pass it at this time.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. This bill, I think, is identical with a bill which the gentleman from Utah introduced in the previous Congress?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Yes.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. And it is identical with a bill I introduced in this Congress.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. That is true.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I may say in further answer to the gentleman from Michigan that the matter has been canvassed with the Department of Justice, and I understand some contact has been made with the White House, and we are assured that in its present form it will receive final approval.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Yes; if the bill passes the House. I take this opportunity to thank the gentleman from South Dakota for the assistance he has given in helping me with this bill.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. Is this the bill the President vetoed, with the chickens taken out?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. That is right; the chickens are out.

Mr. COCHRAN. You just confine it to horses?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Horses, mules, cattle, sheep, and hogs.

Mr. COCHRAN. Where are the Congressmen now who are always demanding that the Federal police stay out of their States?

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. On behalf, I think, of all of our Representatives from Colorado we most urgently suggest that this bill be passed. It is a very meritorious measure. We have found from experience that nearly all the cattle rustling that is left is done across State lines in trucks, just as my distinguished friend from Utah has described.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. The gentleman from Colorado has expressed my view. I want to support the measure in behalf of the cattle growers and livestock men of Arizona. We feel that this bill ought to be enacted into law. I would favor including chickens and goats.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Is not this bill unfair and discriminatory? The gentleman has taken stolen chickens out of the bill but he admits the bill includes stolen donkeys transported in interstate commerce, and that it excludes stolen elephants.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. I will leave it up to the gentleman as to whether or not it is unfair. I believe there was good reason for having chickens in the bill. I know that some Representatives from Oklahoma proved their case, in my opinion, in good shape before the Committee on the Judiciary, but for some reason the Department of Justice did not like to have chickens in the bill, and Senator McCARRAN has seen fit to exclude them.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. That will clear up the chickens. I am serious about this. This is not a facetious inquiry. We are now engaged in a great national political campaign. In this campaign many of the brethren on your side will have donkeys, which are the proper emblem of your political party, at some of their campaign meetings, and many of the brethren on our side will have elephants, which are the emblem of the Republican Party, at some of their campaign meetings. You propose now to pass a bill by unanimous consent to make it a felony to transport a stolen donkey in interstate commerce, but you exclude elephants, so you are going to send word out, "Go and steal all of their elephants, but if you steal our donkeys you are going to the jailhouse for 5 years. Of course, after the November 5 election the red Soviet donkeys which are proper symbols of the New Deal will be about as extinct as the American buffalo and political elephants will multiply as rapidly as minks and rabbits.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. My answer to the gentleman from Wisconsin is, that by November 5 Mr. Willkie will have so completely annihilated the Republican elephant that he need have no worry about anyone stealing him. As a Democrat, I tender my services and a good, live, Democratic donkey to drag the dead carcass of the elephant out into the brush.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a serious question?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HANCOCK. I believe the gentleman misspoke himself a moment ago when he said this bill was identical with the one he introduced a year ago and which was vetoed. Will the gentleman please point out the difference between this bill and the bill that was vetoed by the President?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. I think the only difference between this bill and the one that was vetoed by the President, as I recall, is that the bill that was vetoed by the President had chickens in it.

Mr. HANCOCK. Is that the only difference?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. I think it is.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Seriously, the gentleman said the only difference is that the chickens were left out of this bill. This seemed to arouse some merriment on both sides of the aisle. May I say that in the great Northwest—and the gentleman is more familiar with that than I am—there are poultry farms where they have thousands of chickens.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. That is true.

Mr. HOFFMAN. In my own county, in the township adjoining the city in which I live, there are farmers who have two or three thousand chickens. Thieves come in from Chicago with their trucks and load up the chickens and take them away, several hundred dollars' worth to a load. Why should we not have protection?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. I should be very glad to help the gentleman put a chicken bill in later, if he will let this bill go through.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Do I correctly understand that the bill does not cover, say in the Southwest, goats and sheep?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. The bill states:

> The term "animal" shall include any cattle, hog, sheep, horse, or mule.

I would say that goats are included in that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Utah?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act shall be cited as the National Animal Theft Act.

SEC. 2. When used in this act—

(a) The term "animal" shall include any cattle, hog, sheep, horse, or mule.

(b) The term "interstate or foreign commerce" shall include transportation from one State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, to another State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or to a foreign country, or from a foreign country to any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia.

SEC. 3. Whoever shall transport or cause to be transported in interstate or foreign commerce any animal, or the carcass or hide or any part of the carcass or hide of any animal, knowing the same to have been stolen, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment of not more than 5 years, or both.

SEC. 4. Whoever shall receive, conceal, store, barter, buy, sell, or dispose of any such animal, or the carcass or hide or any part of the carcass or hide thereof, moving in or constituting a part of interstate or foreign commerce, knowing the same to have been stolen, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment of not more than 5 years, or both.

SEC. 5. Any person violating section 3 of this act may be prosecuted in any district from, into, or through which such animal, or the carcass or hide or any part of the carcass or hide thereof, has been transported or removed.

SEC. 6. Nothing herein shall be construed to repeal, modify, or amend any part of the National Stolen Property Act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan makes the point of order that a quorum is not present. The Chair will count.

Mr. DINGELL. I withdraw the point of order, Mr. Speaker.

FIRST NATIONAL STEAMSHIP CO., SECOND NATIONAL STEAMSHIP CO., AND THIRD NATIONAL STEAMSHIP CO.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 10440) for the relief of the First National Steamship Co., the Second National Steamship Co., and the Third National Steamship Co.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear and determine in any suits instituted within 1 year from the date of the enactment of this act, jointly or severally, by the First National Steamship Co., the Second National Steamship Co., and the Third National Steamship Co., the claims of such companies on account of (1) certain sums allegedly deposited by them with the United States Shipping Board in 1920; (2) certain disbursements alleged made by them, for and on behalf of the United States, in 1920, for other than physical operation costs, in connection with the vessels Independence, Hoxie, and Scottsburg, owned by the United States; and (3) certain improvements and equipment allegedly paid for and placed aboard said vessels by them in 1920 and not removed therefrom by said companies; and if the court shall determine that there was no sale of or valid contract to sell said vessels to said companies, and that the payment made to said companies on October 7, 1935, was not in full satisfaction of the just claims of said companies existing on December 31, 1925, to enter such decrees or judgments against the United States as will provide full reimbursement and just compensation to said companies on account of said claims notwithstanding any statute of limitations: Provided, That such compensation shall not be in excess of 3 percent per annum of the total of the payments made and ordered to be made for the period that any moneys were withheld from the claimants: Provided further, That after such determinations by the court, the United States may plead any defense it may have (except the statute of limitations), including laches, res judicata, release, prior settlement, accord, and satisfaction, and any of such defenses, if made and held valid by the court, and sustained by the weight of the evidence, shall constitute a bar to recovery.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain just what this bill is?

Mr. HOBBS. This is a bill on the Private Calendar which would authorize these three steamship companies to litigate their claim in the Court of Claims. This is the identical bill that was passed by the House unanimously at a former session but was vetoed by the President. This bill has simply been amended to meet the objections of the President. The bill has been considered by the committee and by the Department of Justice. There is no objection from the Department of Justice, as I understand, and the committee has unanimously approved the bill.

Mr. TABER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, how much is involved in these claims and what is the nature of them?

Mr. HOBBS. This is a claim for the unpaid balance of money actually deposited under a written escrow agreement. This money is not in the Treasury of the United States but is kept in a separate trust fund. It is cash money deposited by these companies to guarantee the return of the ships they were operating for the Shipping Board at the request of the Government.

Mr. TABER. Have they returned these ships?

Mr. HOBBS. Yes; and a full receipt was given for them in good condition; in fact, in better condition than when they were delivered.

Mr. TABER. Why has this bill not come up under the Private Calendar?

Mr. HOBBS. It has, and has been passed.

Mr. TABER. At this session?

Mr. HOBBS. Yes, sir; and has been vetoed and is back now in slightly amended form to meet the views of the President.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I am always happy to yield to the distinguished gentleman from New York.

Mr. HANCOCK. The original bill, as I recall it, denied the Government certain defenses, while the present bill allows the Government to assert all defenses except the statute of limitations when the case is presented to the Court of Claims, so that the United States has the right to defend itself with every defense at its command except the one defense of laches or the statute of limitations.

Mr. HOBBS. I may say to the gentleman that that is a matter of interpretation. It was thought that the original bill did not deny the Government any defense save the statute of limitations, and this one certainly does not.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

J. J. GREENLEAF

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland submitted the following conference report and statement on the bill (S. 527) for the relief of J. J. Greenleaf:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 527) entitled "An Act for the relief of J. J. Greenleaf" having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the figures "$8,125" insert "$10,000"; and the House agree to the same.

AMBROSE J. KENNEDY,
ROBERT RAMSPECK,
J. PARNELL THOMAS,
Managers on the part of the House.

PRENTISS M. BROWN,
JOHN G. TOWNSEND,
EDWARD R. BURKE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 527), for the relief of J. J. Greenleaf, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report.

This bill, as it passed the Senate, provided for the payment of the sum of $14,875 to J. J. Greenleaf in full settlement of the balance due from the Government of the United States for services rendered to the Government by the said J. J. Greenleaf pursuant to his employment to represent the Government of the United States in certain litigation.

The House committee recommended passage of the bill in the reduced amount of $8,125, setting forth the reasons therefor in the report which accompanied the bill, and the bill passed the House in said amount.

The Senate disagreed to the amendment of the House, and at the conference a compromise amount of $10,000 was agreed upon.

AMBROSE J. KENNEDY,
ROBERT RAMSPECK,
J. PARNELL THOMAS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WILLIAM A. REITHEL

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 3907) for the relief of William A. Reithel, with a Senate amendment, and agree to the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 1, line 4, strike out "$5,000" and insert "$3,000."

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SAMUEL ROBERTS

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6091) for the relief of Samuel Roberts, with a Senate amendment, and agree to the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "$1,919.25" and insert "$1,387.10."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WARRANT OFFICERS AND ENLISTED MEN IN THE ARMY MINE PLANTER SERVICE

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 4275) to increase the authorized numbers of warrant officers and enlisted men in the Army Mine Planter Service, and for other purposes, and consider the same.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this the bill that was before the House the other day?

Mr. COSTELLO. I will say to the gentleman that it is the identical bill that we passed yesterday on the Consent Calendar. Unfortunately, the Senate bill was not substituted for the House bill and that is the purpose of my making this request.

Mr. MICHENER. This is not the bill that changed the rank of medical officers?

Mr. COSTELLO. No; this bill deals with the Mine Planter Service and simply authorizes an increase in that Service because they are building a number of new mine sweepers.

Mr. MICHENER. And it is just a question of substituting the Senate bill for the House bill?

Mr. COSTELLO. That is correct.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter the authorized personnel of the Army Mine Planter Service shall comprise, for each Army mine planter in service or under construction, one master, one first mate, one second mate, one chief engineer, one assistant engineer, and one second assistant engineer, who shall be warrant officers appointed by and holding their offices at the discretion of the Secretary of War, and such enlisted men of the Coast Artillery Corps as the Secretary of War shall prescribe from time to time: Provided, That the maximum authorized numbers of warrant officers and enlisted men of the Coast Artillery Corps are hereby increased by the numbers of additional warrant officers and enlisted men authorized by this section: Provided further, That when the number of Army mine planters in service and under construction exceeds 14, the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, and to such extent as he may deem proper, make temporary appointments of the additional warrant officers required for the additional mine planters: Provided further, That members of the Army Mine Planter Service appointed as temporary warrant officers shall, while serving as such, have the rank, pay, allowances, and retirement privileges of the grade and ratings to which they are temporarily appointed, and upon termination of their temporary appointments as warrant officers shall revert to the grades from which they were appointed, without loss of seniority, credit for continuous service, or any other right or privilege, by reason of their service as temporary warrant officers: And provided further, That the relative rank, pay, and allowances of warrant officers of the Army Mine Planter Service shall be as now prescribed by law, and warrant officer second assistant engineers shall receive pay and allowances, and be entitled to other privileges as now prescribed by law for warrant officer second mates, and while aboard their vessels shall take rank immediately below warrant officer second mates.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MORRIS BURSTEIN ET AL

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6083) for the relief of Morris Burstein, Jennie Burstein, and Adolph Burstein, with a Senate amendment, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Amend the title so as to read: "An act for the relief of Adolph Burstein."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, this is just a question of amending the title?

Mr. LESINSKI. That is all.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Does the Senate amendment include the importation of any additional Bursteins?

Mr. LESINSKI. No. It is taking two Bursteins out and leaving one in.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I think the bill ought to be passed. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TO AMEND THE AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT OF 1938

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 4374) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, do I understand that the effect of this bill is to classify different types of tobacco and establish quotas for different types of tobacco?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. That is one section of the bill. It classifies different types for the purpose of holding referendums. Some of the growers in a particular section were not satisfied with being hooked up with growers in another section, and we want to be able to permit them to hold a separate referendum with respect to their particular type of tobacco.

The other section changes the base period from 1919–39 to 1934–39. The bill has been unanimously reported by the Senate committee and passed. It was unanimously reported by the House committee. It has the approval of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. My understanding is that the effect of this would be to do for tobacco what the people in the wheat States have long wanted done for wheat. In other words, we have long contended that wheat should be classified as to whether it is hard wheat or soft wheat and that separate quotas should be established for them, because the fact has been demonstrated that the surplus or so-called surplus in wheat is not due to the production of the hard wheat, but it is due to the production of other wheats. I have a copy of the Senate report and, as nearly as I can learn from the language of the Senate report, the purpose of this legislation is to set up different classifications for tobacco, maintaining that because of war conditions or other causes, the demand is different for different types of tobacco.

The same thing is true of wheat, as the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN] can well testify. The demand is for hard milling wheats. We have long contended that it is utterly unfair to charge to them the surpluses that are created by other types of wheat, and unless this bill can be amended so as to give the same treatment for wheat as you are proposing to give for tobacco, I shall be obliged to object.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I think the gentleman has a misconception as to the object of the bill. That provision in the bill is for the purpose of holding referendums with reference to a particular type. The present law, with respect to referendums, throws certain types together. The section in the bill the gentleman refers to would permit separate referendums for the different types. There certainly cannot be any objection to this part of the bill.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Of course, that is what we would like to do with respect to wheat.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I have no particular objection to the referendum part of this bill. The part changing the base period makes it possible to take at least $2,500,000 from other basic crops by way of benefits and transfer it to tobacco. No hearings were held in our committee on this legislation. It is an important piece of legislation. What the gentleman from South Dakota said about wheat is absolutely correct. If we are going to make changes in the classifications, grades, and types of wheat and also tobacco, it should be done in one legislation so that we may treat the subject on a Nation-wide scale, rather than to deal with it piecemeal.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I object.

MRS. GEORGE C. HAMILTON AND NANETTE ANDERSON

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 4561) for the relief of Mrs. George C. Hamilton and Nanette Anderson, for printing in the RECORD.

ONA LOVCIKIENE AND CHILDREN, EDMUNDOS AND REGINA

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 10063) to record the lawful admission to the United States for permanent residence of Ona Lovcikiene and children, Edmundos and Regina.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain the bill?

Mr. WALTER. This bill was introduced on behalf of this Russian lady because since she arrived in the United States on a visit her husband was murdered in Russia. She is not a Communist. Her husband was active politically against the Communists. They are known as White Russians. After she arrived at my home town her husband was murdered, and there is nobody for them to go back to. She owns property in what is now a part of Russia and has with her enough money so that she will not become a public charge. The bill was reported unanimously by the committee.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I have read a great many bills of this character, and, in my opinion, this is one of the most meritorious that have come from the Immigration Committee. I believe, however, there should be added to the bill as an amendment the customary clause carried in bills of this character, and if the gentleman's request is granted I shall offer such an amendment.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the proposed amendment?

Mr. HANCOCK. Merely to add the provision that these people shall be admitted for permanent residence provided they are otherwise found to be admissible under the immigration laws except for the quota limitation. That is the usual clause in immigration bills of this character to protect us against making people eligible for citizenship who may be Communists, anarchists, murderers, or inadmissible under other provisions of the immigration law. So to protect those whose duty it is to examine the Private Calendar, I shall offer this amendment.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. That means, as I understand it, that this woman must be able to qualify in every respect as though she were an immigrant.

Mr. WALTER. That is correct.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The next proposition is whether these people will be charged against the quota of the country.

Mr. WALTER. Yes; that is true in all of these bills.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not; I simply want to take this occasion to inquire of the gentleman from Pennsylvania if he can give the House any information as to the status of the Walter-Logan bill in which so many of us are interested, whether any progress is being made in the Senate on that piece of legislation.

Mr. WALTER. I am very hopeful that the Senate will take up the bill, and I trust that the Congress will not recess until the Senate has at least had an opportunity to vote on a measure that was reported unanimously by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate.

Mr. MUNDT. I thank the gentleman from the information and join in the hope.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Labor be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to record the lawful admission for permanent residence of Ona Lovcikiene and children, Edmundos and Regina, who entered the United States at New York on December 15, 1938, and that they shall, for all purposes under the immigration and naturalization laws, be deemed to have been lawfully admitted as immigrants for permanent residence. Upon the enactment of this act the Secretary of State shall direct the proper quota-control officer to deduct three numbers from the Russian quota for the first year said Russian quota is available.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK: Page 1, line 10, change the period to a colon and insert the following: "Provided, They are found to be otherwise admissible under the provisions of the immigration laws other than those relating to quotas."

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I understand there are two bills here. Will this amendment be offered to the other bill also?

Mr. HANCOCK. There is just one bill here that applies to this woman and her children.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I thank the gentleman for the information.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CORONADO INTERNATIONAL MONUMENT, ARIZONA

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4130) to provide for the establishment of the Coronado International Monument in the State of Arizona.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what position does this bill have on the calendar?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. It is on the Union Calendar. I have asked that it be put on the Consent Calendar, but sufficient time has not yet elapsed for it to be called on that calendar.

Mr. MICHENER. Is there any element of emergency in connection with the passage of the bill?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. We are anxious to go ahead with the work to carry out earlier legislation and furnish so much local employment. The thought that came to me was that the House is apt to recess, and there may not be another opportunity for some time to call the Consent Calendar. If we are to proceed with the work, we must adopt the legislation.

Mr. MICHENER. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that that is the situation with respect to all bills now on the Consent Calendar. As a general rule, the Speaker does not recognize Members to call up bills by unanimous consent unless there is some element of emergency. If there is no emergency, I am wondering why this bill to establish a monument should be singled out for preference over all other bills.

The SPEAKER. If the membership will indulge the Chair, the Chair does not agree to recognize a Member to call up a bill unless he has assurance from the Member that it is all right with both the majority and the minority members of the committee that has charge of the bill. That is the situation with respect to this bill, as it is with respect to others which Members are recognized to call up out of order.

Mr. MICHENER. I want to be placed correctly also. The gentleman spoke to me about the bill and I asked him the very things I am asking him now: If this bill possessed any element of emergency. I do not mean any present existing emergency, but any element of emergency. I said that if it did, under the long-established precedents the Chair would recognize him and that if the Chair did recognize him, there would be no objection so far as I personally was concerned.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I talked this matter over with two who might object, but not with any others. There seemed no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this a bill to establish a monument in the gentleman's State?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Yes.

Mr. RICH. How many acres of ground will be contained in the monument?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. About 2,800 acres.

Mr. RICH. This is to establish a monument for the Federal Government to take care of. If the gentleman can show us one iota of emergency in this bill, we might consider it in that light. Some may think there is, but I do not. There is no emergency in this bill and I do not think we ought to establish any other monuments anyway. I do not think this Government is in shape to go ahead and spend money on any monument and, Mr. Speaker, I object.

ORDER OF BUSINESS TOMORROW

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow the Speaker may recognize Members for the purpose of suspending the rules and passing certain bills.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if that consent is given, will it prevent points of order being made against the consideration of bills to which otherwise a point of order would lie?

The SPEAKER. When the rules are suspended, they are all suspended.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Would a point of order lie against the consideration of the bill if there were other places where a point of order might be made?

Mr. McCORMACK. To say what the Speaker would rule when the matter is presented to him would be presumptuous on the part of any of us, but my own opinion is that the unanimous-consent request submitted would in no way change the rights of any Members under the rules providing for a suspension coming up on regular suspension day. That would be my personal opinion and of course it is my own personal opinion.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. As I understand it, under the regular rules of the House we have regular days when we can ask for suspension of the rules.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is correct.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The only other time usually that we have done that is within about 6 days of adjournment and then the Speaker only recognizes Members when he is sure that the matter is of some emergency. That is not present here at all.

The SPEAKER. May the Chair say that recognizing a Member for suspension of the rules is entirely within the discretion of the Chair. A bill does not necessarily have to have any element of emergency in it.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. But the Speaker has steadfastly refused to do that. In other words, it has been almost an unbroken rule and the Speaker never recognizes anyone for suspension of the rules except on the regular suspension days and within 6 days of final adjournment. The gentleman from Massachusetts is asking for something that I do not remember anybody ever asking for in the time I have served here.

Mr. McCORMACK. Let me refresh the gentleman's memory. There is nothing mysterious about this. The leadership on the gentleman's side has been consulted. Yesterday I propounded the same request in relation to today and there was no objection. On Monday last there were a couple of bills on which the Speaker might have recognized Members to suspend the rules, but the circumstances were such that they could not be brought up. Yesterday I asked unanimous consent that today the Speaker may recognize Members, to call up bills under suspension of the rules, if he so desired.

There are one or two bills that I am sure the leadership on the gentleman's side is acquainted with. There is a bill coming out of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, and offhand I do not know of any others, but there may be one or two others. The leadership on the gentleman's side has been consulted and has been acquainted with the situation. Today the unanimous consent of yesterday not having been complied with, I am simply renewing the unanimous request to substitute tomorrow for today. The permission was granted yesterday. I can assure the gentleman that there is nothing mysterious about this, and that the leadership on his side is well acquainted with the entire situation. I respect the leadership on the gentleman's side and under all conditions I would consult with them, as does the Speaker.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman is telling us something which we do not know anything about. However, we know that the gentleman is embarking upon a new procedure that might be very disastrous unless surrounded by circumstances such as the gentleman has indicated. I have no desire to prevent this program, but I want the Members of the House to know it is a novel program. It is an unusual program. If we do not throw around it the honor and integrity of the Speaker and the two leaders, then we are liable to run far afield. A Member might be opposed to certain legislation, but finds that in his absence a bill has come up that he has not had a chance to be heard on. This would not be fair to him, because his constituency might be very keenly interested in it. It is a dangerous procedure, and insofar as I am concerned I shall be here.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask a question? If we are going to give unanimous consent for bills to come before the House tomorrow, is it possible for the gentleman to put in the RECORD the bills that will be permitted to come before the House tomorrow?

Mr. McCORMACK. It is not a question of unanimous consent, because, of course, the Speaker can always recognize a Member to take from the Speaker's table a bill; then it is within the prerogative of any individual Member to object. This unanimous-consent request is that the Speaker may recognize on tomorrow any Member who may wish to move to suspend the rules. The only bill I know of is a bill coming out of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce relating to short-line railroads, as I remember it. There may be one other bill, but the leadership on the gentleman's side will be made acquainted with them.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman is not going to permit the membership to bring up personal bills and ask unanimous consent that we consider them in that way?

Mr. McCORMACK. That can be done at all times. That is something that can be done at any time. This is on suspension of the rules, where a two-thirds vote is necessary to pass the bill.

Mr. RICH. All we want to do is to put some responsibility on the leadership on that side. We are going to stop from now on a lot of bills coming up that will involve spending money when we have not any money to spend.

The regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I renew my point of order that a quorum is not present.

Lord of our life, and God of our salvation, in whom we live and move and have our being, both as men and nations: Enlighten our minds with the knowledge of what is right for us to do. Give us power to see our duties with a clear eye and a broad vision; and make us apt to do Thy will, that our Nation may be strong in heart and soul in those virtues which have made her truly great. NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER

The Chief Clerk read the following communication:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,

KEY TO JUDICIAL DECISIONS (S. DOC. NO. 306)

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, a very unusual document has recently been prepared by I. J. Lowe, Esq., an attorney with the Department of Agriculture. It is entitled "Key to the Year of Decision of Any Case in the United States Supreme Court, Federal and State Reports." This newly discovered key enables the researcher to ascertain at once the year of the decision of any case appearing in the reports of the United States Supreme Court and other Federal courts, as well as State reports, from its organization to the October term of 1939, without reference to the reports. These data will be helpful, not only to the legal profession, but also the judicial, legislative, and executive departments of the Government, and I ask that the document be made a Senate document. I have submitted the material to Justice Stone of the United States Supreme Court, and also to the Senator from Vermont ([Mr. AUSTIN] and they both state there is no publication quite like it, and that it should prove to be a useful document.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

CONSIDERATION OF BILLS ON THE CALENDAR

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. In accordance with the understanding of yesterday evening at the time the Senate took a recess, the clerk will call the calendar for the consideration of unobjected-to bills.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. KING. I presume the call of the calendar will begin where the Senate concluded it yesterday?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; where the Senate left off yesterday.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will begin at Calendar No. 2324, House bill 6658.

LEASE OR SALE OF CERTAIN PUBLIC LANDS IN ALASKA

The bill (H. R. 6658) to authorize the lease or sale of certain public lands in Alaska, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ADAMS subsequently said: Mr. President, today the Senate passed House bill 6658, Calendar No. 2324. I find on examination of the report which was filed that there is an error in the report. The bill itself is correct and should have been passed, but I should like to have unanimous consent to withdraw the report (No. 2203) as filed and be permitted to file a corrected report (No. 2214). I do that because when the bill goes to the White House for consideration, the report, as it stands, would contain an inaccuracy which I should like to have corrected.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

USE OF CERTAIN PUBLIC LANDS IN ALASKA FOR PARK AND OTHER PURPOSES

The bill (H. R. 7252) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to sell or lease for park or recreational purposes, and to sell for cemetery purposes, certain public lands in Alaska, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HOLT subsequently said: Mr. President, when Calendar No. 2325, House bill 7252, was called, I intended to make a suggestion to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS]. The bill authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to sell or lease for park or recreational purposes, and to sell for cemetery purposes, certain public lands in Alaska. I believe the bill would be strengthened if we were to allow the Government to sell or lease the Secretary of the Interior to Alaska for recreational or cemetery purposes. [Laughter.]

LANDS IN DEATH VALLEY NATIONAL MONUMENT

The bill (H. R. 8646) to authorize the exchange of certain patented lands in the Death Valley National Monument for Government lands in the monument was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WATER SUPPLY, PETERSBURG, ALASKA

The bill (H. R. 9173) for the protection of the water supply of the town of Petersburg, Alaska, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORGANIZATION BY STATES OF MILITARY UNITS

The bill (H. R. 10495) to amend section 61 of the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, by adding a proviso which will permit States to organize military units not a part of the National Guard, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill was considered on the call of the calendar yesterday and went over on objection. Is there objection to its present consideration?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That section 61 of the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, be amended to read as follows:

"No State shall maintain troops in time of peace other than as authorized in accordance with the organization prescribed under this act: Provided, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed as limiting the rights of the States and Territories in the use of the National Guard within their respective borders in time of peace: Provided further, That nothing contained in this act shall prevent the organization and maintenance of State police or constabulary: Provided further, That under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe the organization by and maintenance within any State of such military forces other than National Guard as may be provided by the laws of such State is hereby authorized while any part of the National Guard of the State concerned is in active Federal service: Provided further, That such forces shall not be called, ordered, or in any manner drafted, as such, into the military services of the United States; however, no person shall, by reason of his membership in any such unit, be exempted from military service under any Federal law: And provided further, That the Secretary of War in his discretion and under regulations determined by him is authorized to issue, from time to time, for the use of such military units, to any State, upon requisition of the Governor thereof, such arms and equipment as may be in possession of and can be spared by the War Department."

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, this is the home guard bill, which the Senate discussed yesterday. The Senator from Vermont has an amendment to offer to perfect the bill.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. AUSTIN. I move that the committee amendment be amended on page 3, in line 3, by inserting after the word "prescribe," the words "for discipline in training."

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, line 3, after the word "prescribe", it is proposed to insert the words "for discipline in training."

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, is the question on the amendment to the amendment?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] to the committee amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. I desire to say a few words on the bill.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I desire to express my complete concurrence with the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont. I think it should be adopted in order to cure a defect in the proposed legislation.

While I am on my feet, I wish to make a further suggestion to those in charge of the bill. It seems to me that the initial two or three lines of the committee amendment should be recast. I assume the bill will go to conference, and that there will be an opportunity in conference to recast it. The purpose of the bill, as I understand, is to confer upon the States the right to maintain troops within their borders in time of peace. The amendment starts out in this wise:

No State shall maintain troops in time of peace—

And so forth. That follows, I take it, the constitutional provision. It seems to me that it should be drafted as an affirmative declaration or an affirmative grant to the States of the right to maintain troops in time of peace. It is merely a matter of drafting, but I think it is very definitely the right way to go at it.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, the reason the wording referred to is used is because the bill follows the language of the National Defense Act of 1916, and this bill will become an amendment to the National Defense Act of 1916. Since 1916 there have been so many regulations and so much experience with the National Guard that it was deemed by the committee best to follow the language which has become the guiding language of the organization since that date.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the committee amendment as amended.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I find myself compelled to vote against the bill. I did not object to its being taken up, but it seems to me that the bill involves a false assumption of Federal power. The bill assumes that a State may not organize or maintain any form of armed or organized force except with the consent and permission of the Federal Government. The opening line of the committee amendment is in accordance with the Constitution, which provides that:

No State shall, without the consent of Congress * * * in time of peace, keep troops.

That is entirely correct, but the distinguished Senator from Vermont, for whose learning and knowledge I have the utmost regard, and who is a far greater expert upon these subjects than I could be, answered an inquiry yesterday to the effect that a State had no right to maintain any form of armed organized force except with the consent of the Federal Government, and he interpreted the provision of the Constitution which I have read from the bill and which he quoted from the Constitution as going that far. The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] raised the question yesterday as to the interpretation of the word "troops" in the constitutional provision.

In the few minutes at my disposal today I made a very hasty search of the authorities, and I find that there are several authorities supporting the position which the Senator from Texas took; in other words, that the prohibition against the maintenance of troops by the States in time of peace does not include the Organized Militia of the States.

This amendment, starting out with the correct statement, then proceeds to say, in the second part, that the States may not maintain any form of organization except under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe. Not only is the Congress assuming the authority, but we are assuming to give to the Secretary of War the power to say to my State and your State, "You may not organize any home guard, any militia, unless you have the consent of the Secretary of War and the consent of Congress."

In that part of the bill I cannot concur. I must, therefore, vote against the bill, because it is founded upon what I think is a violation of a very fundamental provision not only of the Constitution but of the rights of the States, which antedated the Constitution, and which were in no way limited or restricted by the Constitution when it was adopted.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I do not want to argue this case, but I do want to say that all the Senator from Colorado has said was, of course, extremely germane when the National Defense Act of 1916 was being considered and enacted.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I shall be glad to be interrupted.

Mr. ADAMS. I recognize that the National Defense Act of 1916 has the same false premise underlying it; but the fact that the Congress in 1916 assumed something in violation of the Constitution does not justify us in doing the same thing again. The fact that the 1916 act contains these provisions is one of the reasons why I have not objected to taking up the bill, because it is not adding something new; it is merely reaffirming a false doctrine.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I very much doubt whether the act of 1916 was contrary to the Constitution. The purpose of the act of 1916 and the purpose of the act of 1920, which is the National Defense Act under which we are operating, was, in time of emergency and in time of war, quickly to make a unit of the armed forces of the United States by creating out of the various groups and branches of the armed forces, such as the National Guard, the great Army of the United States. Since the Federal Government moved into the States and changed the ordinary State militia, the armed force, the National Guard, into a quasi- or a half-national organization, and laid down the policy that the second line of defense should always be the National Guard, the close relationship between the National Guard and the Federal forces of the Regular Army has been maintained, and been very satisfactorily maintained.

The National Defense Act of 1916 did not destroy in any way, and of course could not destroy, any constitutional right. I completely agree with the Senator from Colorado in that respect; but it did not, even in practice, as interpreted, destroy the State's right to have its own troops. In fact, if we will read it, we will see that that is so:

Provided—

After the first statement—

That nothing contained in this act shall be construed as limiting the rights of the States and Territories in the use of the National Guard within their respective borders in time of peace.

That language maintains complete command of the National Guard in the Governor in time of peace; and Federal recognition there constitutes only what the amendment of the Senator from Vermont has made it constitute now. The Federal Government does the training, and does the disciplining, and furnishes the uniforms and the matériel.

The act continues:

Provided further, That nothing contained in this act shall prevent the organization and maintenance of State police or constabulary.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. BAILEY. I understand the Senator is explaining, rather than contending, that notwithstanding the passage of the 1916 act and this bill, the States' rights to have such militia as they desire to have, independent of these measures, are not impaired to any degree.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I think that is absolutely the case; and today the problem is a practical problem of that kind. There is no question that the States may go ahead and organize their own militia, and equip their own militia, and pay for their own militia; but the States have become dependent upon the Federal Government for matériel, for uniforms, for pay during drill periods, and it is because of that dependency that they again find themselves financially dependent on the continuation of the National Guard when their own forces are called into service. It is a very practical situation.

Mr. BAILEY. I should like to say to the Senator on that point, if he will permit me, that the States are not financially dependent upon the Federal Government. They are in that posture; but the States collectively have all the wealth the National Government has. We have simply fallen here into a habit of depending upon the borrowed money of the Federal Government—that is, the credit of the Federal Government—in lieu of proceeding courageously to our duty of levying taxes in the States to discharge their functions, and levying taxes in the United States to discharge the Federal functions.

It is not a case of being dependent; it is a case of being unwilling to levy the necessary taxes, and, of course, there will be an end to that. We shall come to the point where the taxes must be levied by the States.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Probably I should have said a case of having become dependent.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President——

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. BARBOUR. I hesitate to interrupt the junior Senator from Utah again; but a moment ago I heard a reference to constabulary and State police. I did not hear the question, and I am not quite sure that I understood the answer.

In connection with the remarks of the Senator from Colorado as to a prohibition against having organized forces in the States, I ask the Senator from Utah whether that would interfere with constabulary or State police?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. No; the amendment carries the same provision that is carried in the National Defense Act of 1916, and reads as follows:

Provided further, That nothing contained in this act shall prevent the organization and maintenance of State police or constabulary.

Mr. BARBOUR. I thank the Senator.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, if I may make a statement, it is not prohibited, but what the bill asserts is the right of the Federal Government to prohibit if it wishes. In other words, in this bill the Congress is most graciously saying to the State, "While you have no right to organize militia without our consent, we will permit you to do it provided it complies with the regulations of the Secretary of War."

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. BARBOUR. I do not want to encroach on the time of the Senator from Utah. I merely wish to be sure that there is nothing in the proposed legislation which would prevent the States from doing everything they reasonably should do in relation to constabulary or State police.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. If there were anything in this measure which would prevent that, I think no Member of the United States Senate would support it, for the simple reason that it would destroy the sovereignty of the State in the control of its own police force.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I desire to add merely a word to emphasize the fact that this bill contains the assertion that the State's sovereignty may not, in and of its own right, maintain any Military Establishment or any militia, because it says, after reciting that the States may not have troops—which we all concede—

That under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe—

"Under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe"— the organization by and maintenance within any State of such military forces other than National Guard as may be provided by the laws of such State is hereby authorized.

In other words, in this bill we are asserting the absolute right of the Federal Government to forbid the organization within the State of military forces of a kind differentiated from troops or a standing army. As I have said, I think that is the assertion of a right which does not exist in the Federal Government. Of course, the assertion of the right by Congress does not affect the constitutional rights of the States; but I do not want to see passed a bill by which Congress asserts the fact without my own feeble vote going against it.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I am glad to have an expression of that kind. This amendment becomes necessary because of the way in which the Army and the National Guard have grown up and have developed. We all know that by various acts of Congress the size of the guard is limited. It becomes essential to increase the size of the guard. How to do that without destroying the limits which are already in existence was the problem facing the writers of this amendment, and we think we have done it by the way in which it is drafted.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, may I have unanimous consent to submit as part of my remarks citation of a few authorities which I will have in the course of a half hour?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The authorities submitted by Senator ADAMS are as follows:

MINNESOTA v. WAGENER (1898) (42 L. R. A. 749 AT 751)

Under our Military Code the active militia or National Guard are organized and enrolled for discipline and not for military service, except in times of insurrection, invasion, and riot. The men comprising it come from the body of the militia of the State and when not engaged, at stated periods in drilling or training for military duty, they return to the usual avocations, subject to call when public exigencies require it, but may not be kept in service, like standing armies, in times of peace. While enrolled as soldiers of the State for the purposes aforesaid they are neither troops, within the meaning of section 10 of article I of the Federal Constitution, or a standing army, within the meaning of section 14 of the Bill of Rights in the State constitution (Dunne v. People, 94 Ill. 120, 34 Am. Rep. 213).

DUNNE v. THE PEOPLE (1879) (94 ILL. 120, SYLLABUS NO. 7)

The organization of the active militia of the State is not in violation of that clause of the Federal Constitution which withholds from the States the right to keep troops in time of peace. Such a militia is not embraced in the term "troops" as used in the Constitution. The State militia is simply a domestic force, as distinguished from the Regular troops, and is only liable to be called into service when the exigencies of the State make it necessary.

DUNNE v. THE PEOPLE (1879) 94 ILL. 120 AT 138

An objection broader in its scope than either of those noted is, that the active militia organized under the statute comes within the prohibition of the second clause, section 10, article 1 of the Constitution of the United States, which withholds from the States the power to keep "troops" in time of peace. Our understanding is, the organization of the active militia of the State conforms exactly to the definitions usually given of militia. Lexicographers and others define militia, and so the common understanding is, to be "a body of armed citizens trained to military duty who may be called out in certain cases but may not be kept on service like standing armies in time of peace." That is the case as to the active militia of this State. The men comprising it come from the body of the militia, and when not engaged at stated periods in drilling and other exercises, they return to their usual avocations, as is usual with militia, and are subject to call when the public exigencies demand it. Such an organization, no matter by what name it may be designated, comes within no definition of "troops," as that word is used in the Constitution. The word "troops" conveys to the mind the idea of an armed body of soldiers, whose sole occupation is war or service, answering to the Regular Army. The organization of the active militia of the State bears no likeness to such a body of men. It is simply a domestic force as distinguished from regular "troops," and is only liable to be called into service when the exigencies of the State make it necessary.

DUNNE v. THE PEOPLE (1879) (94 ILL. 120 AT 126)

The section of the Constitution cited (Art. I, sec. 8, div. 15) does not confer on Congress unlimited power over the militia of the States. It is restricted to specific objects enumerated, and for all other purposes the militia remain as before the formation of the Constitution subject to State authorities. Nor is there any warrant for the proposition that the authority a State may exercise over its own militia is derived from the Constitution of the United States. The States always assumed to control their militia, and, except so far as they have conferred upon the National Government exclusive or concurrent authority, the States retain the residue of authority over the militia they previously had and exercised. And no reason exists why a State may not control its own militia within constitutional limitations. Its exercise by the States is simply a means of self-protection.

The States are forbidden to keep "troops" in time of peace, and of what avail is the militia to maintain order and to enforce the laws in the States unless it is organized. "A well-regulated militia" is declared to be "necessary to the security of a free State." The militia is the dormant force upon which both the National and State Governments rely "to execute the laws, * * * suppress insurrections, and repel invasions." It would seem to be indispensable there should be concurrent control over the militia in both governments within the limitations imposed by the Constitution. Accordingly, it is laid down by text writers and courts that the power given to Congress to provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia is not exclusive. It is defined to be merely an affirmative power, and not incompatible with the existence of a like power in the States; and hence the conclusion is the power of concurrent legislation over the militia exists in the several States with the National Government.

In the official annotated edition of the United States Constitution appears the following:

The organization and maintenance of an active State militia is not a keeping of troops in time of peace within the prohibition of this clause. This clause contemplates the use of the State's military power to put down an armed insurrection too strong to be controlled by civil authority, and the State concerned must determine what degree of force the crisis demands. (Presser v. Illinois (116 U. S. 252); Luther v. Borden (7 How. 45); New Hampshire v. Louisiana (108 U. S. 76).)

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am not a member of the committee reporting the bill under consideration and have had but little opportunity to examine it. Because of the position of my colleague, for whose honesty and integrity I am glad to vouch, I am inclined to support it; or at least I desire to ascertain upon what grounds I may be justified in giving it my support. The bill was under consideration for a short time yesterday, and I then expressed some misgivings as to the merit or necessity of the measure; indeed, when the bill was brought to my attention by the Senator from Colorado I expressed some misgivings as to its constitutionality. I had not read the bill and was not aware of its provisions nor acquainted with any of the objectives sought, but in the discussion which ensued I was inclined to believe that it impinged upon the rights of the States and was not in consonance with the second amendment to the Constitution.

I indicated that some of the great leaders following the drafting of the Constitution were dissatisfied with some of its provisions, believing that the power conferred upon the Federal Government was too great. Accordingly, as Senators know, demands were made for amendments to the Constitution of the United States, and as a result of this agitation and the demands made various amendments were urged and adopted. Obviously, there were some who believed that the Constitution interfered with the rights of the various States to organize, regulate, and maintain a militia, and for that reason the second amendment to the Constitution was urged and adopted. I am not satisfied that the bill before us—much as I should like to support it—does not interfere with the rights of the States with respect to their regulation, organization, and so forth, of a State militia. I fear that this measure—though it might incorporate the provisions which are found in existing law—confers too much authority upon the Federal Government, and interfers with the rights of the States to organize, regulate, and maintain a militia. Senators will recall that this amendment forbids any infringement of the rights of the State to provide for a well-organized militia, and that the purpose of such a militia, among other things, is necessary for the protection and security of the State and of the right of the people to keep and bear arms.

Our forefathers knew of the dangers of large standing armies. They had developed within the various States before the Federal Government was formed militia organizations and had provided for their regulation, maintenance, and support.

I appreciate the fact that we have gone a long way since the amendment to the Constitution was adopted in centralizing authority in the Federal Government. The most extreme Federalist in the days of Hamilton would be surprised if he were now to visit this mundane sphere and witness the form and character of our present political system. He would behold not a Federal Government but a National Government; he would behold a strong centralized and powerful National Government exercising functions and authority far in excess of what the framers of the Constitution believed that the Government which they had organized was authorized to exercise.

The founders of this Republic had experienced the evils of a powerful central government, and they determined to establish a Government with limited powers—with checks and balances, in order that the people of the various States might be protected. They determined that local self-government should be preserved. They knew that only through the States could liberty and freedom be preserved; that individuals could operate in and through their States and the local subdivisions of their States. They knew that under a powerful centralized government their liberties would be restricted. They were not unacquainted with history, with the rise and fall of nations, and the causes which had led to the destruction of local self-government and of the freedom and liberty of individuals. They had been subjected to the authority of an oppressive government and to unjust exactions of monarchial rule. They were opposed to standing armies and believed that their liberties would be preserved under virile and active States and local governments.

Notwithstanding the restrictions imposed upon the Federal Government, it is apparent that little by little those restrictions have been and are being whittled away. More and more authority is taken over by the Federal Government, and more and more are the people adopting policies that weaken their States and diminish their rights and, indeed, their liberty. They are shirking responsibilities which rest upon their States and upon their local subdivisions. More and more the people are adopting policies which extend the power of the Federal Government; indeed, weaken its authority as a Federal Government and constitute it a powerful National Government.

Students of our Government who are familiar with history and the encroachment of governments upon individuals are manifesting concern over the increase in authority of the Government and the acquiescence of the people in such encroachment. When local self-government is weakened, the authority of the general or central government is increased. That increased authority manifests itself in measures which augment the power of the central government and its bureaucratic agencies and which tend toward state socialism. There are some of our citizens who believe that the best interests of the people would be subserved by the Federal Government taking over private enterprise and exercising control over the lives of the people. There are some Americans who support policies looking to state socialism and which, if increased, will culminate in the Federal Government owning and operating substantially most industries. There are some Socialists in our midst who believe that the Government should take over all industry and that the people should look to the Federal Government for employment, and, indeed, for direction in all material and industrial activities.

They are willing to destroy our form of government and to superimpose upon the people a system of state socialism. It is obvious that there is a movement in our country today to augment the power of the Government. There is a growing feeling that we do not need a Federal Government but a unitary government, with the States performing merely the functions of inactive satellites, having their existence in and being within the periphery of the influence and power of a strong national state.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] indicated a moment ago that the States are not relying upon themselves to levy taxes for the purpose of maintaining their respective State governments. Undoubtedly that observation is true. Many of the States are not meeting their obligations or those of their political subdivisions, and are appealing to and relying upon the Federal Government to meet their deficits, and to take over, in part, duties and obligations which, under our form of government, belong to the States.

I think it will be conceded that demands are being made upon the Federal Government by the States and their political subdivisions for contributions for the maintenance of institutions belonging to the States and their political subdivisions. The statement is not infrequently heard that Senators and Congressmen are merely errand boys to obtain from the Federal Government funds, contributions, and benefits to be used to meet obligations of the States, and to carry out responsibilities which, under our form of government, rest exclusively upon them.

I know that any appeal for a renaissance of States' rights, and for the protection of local State government, and individualism will fall upon deaf ears.

The Democratic Party for years, proclaimed itself as the defender of the rights of the States and of individual liberty. The strength of the party grew out of the fact that it was preserving local self-government, that it was the protector of the individual, and that it was the enemy of all movements which sought to undermine the States and to aggrandize the Federal Government. The Democrats accepted the philosophy of Jefferson and the great leaders of the South, as well as some of the strong pillars of democracy in the North. We hear but little today about the philosophy of Jefferson and John C. Calhoun, one of the greatest political philosophers our country has ever produced. We now get some of our political philosophy from socialism.

I admit that when our country is at war the authority of the Federal Government is more pervasive and its responsibilities are increased, but even when our country is at war, there are rights and liberties of which the people may not be deprived.

There may be usurpation in times of war as there has been usurpation by the Federal Government in times of peace.

If our Government is to be preserved, it must be a constitutional government, a federal government, and a democratic government; and it must remain as a symbol of liberty and justice, not only to those within its borders but to the people in all parts of the world.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I wish to be recorded as voting against the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, is this the home-guard bill?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I wish to make a brief statement in regard to it. I do not expect to oppose the enactment of the bill, but the organization of the home guard is just as useless as giving a hitch hiker three thumbs. The bill is not necessary at all.

The Congress and the States have worked out a formula for the operation of the National Guard in the States. It has been difficult and it has taken a long time to work it out satisfactorily, but it has been done. We became engaged in a constitutional argument yesterday on the floor of the Senate, which indicated how difficult it is to provide for the operation of a military unit within a State and harmonize all its parts with the Federal interests.

The only thing that is necessary, the only thing that is required, is for the War Department or the Federal Government not to call all the National Guard officers out at one time. Leave a company of them, or leave a few of them, in each State to function while the rest of the Guard are gone, and let the group which is left behind take their training at some subsequent time. That is all that is needed.

But an effort is made, by the enactment of a law of the kind proposed, to provide an entirely new military organization. The bill does not provide for an expansion of the National Guard, or anything of that kind, but sets up a new military organization within the States, which is bound to cause a conflict between the National Guard and the new organization when the National Guard returns home.

So long as the committee was willing to put into the proposal a requirement that no State military organization should be set up without a State law, naturally not very much harm could come from it, for vigilante committees could not operate in a State. So that difficulty is removed. But when one reads the bill he will be suprised at the plan of operation between the Federal Government and the States.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator referred to the plan of operation between the Federal Government and the States set up in the bill. What has concerned me so much about the bill is the lack of any plan of operation or cooperation between the State authorities and the Federal Government. The bill provides in one part that the Secretary of War shall prescribe the rules and regulations for the operation of the military organization, and in another that it shall be governed by State law. I was just wondering what would happen if the Secretary of War should say, as to a single State, that it must have a thousand men enlisted in the unit, and the State law should provide for 5,000. There is nothing in the bill, as I read it, that would determine which should control—the regulation of the Secretary of War or the act of the State government.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. There is nothing in the bill which would control that, and that is why I say the formula for the operation of the proposed organization cooperatively between the Federal Government and the State Government is left hanging in the air, just as the Senator from Georgia states.

That is the difficulty of it; but the pitiful thing is that the bill is not necessary at all. We still have the National Guard. We are not in war. The War Department can leave sufficient numbers of the National Guard at home to take care of all the needs of the States. No one can deny that. Part of the National Guard ought to be left at home instead of setting up the new military organization as proposed under the provisions of the bill.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill, H. R. 10495, was passed.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, Senate bill 4175 will be indefinitely postponed.

USE OF CERTAIN PARTS OF THE PUBLIC DOMAIN

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, a few days ago House bill 9705 was passed over upon objection of the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED].

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the calendar number of the bill?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It is No. 2238. I have discussed the matter with the junior Senator from Kansas, and he is not willing to agree to the Senate committee amendments. The bill relates in the main to the State of Utah, and I do not desire to be responsible for holding up or blocking a bill which has passed the House, and has likewise been approved by the Senate committee, with amendments. So I ask that the bill be considered on the theory that I shall ask that all committee amendments be rejected so the bill, if it is agreeable that it shall be passed, will be passed as it was passed by the House.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oklahoma for the immediate consideration of House bill 9705?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9705) to make more effective use of certain parts of the public domain, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I ask that the amendments of the committee be disagreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the Senator explain the bill?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The bill relates in the main to Utah. It provides for amending the Ute Indians, of Utah, jurisdictional act of June 28, 1938, for the addition of certain lands to a reservation in Utah, and authorizes the institution of suits in the Court of Claims by the Ute Indians to assert their rights against the Government. Those are the provisions of the House bill. If the Senate shall disagree to the Senate committee amendments the Utah Indians in question will, under the House bill, be permitted to go into the Court of Claims to assert their rights against the Government.

A Senate committee amendment provides that the Cherokee Indians of my State likewise would have the right to go into the Court of Claims to assert rights they have or think they have against the Government. The junior Senator from Kansas, however, does not wish this to become an omnibus bill, and inasmuch as the amendment was placed in the bill by the Senate committee I shall ask that the amendment be disagreed to.

Another amendment relates to other tribes of Indians, giving them the right to go into the Court of Claims to assert their claims against the Government. It is not in the nature of a Court of Claims bill, but is somewhat similar. Inasmuch as I ask that the amendments be disagreed to, I presume the Senate will not be interested in knowing in detail about the amendments, other than what I have stated.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oklahoma asks that the committee amendments be not agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, on page 19 of the bill, in section 2, is a Senate amendment limiting the exchange of lands to the State of Utah. It seems to me that inasmuch as the bill has to do with the State of Utah, as the Senator stated, he ought not to object to limiting this exchange of lands to the State of Utah. Some of us do not want this broad authority given to the Secretary of the Interior to exchange certain lands for lands in our States.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, my effort is wholly to bring about the passage of the House bill, on the theory that if we do not pass the House bill it will probably be too late to obtain a conference, and to obtain any legislation now. The bill can go over until later in the session, after election perhaps, and it can then be taken up. I am willing to have the bill taken up on its merits, if we can get an agreement, and consider the amendments, and agree to such as we can reach an agreement upon, or disagree to such as we cannot reach an agreement upon. I am trying to act in accord with the demands of the junior Senator from Kansas.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. As I understand, the bill was never considered by the House Indian Affairs Committee at all.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The Senator is correct. The bill went to the House Public Lands Committee.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senate has passed, as I understand, several bills permitting certain Indian tribes to go into the Court of Claims, and the House has held up all those bills.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Most of them; not all.

Mr. WHEELER. Practically all of them, as I understand. There are pending on the calendar several bills granting permission to the various tribes of Montana to go into the Court of Claims. All those bills have been held up. In this case a Court of Claims bill was tacked onto a House bill. It had no reference at all to the subject which was originally covered. I feel that this is not the way to legislate. I feel it is just as appropriate for the Senate Indian Affairs Committee to tack Court of Claims bills onto other bills as it was to tack on a bill to another bill pending in the Public Lands Committee of the House, and for that reason I shall object at this time until I have an opportunity to look into the matter further.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is heard, and the bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION ACT

The bill (H. R. 10322) to amend further the District of Columbia Unemployment Compensation Act was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FIRST, SECOND, AND THIRD NATIONAL STEAMSHIP COS.

The bill (S. 4400) for the relief of the First National Steamship Co., the Second National Steamship Co., and the Third National Steamship Co. was announced as next in order.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, a similar bill, House bill 10440, should be substituted for the Senate bill.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska that House bill 10440 be substituted for the Senate bill, and that the House bill be now considered?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10440), an act for the relief of the First National Steamship Co., the Second National Steamship Co., and the Third National Steamship Co., which was read twice by its title.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, Senate bill 4400 is indefinitely postponed.

OVERTIME COMPENSATION FOR EMPLOYEES OF THE WAR DEPARTMENT, ETC.

The bill (S. 4208) establishing overtime rates for compensation for employees of the War Department, its field services, the Panama Canal Zone, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, there is no objection whatever to the bill, so far as I now know. I should like to have some member of the committee, however, explain whether or not its provisions would supplement the provisions of other legislation in which we undertook to deal with prevailing rates of labor, and generally dealing with construction items of that sort in the Canal Zone.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I think the answer to that question is, "Yes," although the word "supplement" is hardly the right word. We have passed a measure providing for an 8-hour day and a 40-hour week for the ordinary workers in Government arsenals and those now doing defense work. Other workers are on an annual wage. In order to make the pay during this time consistent the Senate committee amendment is necessary. Its adoption will make it possible for the Secretary of War to administer the work in arsenals, and other work, in such a way that there will be real understanding and fairness to all concerned.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have just received a letter from the Secretary of War concerning the bill, which I should like to have read at this time, with the Senator's permission.

Mr. DANAHER. I shall be glad to hear it.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, October 9, 1940.

Hon. ALBEN W. BARKLEY,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The War Department deems it urgent that S. 4208 be enacted into law as soon as possible. This bill in effect sanctions the employment of certain key personnel at the arsenals on an overtime basis, and its passage would speed up considerably production of munitions at the arsenals. It has been reported out of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Sincerely yours,

HENRY L. STIMSON,
Secretary of War.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator from Utah. I simply wished to make sure that there was no relaxation of the protection previously written into law during the session.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. That is correct.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4208) establishing overtime rates for compensation for employees of the War Department, its field services, the Panama Canal Zone, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That notwithstanding the provisions of any other law, compensation for employment in excess of 40 hours in any administrative workweek computed at a rate not less than one and one-half times the regular rate is hereby authorized to be paid at such places and to such monthly, per diem, hourly, and piecework employees of the field services of the War Department and the field services of the Panama Canal whose wages are set by wage boards or other wage fixing authorities, and also to professional and subprofessional employees, and to blueprinters, photostat and rotaprint operators, inspectors, storekeepers, toolkeepers, and shop superintendents of the CAF service, as defined by the Classification Act of March 4, 1923 (42 Stat. 1488; 5 U. S. C., ch. 13), as amended, as shall be designated from time to time by the Secretary of War or the Governor of the Panama Canal, as the case may be, and the Secretary of War and the Governor of the Panama Canal are authorized to prescribe for their respective services, regulations for overtime employment for said employees or any of them: Provided, That in determining the overtime compensation of the foregoing per annum Government employees the pay for one day shall be considered to be one three-hundred-and-sixtieth of their respective per annum salaries.

SEC. 2. The provisions of this act shall be effective during the national emergency declared by the President on September 8, 1939, to exist, and shall terminate June 30, 1942, unless the Congress shall otherwise provide.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill establishing overtime rates for compensation for employees of the field services of the War Department, and the field services of the Panama Canal, and for other purposes."

LILLIAN M. REYMONDA

The bill (H. R. 7916) granting 6 months' pay to Lillian M. Reymonda was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL INDEFINITELY POSTPONED

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. House bill 10391, to increase the authorized numbers of warrant officers and enlisted men in the Army Mine Planter Service, and for other purposes, was passed by the House on October 7, and is on the Secretary's desk. Yesterday the House passed an identical Senate bill, Senate bill 4275, without amendment. If there be no objection, House bill 10391 will be indefinitely postponed. The Chair hears no objection, and the order is made.

DEFINITION OF CERTAIN COMMON CARRIERS BY WATER

Mr. KING. Mr. President, at the last call of the calendar a measure which had been reported from the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs by its distinguished chairman, the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], was passed over. I refer to Senate Joint Resolution 296, Calendar No. 2247. I ask unanimous consent to recur to that measure.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 296) to define common carriers by water engaged in certain commerce with the Virgin Islands of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. KING. The joint resolution was unanimously reported by the committee.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That for the purposes (1) of this resolution; (2) of the Shipping Act, 1916, as amended (U. S. C., title 46, sec. 801; 39 Stat. 728, ch. 451, approved September 7, 1916); and (3) of the Intercoastal Shipping Act, 1933, as amended (U. S. C., title 46, sec. 843; 47 Stat. 1425, ch. 199, approved March 3, 1933), every common carrier by water between ports in the States, Territories, districts, and possessions of the United States and ports in the Virgin Islands of the United States, or between ports in the said Virgin Islands, shall, while engaged in commerce between such ports, be deemed to be (a) a common carrier by water, and (b) a common carrier by water in foreign commerce, as defined in and subject to the terms of the said Shipping Act, 1916, as amended, but shall not be deemed to be a common carrier in interstate commerce as defined in said act.

SEC. 2. This resolution shall expire on the date of the going into effect of the coastwise laws of the United States as to the Virgin Islands of the United States by proclamation of the President under authority of the act of April 16, 1936 (U. S. C., Supp. IV, title 46, sec. 877; 49 Stat. 1207).

The preamble was agreed to.

FARM VIEWS OF WENDELL L. WILLKIE

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks an editorial from Wallaces' Farmer of October 5, 1940, dealing with the farm views of Candidate Willkie.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From Wallaces' Farmer of October 5, 1940]

NO ACREAGE CONTROL FOR WILLKIE

Every farmer in the Corn Belt would like to think that the farm program had been taken out of politics, and that one political party would work just as hard as the other to support and improve the present program. That was why many farmers listened with strained interest to Wendell Willkie's farm speech at Omaha last week.

In spite of Willkie's earlier description of the A. A. A. as an "irresponsible experiment" and of A. A. A. cooperators as "victims * * * on a dole"; in spite of the Republican platform's denunciation of production control, and in spite of the attempt by Republican Members of the House to wipe out corn-loan funds, a great many Corn Belt farmers still hoped that Willkie would rise above his party platform, his party supporters, and his own past utterances to give some real assurance to agriculture that the troubled period ahead would not find farmers deserted by their Government as they were after the crash of 1929.

That was what farmers hoped for. What they got was something different.

Willkie, it seemed, believes that the farmers are the backbone of the Nation, that farmers deserve more income, that family farms are fine, and that domestic and foreign markets for farm products should be expanded.

"But how are you going to do it?" listening farmers asked the radio.

Mr. Willkie went on to say that business recovery was vital to agriculture, and he added that his pledge to revive industry was "just as important to the farmer as it is to the factory worker or the businessman." Then he continued:

"And I know how to fulfill it."

There he left listening farmers in suspense. He said nothing about how he intends to bring complete industrial recovery to America.

The American farmer needs larger markets, said Mr. Willkie. At home, "it will be my policy to develop new industries."

What industries?

Again farmers were left to guess.

He will try to increase the export market.

How? By taking notes in payment? By importing more gold? Or by the only sound method, importing more goods in payment? If the latter, what goods? Whose tariffs will he reduce?

Once more, farmers can only guess what he means to do.

"Special treatment must be accorded these (export) commodities," said Mr. Willkie.

What kind of special treatment? Export subsidies? Domestic price fixing? A two-price plan?

Farmers can only guess.

Surplus commodities purchases to feed the poor will be continued, said Mr. Willkie. But how will these purchase be made? Will the Government continue to step into the market at times and places where a surplus is beating down prices, and by judicious purchases keep prices fairly stable? If that is Mr. Willkie's intention, why are practically all grain and commodity speculators supporting him? Is he fooling them, or fooling the farmers?

Farmers can only guess.

Mr. Willkie declared that he liked some parts of the present farm program. He specified which parts.

Willkie said he favored the food-stamp plan. But listening farmers remembered that Mr. Willkie's Republican Congressmen on May 9 voted 128 to 18 to kill parity payments.

Willkie said he favored the conservation program. But listeners remembered that Republicans in Congress voted this spring by 131 to 22 to kill parity payments.

Willkie said he favored some kind of corn loans. But farmers could not forget that Republicans in Congress voted, on August 1, by 106 to 38, to kill corn-loan funds.

What Willkie promises the farmer is less than half of what is now being done for agriculture by the New Deal. The Republican record in Congress raises great doubt as to whether Mr. Willkie could deliver even that half. Why should any farmer want to trade a whole loaf for the promise of half a loaf?

The Willkie farm program, as outlined at Omaha, sounds painfully like the answer of a politician to the question: "How little can I promise these folks and still get their votes?"

We do not think this was Willkie's own work. Mr. Willkie is a competent lawyer, who has risen to the top of his profession as an advocate and defender of big business. Knowing nothing about agriculture, he has had to take advice on farm questions. And this advice has apparently been that he should promise farmers just enough to get by.

This is why thoughtful farmers were shocked and alarmed by the Omaha speech. By failing to endorse production control, and by ignoring the fact that the present corn-loan system will collapse without production control, Willike indicated that he does not know what it takes to make a farm program work.

It is just as if Willkie came down the road, locked at your barn, and said:

"That's a fine barn. I never saw a better weathervane. Good roof, too, though it needs some shingles. Fine hay loft. There's only one thing wrong with that barn, and that's the foundation. Tomorrow morning, I'm going to hook a tractor onto the foundation and jerk it right out from under the barn. But I wouldn't change the barn itself a bit. No, sir."

All Mr. Willkie is going to do is to take out the foundation of the farm program by leaving out acreage control.

The Corn Belt knows better, even if Mr. Willkie does not. In 1932, before production control, we had a crop of 2,933,000,000 bushels of corn in the Nation. In 1940, with production control, we are getting a crop around 2,300,000,000 bushels.

There wasn't much difference in the weather, if you take the Nation as a whole. Proof is that the average yield per acre in 1932 was 26.5 bushels; in 1940, 26.6 bushels.

The difference in the size of the 1932 and 1940 corn crops can be explained by only one thing: We have an A. A. A. in 1940; we didn't have one in 1932.

And farmers remember too well that, without production control, corn sold for 10 cents a bushel or less in Iowa in 1932. This year cooperators will be able to sell their corn at 60 cents. Things are different now.

Will they stay different?

That will depend on the November election. The present corn loan—which Mr. Willkie does not understand—and production control—which Mr. Willkie does not like—will not long survive a Willkie victory.

We suggest that farmers turn to page 14 and read the Willkie speech. See if it holds out any promise for a continuation of production control.

We urge that farmers turn to page 15 and read the text of the present Corn Loan Act. How many farmers want to trade the specific pledges of the present law for a foggy assurance that some kind of corn loans will be provided?

To find what Willkie really thinks about the farm program, it is necessary to note what he says in speeches some distance away from Iowa. At Elwood, Ind., on August 17, he classed the A. A. A. as an "irresponsible experiment" and farmers cooperating with the A. A. A. as "victims * * * on a dole." And at Yonkers, N. Y., on September 28, just 2 days after the Omaha speech, he repeated the familiar Liberty League attack about farmers "who get checks from Washington for produce they haven't grown."

This is a disappointment to many farmers, but it's just as well that they should know at last where Wendell Willkie stands. Now they can vote with their eyes open.

EXTENSION OF SUGAR ACT OF 1937

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, when the sugar-control program was under consideration several days ago in the Senate I was unavoidably detained on account of illness in my family. I intended then to make some remarks. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD a statement of what I then intended to say and should have said had I been present.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. President, I want to voice my protest against the payment, out of the United States Treasury, of unreasonable and colossal benefits to certain favored sugar growers, and especially those living outside of the United States proper.

It is true that a tax, in the nature of an excise tax, is paid on the production of sugar; but this tax, just as the tax on tobacco, the tax on gasoline, and many other excise taxes, are passed on to the consumer, and are, in fact, paid out of the pockets of the American people, just as other taxes are paid.

In this connection I call attention to the statement made by the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Wallace:

"I know that you will also appreciate the difficulty, from the standpoint of the public interest, in finding adequate justification for a policy of charging American consumers higher prices for sugar. In my letter to Senator Bulkley, referred to above, attention was called to the fact that 'It is estimated that at current prices American consumers are obliged to pay more than $350,000,000 per annum in excess of the value, at world prices, of their annual sugar supply (without allowance for the estimated net revenue of approximately $47,000,000 represented by the difference between disbursements under the Sugar Act of 1937 and receipts from the tariff and the 50-cent tax on sugar, or for the possible increase in world price that might result from changed conditions). This is equivalent to a tax of approximately $2.70 per capita on a population of 129,000,000 persons. It means on the average a levy of more than $10 per family, including that one-third of the Nation which is ill-nourished, and it represents an amount of purchasing power equal to more than 50 quarts of milk and 50 loaves of bread for each family in the United States.'"

I desire first to list the names of 43 sugar corporations obtaining more than $100,000 annually out of the Treasury of the United States. These 43 producers received an average of more than $259,000 each annually. Why, Mr. President, should the United States Sugar Corporation receive $580,319 for the year 1938 and $430,420 for the year 1937? Why should the Hawaiian Commercial & Sugar Co., Ltd., receive $516,542 annually; not to mention the Luce & Co., S. & C., receiving $560,026; the Oahu Sugar Co., Ltd., receiving $516,468; the Pioneer Mill Co., Ltd., receiving $402,466; and other large payments in the same proportion?

It is difficult for me to understand, and no one has given a satisfactory explanation as to why the sugar growers of the United States, 77,398, are receiving less than $250, annually, and these favored corporations and individuals are obtaining sums which appear to be constantly increasing each year.

The average farmer in the United States under the soil-conservation program received $86.04. The legal maximum payment under the soil-conservation program was $10,000 to any one firm, corporation, or individual in any 1 year. Why, then, should 43 sugar corporations receive more than $100,000, some ranging in excess of $500,000, and many others receiving other large payments out of the Federal Treasury, greatly in excess of the amount paid to the American farmer who produces other farm products under the soil-conservation program?

I ask unanimous consent to insert, as a part of my remarks, a list of those receiving more than $100,000, to be followed by a list of those receiving more than $10,000 under the sugar program, all of which is paid out of the General Treasury.

I intend, Mr. President, to continue to call attention to these payments, which I think have now reached a "racket," as unreasonable and unjustifiable, until Congress takes remedial action to correct these excessive subsidies costing the United States Treasury over $45,000,000 annually.

PROPOSED RECESS ARRANGEMENT

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the calendar having been completed, I feel that it is due Members of the Senate for me to make an observation or two, to see if we can arrive at an understanding about the program for the immediate future in regard to sessions of the Senate.

As everyone knows, efforts have been made during the past few weeks to ascertain whether it would be feasible to adopt a concurrent resolution providing for a recess of the two Houses of Congress until some date in November. The date suggested was the 18th of November, which is on Monday. The 11th of November was also suggested; but, in view of the fact that the election comes on the 5th, it was felt that Senators are entitled to remain in their homes another week after the election. Therefore, we have been making an effort to ascertain whether or not it would be possible for the two Houses to recess until the 18th of November, which is the second Monday after the election.

The Senate has completed its program of necessary legislation. That does not mean that there are not bills on the calendar in which Senators are interested, and which they should be glad to have passed, but we have now completed the urgent program of legislation. Senators are anxious to know what we may do, and I am anxious that they may know what they may do, with some degree of safety and assurance.

We all know that there is a bare quorum in the city today, if there is a quorum. I doubt very much if there is. I certainly feel that there will not be one tomorrow, because it has been generally understood that in one way or another we in the Senate would arrive at an understanding about what we shall do in the next 3 or 4 weeks.

For reasons which are no doubt satisfactory to Members of the other body, it has been impossible up to this time to obtain any agreement or pass any resolution providing for a definite recess from now until any time in November. What the House will do with respect to its procedure is not a matter for our concern; but, in view of the situation, it has occurred to me that we might well enter into an understanding that we shall not transact any important business between now and the 18th of November unless in the meantime some emergency or contingency should arise which would require the presence of the Senate; and that during that period we shall meet formally every 3 days in order to comply with the Constitution—preferably on Mondays and Thursdays—with the understanding that nothing shall be done except the routine meeting and adjournment, and that Senators may be assured that advantage will not be taken of their absence for the transaction of any important business.

I am wondering if we may have such an understanding. In that connection, I wish to say that if we should pursue that course it would be necessary for some Senator to be here every third day to move a recess or adjournment, as the case may be, for 3 days. I shall take on that responsibility for part of the time, but I hope to be able to get away for a little while. However, some Senator must be here for that purpose.

I wish to couple with the suggestion the assurance on my part that if any emergency should arise requiring the presence of the Senate, I shall take the responsibility and the initiative in conferring with the minority leader, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], or in his absence, with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], his able, courteous, and gentlemanly assistant, to determine whether or not any emergency exists which requires the presence of the Senate.

That sort of agreement need not be in the form of an order of the Senate. If Senators who do not think we ought to adjourn for a definite period feel that something has arisen which makes it necessary that the Senate be present as a body, we shall see that Senators are notified.

I should like to have the views of the Senator from Vermont with respect to the suggestion I have made.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, the minority views respecting this subject are very definite. They were formulated some time ago in a conference and are substantially to the effect that the Congress should remain in session during the present emergency. It is my duty, therefore, to adhere to that policy in whatever I may say or do with respect to this matter.

If I correctly interpret the proposal, it has in it an element which departs from that policy to a certain extent. I ask whether or not my interpretation is correct. If we should agree to the proposal exactly as made, would the effect of it be a recess until the 18th of November, subject, however, to the meetings to be held every third day, at which certain business could be transacted and certain other business could not be transacted, namely, important business could not be transacted but unimportant business could be transacted. Is that a correct interpretation of the proposal?

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, that sort of an interpretation would lead to the question, What is important and what is not important? My suggestion contemplated only the necessary formal business, to meet and adjourn. That would not bar the introduction of bills, I presume, on the days when the Senate was in session or the presentation of resolutions, or it would not, and probably ought not, bar the reception of messages from the House of Representatives, if that body is still in session, so that they could be received here; but the Senate would not be expected to legislate.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, that clarifies the proposal a good deal for me, because I think that the responsibility of passing upon what is important and what is not important might result differently than we now intend it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I should not want the agreement to involve the understanding that anybody is to be permitted to determine whether any proposition is important or unimportant. My thought is that during this period, unless some exigency requires the calling of the Senate together, there shall be no legislation at all.

Mr. AUSTIN. May I inquire, Mr. President, if the distinguished leader of the majority would, upon request of the floor leader of the minority, and upon ascertaining the facts represented and believed to justify the calling into action of the Senate, give a notice of, say, 3 days to Senators, so that a quorum could be convened for the transaction of business during the period intervening between now and the 18th of November?

Mr. BARKLEY. Let me see if I understand the Senator. Do I understand him to inquire whether, upon the request of the minority leader, the Senate should be called back?

Mr. AUSTIN. My suggestion was not so limited and arbitrary as that.

Mr. BARKLEY. I want to find out just what it is.

Mr. AUSTIN. If I can repeat it, I will do so. It was this: Would the majority leader, upon the request of the minority leader and upon ascertaining to be true the facts upon which the representation justifying the calling of the Senate into action upon any business whatever was made by the minority leader, give a notice of a reasonable time so that a quorum could be present and transact business?

Mr. BARKLEY. I would put it in this way, if the Senator will permit: If the minority leader should request or suggest that a matter had arisen which required the Members of the Senate to be present, I would, of course, at once confer with him in regard to the matter, and try to arrive at an understanding with him about it. I think, at least, I ought to be left some discretion as to conferring with the minority leader about any request he might make, which, of course, I would do in any event without any understanding to that effect. But I should like to have it in this fashion, that, upon a request of the minority leader, he and I, or whomever he might designate, either the Senator from Oregon or the Senator from Vermont, would confer immediately upon the matter which he would bring to my attention, and, if it were felt of sufficient importance to call the Members back, that a 3 days' notice would be given.

Mr. AUSTIN. Now will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Assuming that a majority of the Members of the Senate should convene here at any time during the period from now until the 18th of November, does the Senator from Kentucky understand that there is anything about this agreement which would prevent action by a majority of the Senate here during the period from now until November 18?

Mr. BARKLEY. No; if a majority of the Senate were to assemble under a call such as we have been discussing, I would then construe the agreement to be at an end, and that the Senate could then proceed, if it desired, with legislation which was contemplated in the call for the return of the Members.

Mr. AUSTIN. Then am I correct in understanding the Senator's proposal to mean, in effect, that the Congress does remain in session during the present emergency as at other times until final adjournment, this being merely a temporary recess subject to change according to the will of the Senate?

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course, any Senator could call for a quorum on the days the Senate was in session?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; there is no way by which we could prevent any Senator who happens to be here on any meeting day calling for a quorum. Of course, if there is no quorum, the only thing the Senate can do is either to send for a quorum or adjourn. It can always adjourn without a quorum.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President——

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Last June we merely took a recess upon the precatory editorials contained in various journals and newspapers that it was absolutely necessary for us to be present at all times and ready at all times to perform the functions that were ours. We are approaching an agreement to leave, and, instead of a plan that will enable us immediately to come together, we are leaving the situation wide open, practically adjourning, and as to that adjournment, although I have nothing to say about the matter—Senators will understand me, and I only voice one man's view—I will not consent. If we refused to adjourn last June because of the great emergency that existed then, now, a hundred times more, the result of our adjourning would be disastrous. If in June there was a condition which rendered it unwise for us to take an adjournment, now, in October, it is doubly unwise, it is a hundredfold more unwise to take an adjournment. Because of that, because it is obvious—I do not want to discuss foreign relations, and I never discuss foreign relations unless they can be discussed without any danger of one's remarks upon the floor of the Senate being taken as the remarks of the Government itself—that the situation that exists today is more delicate than any that has existed in all the time we have been here, for us to move to adjourn, in one fashion or another, for us to devise means to get out of here under some sort of left-handed arrangement, is to me unspeakable, and it ought not to be undertaken.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I suppose that no purpose would be served by deciding what happened last June, although Senators may use that as a reason why we ought not now to adjourn, or even go home. We all know that the Senate is not going to legislate in the immediate future, so far as we can tell. What is proposed is not an adjournment; it does not take the hands of Congress off the situation. Senators and Members of the other House, too, are going home constantly. It was necessary to call back Members from their homes in order to get a quorum to vote on some matter in the other body this week. We all know that there is not going to be a quorum of the Senate here after today, if there is a quorum today. The question is a practical matter, whether we will stay here and meet every day without a quorum, with no business before us that is necessary to be transacted, or whether we may enter into this arrangement, which protects everybody, with the understanding, of course, that Members may feel some assurance and some ease if they desire to leave Washington and return to their homes.

I think that practically every Senator would like to know what he may depend upon. If we are going to be in session every day, no matter whether we transact any business or not, and somebody introduces a bill or makes a speech and Senators are at home, when they go down the street immediately they are asked why they are at home when Congress is in session. It takes a good deal of explaining to inform the average person who does not know the processes of legislation why a Senator can leave when the Congress is in session, although it is doing nothing. All we are undertaking to do is so to arrange matters that if Members wish to return to their homes, or if their situation requires their return, or if they would like to have a short vacation, they may do so in perfect confidence that if anything arises in the meantime which requires their presence they will be brought back here as soon as it is possible to notify them.

I can appreciate that many Senators who really need to be away and ought to go away during this period of 3 or 4 weeks have some hesitation in leaving unless they can be assured that they may do so in safety. The proposal is not for my accommodation. It is a practical matter for the accommodation of Senators. If it is adopted, I do not think anything will be lost in the way of legislation, or in our joint responsibility with the executive departments in regard to any situation which now exists or which may arise in the immediate future.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky is always frank in his statement of matters of this sort. Let us be equally frank.

Of course, Senators may go away with the idea that anything they may desire can be in the future protected and can be in the future suggested by them; but no Senator can go away with the absolute certainty that some Senator will not break in here with a speech on some occasion, and then absent Senators will be met with just exactly what the Senator from Kentucky suggests.

That, however, is not the reason why the objection was made by me. The reason was that we are in a situation so near to war that it will take but a push to send us over the brink. Here is a situation so close to war that it will take only the slightest incident to bring about a war. In that condition, I say we ought not to take any 4-day, 3-day, or 2-day recesses, or any recesses at all that will take us away from this body.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have said all I can say about the matter. Under the circumstances, I feel that we are justified in entering into this understanding. I feel that Senators are entitled to know whether they are justified or whether they are to be criticized or condemned if they leave Washington for a few weeks in order to go to their homes or elsewhere.

I do not think anybody will lose any rights if the proposal is adopted. Of course, if the Senate is in session every day, there is no way to prevent Senators from making speeches; and sometimes it has transpired, and it might transpire again, that inflammatory speeches made here in the Senate would be as harmful to our international relations as any action that might be taken elsewhere. Even in the event of our taking 3-day recesses there is no guaranty that some Senator will not make a speech.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President——

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. At the beginning of each session, when virtually no bills have been reported, it has been the habit to recess from time to time over 1 day or 2 days, or even 3 days. If we enter into this understanding, no Senator will be driven out of Washington. If any Senator wants to stay here, he may stay; and if occasion should arise, such Senators will be on the ground to take action, by conduct or otherwise, to see to it that other Members are brought back.

As I understand, this is entirely a voluntary proposal. Any Senator who wants to stay here and watch the situation will have the privilege of doing so.

Mr. BARKLEY. Undoubtedly that is true; and I have no doubt that some Senators will remain here. It may be more convenient for them to do so. They may not have any requirements elsewhere that will take them away. But I can assure the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] and all other Senators, if my assurance is worth anything—perhaps it is not—that I, of course, expect to keep in touch with the situation, not only every 3 days but every day, so far as I can, and that there will be no trouble in getting the Senate back here on any day, after proper notice, so that Members may arrive during that interval, if the necessity for it should arise.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall reluctantly agree to the suggestion made by the Senator from Kentucky. I appreciate the situation in which the Senate finds itself and understand the difficulty if not the impossibility of maintaining a quorum of the Senate in order to properly legislate. Many Senators have already departed for their homes and others have made preparations to leave Washington tonight or tomorrow. There is a feeling upon the part of many Senators that there should be an adjournment or recess for several weeks and the suggestion has been made that the Senate recess until November 18. Personally I should be glad to have measures which are pending disposed of. There are two very important measures to which I shall refer in a moment which, in my opinion, should be acted upon before any recess or adjournment is taken. One of those measures is S. 4391, which authorizes negotiations by the Government for the acquisition of certain British possessions in the Pacific, and also authorizes the President, through the Export-Import Bank of Washington, or such other Federal agency as he may designate, to make such loans and extensions of credit to the Government of Great Britain as he may deem advisable.

It also provides for reducing the amount of the indebtedness of the British Government to the United States. It also provides that after the date of the enactment the prohibitions contained in sections 7 and 8 of the Neutrality Act of 1939 and in the act entitled, "An act to prohibit financial transactions with any foreign government in default of its obligations to the United States," shall not apply with respect to the Government of Great Britain or any political subdivision thereof, or with respect to any person (as defined in either of such acts), organization, or association acting for or on behalf of the Government of Great Britain or any such political subdivision.

That bill is before the Committee on Foreign Relations and has not yet been taken up for consideration. I sincerely hope that it will receive favorable consideration at an early date and that it will also be approved by the Senate.

We all realize that conditions in the world today are most serious and that critical conditions exist in many countries. May I add that we are part of the world and may not ignore conflicts which are being waged in many parts of the world, and the conflagration which engulfs many nations and many peoples.

I appreciate the fact that our country may not escape international conflicts and I sincerely hope that the United States may not be drawn into this great conflgration. The measure which I offered refers to the Pacific Ocean and territories bordering on the ocean and emphasizes the fact that our Government has interests in the Pacific Ocean and the territories bordering upon the same. I might add that the United States and Japan are parties to treaties affecting China. Under the Nine-Power Treaty, to which the United States and Japan were signatories, the territorial integrity and the political independence of China were to be respected. It is needless to say that Japan was also a party to the Four-Power Treaty, which has to do with China and the Pacific. The United States, as well as Japan and other nations, are signatories to the Kellogg-Briand pact which imposes obligations upon the signatories to the same. These treaties are of great interest to China, and they likewise are of concern to all of the great powers. The measure which I offered calls for affirmative aid in behalf of Great Britain in the mighty conflict in which she is engaged. She is not only fighting for the liberties of the people of Great Britain but for the liberties of the American people and of democratic nations and peoples everywhere. It is obvious that if Great Britain should be conquered by the axis powers this Republic would not escape assaults at the hands of Hitler and his associates in their efforts to destroy democratic nations everywhere and, as many believe, conquer and divide the world. If Japan shall dominate the Pacific Ocean and Mussolini shall control the Mediterranean and northern Africa, and Hitler and Stalin bring Europe and other parts of the world under their authority, the Western Hemisphere, and particularly this Republic, will be called upon to meet a deadly and powerful foe.

It is obvious that nations that are seeking to destroy democracy treat with contempt all moral obligations and treaties and solemn covenants to which they are parties. Moral and legal obligations have no place in their plans or policies. All restraints imposed by international law are disregarded and revolutionary movements which deal with international morality and justice and decent relations among nations are regarded with contempt and the foundations on which justice and freedom and international relations rest are being undermined. We read of the barbarism which existed in many countries, of the brutal and oppressive rules imposed upon helpless peoples, and yet the horrors and cruelties of the past are reappearing in countries following Nazi philosophy, and the foundations of liberty, justice, and democracy are being assailed in many parts of the world.

These are some of the reasons which prompted me to offer the resolution to which I have referred, and which I sincerely hope will meet the approval of Congress and the American people. That is one of the measures which I had hoped would be considered before a recess was taken or this Congress had adjourned.

There is another measure of importance which I think the consideration of has been unreasonably delayed by the Senate. I refer to the so-called Logan-Walter bill, which passed the House by an overwhelming majority.

When it came to the Senate it was referred to the Judiciary Committee and by that committee promptly approved and favorably reported to the Senate. Efforts to secure consideration thus far have failed, notwithstanding the merits of the measure and the Nation-wide approval accorded to it. The distinguished leader, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] has denied all appeals which have been made for its consideration. I might add that he appeared before the Judiciary Committee of the Senate and earnestly appealed to the committee to delay pressing for consideration. After giving due and respectful consideration, as was proper, to the distinguished Senator, the members of the Judiciary Committee voted to press for speedy action by the Senate. I should add that there was one absentee when the committee took the action just referred to. Efforts have been made from time to time by members of the Judiciary Committee to obtain consideration of the bill, but objections have been made by our leader and perhaps by some other Senators. In my opinion, the Senate has not fairly treated the House in refusing to take action upon this important bill, which, as I have indicated, met with such very great favor by an overwhelming majority of the Members of the House.

As I have indicated, I shall reluctantly consent to the suggestion of our leader with the understanding that as soon as the Senate shall convene, whether it be before the 18th of November or as soon as it meets, that it shall take up for consideration the Logan-Walter bill. I give notice now that efforts will be made to secure consideration of the bill when the Senate meets following the recess or adjournment.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. It is my understanding that the majority leader has definitely indicated not only that when we return in November he will not oppose the consideration by the Senate of the Logan-Walter bill, but that he will actively cooperate to bring it to early consideration on the floor of the Senate. The reason why all efforts were abandoned to bring up the bill now, before a recess, was that it seemed that that was a sensible solution of all the difficulties, as we have the assurance given on the floor of the Senate that the Attorney General's committee will report before the 1st of November. That was the only thing standing in the way; so all of us who were primarily interested in bringing up the bill thought we should join in this informal agreement to let it go over until November. I am very glad, however, that the Senator from Utah has made his statement of his firm insistence that the bill will be brought up at that time in one form or another.

Mr. KING. I may say that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], who is a member of the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate having charge of the bill, informed me that he had had a conference with our leader, and that he was advised that the bill could be taken up as soon as the Senate convenes in November; and with that understanding, as I understood, the Senator from New Mexico departed from the city.

Mr. President, I have only a word to add which is supplemental to what I suggested at the beginning of my remarks. Because of the critical condition in the world today, a condition which affects directly or indirectly the United States, the American people are profoundly interested in the survival of Great Britain and the protection of democratic nations. I believe that the vast majority of the American people regard Great Britain as a defender of the rights of liberty and democratic nations, and, indeed, if not a defender of the United States, at least a valiant and courageous defender of civilization and of the principles of justice and freedom of which this Republic is an exponent. However, as I have stated, notwithstanding my desire to secure prompt action upon the resolution which I have offered, I shall not oppose the request of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. What is the measure to which the Senator refers?

Mr. KING. I am sure that my distinguished friend from California, always alert to matters of international as well as national importance, is somewhat acquainted with the bill, a measure which deals in part with the so-called Johnson Act. I shall not attempt to state the terms of the bill, but repeat that it is an important measure. It calls for material aid to Great Britain, for a modification of the Johnson Act, and in part for the modification of another important act. I do not care to get into an argument in regard to the merits of it.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. The Senator is getting into an argument about the merits.

Mr. KING. I have not argued it; but I shall.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I will give the Senator plenty of opportunity.

Mr. KING. Very well. I will seize it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, that very situation is one which induced me to suggest, when the bill was introduced a week ago, that it would be impossible to consider it at this particular time.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Yes; but I want to make the offer to the Senator from Utah to take up the bill right now.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if that is a challenge, if the responsibility for securing action at this time rested upon my shoulders, I should willingly accept it. But I have respect for the views which have just been announced by the leader and respect for the views of others. Many of the Senators have told me that they desire to return to their homes, and an agreement has been reached by many that they would depart, and while I should be perfectly willing and very glad to take up the bill now, it seems to me it would be futile to attempt to consider it today.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Why bring it up, then?

Mr. KING. I did not bring it up at this time. The Senator is doing it.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. No; the Senator brought it up himself, and he is the one who spoke concerning it. If it is of such magnitude, why delay it for a couple of months? Just think of the harm that will be done, and think of the ruin that might be wrought if this bill continues for 2 months longer not acted on. And that is what is suggested by the distinguished and eloquent gentleman who has preceded me. I would not have him subjected to criticism for the world, would not have him subjected to criticism because he delayed, when the opportunity offered to bring up his bill. So I say to him, bring up the bill.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator want to have it taken up? Can he speak for the Senate? He knows I did not bring it up, and did not ask to bring it up now. On the contrary, I said that I would accede to the views expressed by our leader, and the Senator is only playing upon words, instead of trying to get at the facts.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Does the Senator mean to say he did not bring up this subject matter?

Mr. KING. I did not ask to have it considered now.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. The Senator brought up the subject matter himself.

Mr. KING. Of course, I said that it was an important bill, that it was before the committee, and the committe was not in session. The Senator from California is a member of the committee, and he has wisdom enough to know we could not get the committee together immediately to consider the bill.

Mr. KING subsequently said: Mr. President, I submitted a few observations this afternoon in regard to the bill pending dealing with a number of matters, among them aid to Great Britain. I omitted to ask permission to insert as part of my remarks a number of articles, editorials, and clippings from various newspapers bearing upon the subject. I now ask that permission.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From Readers Digest of September 1940]

RUSH ALL POSSIBLE AID TO BRITAIN!

(By Robert E. Sherwood—playwright, author of Abe Lincoln in Illinois and the current war play, There Shall Be No Night)

The narrow waters of the English Channel are all that stands between Hitler and domination of the globe. "Today we own Germany," his Nazi legions sing, "tomorrow the whole world." A world in which Americans must realize they also have to live, and are faced with the same struggle for survival as the British.

At the outbreak of this war we insulated ourselves against every form of propaganda except the propaganda to keep us out of war. Thinking in terms of the past we rolled ourselves up with moth balls in a rug which we called neutrality. And so far we have been successful in keeping out of a European war. But now we are in deadly peril of being conquered by Hitler's world revolution.

Our people are now fully awake to this peril. Swiftly and with overwhelming public approval we are changing over to a war economy, appropriating 10 billions for defense, levying terrific taxes, gearing industry at top speed for military needs, talking of conscription, feverishly discussing the strategy of defense.

Why? Everyone of us knows why. We know that our turn comes next. In desperate haste we are undertaking draconian measures to defend ourselves against Hitler.

This spontaneous and universal determination to prepare for national defense should lead us to one inevitable conclusion:

We must rush all possible aid to Britain now. For Britain is a vital first line in our defense. While Britain holds out there is, at the best, some hope that Hitler may be stopped; and there is, at worst, the chance of stalling him off and weakening him while our own defenses are being strengthened. If we successfully help now to defend Britain we may save ourselves part of the appalling costs of our program, already adopted, for defending America later.

Instead of being paralyzed by the fear of getting into war, we should act, and act positively, upon the plain, unescapable fact that Hitler is at war with our civilization, our hemisphere, just as surely as he is at war with Britain. The dictatorships have always been at war with everything we believe in, and always will be. Their strength has been a continuous offensive. The weakness of the democracies has been to accept the defensive and beat a continuous retreat.

History shows a succession of empires built by conquest. Every one of them would have been impossible if the victims had united to give one another effective aid. Fearing to fight while they still had allies, they were annihilated one by one.

The chief bulwark between us and the world revolution is Britain's Navy. As a matter of cold, calculating self-preservation we must keep that navy fighting on our side by providing Britain with every needed ship, gun, plane, implement of war, pound of food, and shred of hope that we can give.

The question may be asked whether we can possibly give enough help to the British to enable them to hold out, whether it isn't too late. Isn't it foolish to wait until we are sure nothing can save her?

The objection may be raised: "Why should we pull British chestnuts from the fire?" This sounds shrewdly hardboiled. But how shrewd is it to let the fire burn our chestnuts merely because there are British chestnuts in the same fire? There is an even better answer to this objection. President Roosevelt, with the full support of American opinion, warned Hitler off this hemisphere. So if Hitler attacks Brazil, we shall try to pull Brazil's chestnuts from the fire. We are sworn to defend Rio de Janeiro, 5,500 miles from New York. But we won't defend London, which is only 3,300 miles from New York.

Yet those who would gladly have us rush to the aid of Brazil would abandon, to the greatest potential enemy our country has had in a century and a half, the immense industries of Great Britain, who is our best trade customer, our closest cultural associate, and at present the only active defender of our kind of civilization.

If this last bulwark of the world's system of peace and order is destroyed, we shall be left to defend ourselves in a world in which there will be only three other powers of importance, Germany, Soviet Russia, and Japan, all unscrupulous, all aggressive, all cooperating with each other, all hostile to us.

For the first time since 1783 we face the prospect of an overwhelming force aimed at our existence. Do we have to wait until the dictatorships have shut us off from most of the world's commerce and are moving against us before we admit that here is an extraordinary emergency, and that it is better to fight in support of Britain than to fight alone?

We cannot soothe ourselves with the belief that if Britain falls the British Navy—or what would by then be left of it—will continue to defend us. With brutal clarity we must consider the possible sequels of that catastrophe. If the German invasion should succeed, the British fleet might take refuge in Canada. But will Hitler, who stops at no crucifixion of human flesh or soul, stop at holding the British people as ransom for their fleet?

Let us make another grim assumption, that as Britain falls her fleet is scuttled or destroyed. Then there will stand arrayed against us the combined German and Italian Navies, plus units of the French; and furthermore Hitler will then have a shipbuilding capacity six times greater than our own. He will use it. The finest of those shipyards are British. He will use them.

Remember Czechoslovakia. At Munich, Czechoslovakia was handed over to Hitler, and with it Britain and France lost a great bastion in the first line of their defense. In May 1940, French soldiers were beaten back by new 70-ton tanks. Those huge tanks were made in Czechoslovakia by once free men who now work under the revolvers of the Gestapo.

And having been thus defeated by weapons made by their erstwhile friends the Czechs, the French in turn are forced to make weapons to be used against their erstwhile friends the British. If we refuse to help the British now, with every moral and material aid at our command, we may be the last victims in this tragic chain. If we do not act with fullest energy, we may find ourselves in time attacked and overwhelmed by warships built in British shipyards by British shipwrights who were once our friends. And a treachery which neither of us ever intended will have become simply one more of the ghastly patterns with which hell is paved.

Nor let us chloroform ourselves with the pretty notion that Hitler, once he had swallowed continental Europe and Britain, would lie down quietly and digest his conquests. If he did not attack us immediately, while we were still weak, he might come forward with peace promises and nonaggression treaties, and trade proposals and a whole forest of olive branches. We would be gullible indeed to forget that these fair words would be just as worthless as the solemn assurances and reassurances given one after another to Austria, Czechoslovakia, Poland, Norway, Denmark, Holland, Belgium, and Luxemburg.

There are those who say that we can afford to do nothing because empires like Hitler's are short-lived. But Hitler's system is drilled into old and young by the world's most thorough propaganda; the conquered are held down by efficient, ruthless force; every independent leader is quickly eliminated by the most competent and cruelly ingenious secret police the world has ever known. Hitler, though mortal, is surrounded by men abler than himself. And even if his empire should survive only 10 years, that might well be time enough in which to destroy the United States.

After a Hitler victory we could lose our skins even without invasion but by remote control. The combination of Germany, Italy, and Japan could strike us in vital spots many thousands of miles from our actual mainland. They could quickly shut off the supply of vital strategic materials. From bases in West Africa they could cripple our commerce with half of South America. They could * * * but here is what a report of the Naval Affairs Committee of the Senate, dated last May 15, said they could do:

"From all the evidence available it appears that the United States can be conquered without military conquest of continental United States. An effective blockade against our foreign commerce can be maintained at points thousands of miles from our coasts and well beyond aircraft range. Our outlying possessions will be captured and used against us as advance bases. There will be nothing to prevent the establishment of bases, by force if necessary, in this hemisphere, from which as well as from aircraft carriers, repeated bombing raids can be dispatched against our highly industrialized areas. * * *

"Under the foregoing conditions, enemy ships, except in the form of raiders, need not approach anywhere near our shores. With the loss of our outlying possessions, our foreign commerce, and subject to continual raids upon our coastal areas, our ultimate defeat is inevitable. It will be only a question of time, depending on how long our national will to further resist will hold out. Without the power to carry the fight to the enemy, there can be no alternative other than subjugation to his wishes."

The constant threat and merciless pressure of Hitler and his partners would inevitably produce a tragic reversal in our own ways of thought and living. Inevitably we would be driven into militarism; we should be forced to copy Hitler's own methods in our struggle to survive. The Nazis have established the world's most thorough despotism, trampling over the decayed body of liberty to achieve authority; we still strive to perfect the world's finest democracy. The systems are so completely opposed, and theirs is so aggressive and intolerant that, as Mussolini said, "The struggle between two worlds can permit no compromise * * * either we or they!" What Lincoln said of this country would be true of the world: "This Government cannot endure permanently half slave and half free." In the desperate effort to remain free we should be forced to sacrifice a large part of that freedom.

And even if we could escape war with Hitler in a military sense, the differences between his totalitarian economy and ours would produce on ours profound and dreadful changes. As Walter Lippmann points out in an article elsewhere in this issue (page 106), our free, individual economy would have to compete for world trade with a gigantic and ruthless state monopoly.

As we are bound to lose many, if not all, of the things we need and cherish should Hitler win, it is clear that our vital interest demands full support of Great Britain.

What little help we are giving her now is limited by a short-sighted pretense of technical neutrality. Thus we are doing just what the lost democracies of Europe did. In their desire to avoid the short-term risk of war they allowed Hitler to overcome their outer defenses one by one. The policy of avoiding risks has brought them face to face with the supreme risk of all—that of annihilation.

Let us allay one reason for the fear which has paralyzed American action in this crisis—the fear of our people that once again we shall send an army to Europe. There is no question of this in anybody's mind. Britain has men—her needs lie elsewhere. We do not have the men to send; if we had them to send there is nowhere on the continent of Europe for them to make a landing.

But short of that there is very little we ought not to be prepared to do, and do at once. We cannot afford to continue giving to Hitler—as the isolationists insist we should—the two advantages by which all previous conquerors have won their empires: that of fighting their adversaries one by one and that of choosing the time, place, and method of the attack.

The isolationists cry that we would be in danger if we took the initiative. It would give Hitler the excuse to attack us. As if he needed any excuse to attack when he is so minded. Certainly, the action we must take would be an undeclared war. But it could not add to our danger Hitler, by every kind of propaganda, trade control, and "fifth column" activity, has long been at war against us. We are already deeply involved in the conflict—on the defensive. Our most practical course is to take the offensive, and prevent his victory, or at least make it as costly to him as we can. Above all, if Hitler wins on land, we must insure ourselves against surrender of the British Fleet. Here is the one risk, war or no war, declared or undeclared, we cannot afford to take.

And we should act at once, if only because the Japanese are still bogged down in China. Their hands are full now; but if we wait till they consolidate their hold on China we shall have to fight the Nazis and the Japanese at the same time.

Are the historians to say of us: "Because the Americans were aware of the inferiority of their armament, they would not send their ships, planes, and guns to prevent Hitler's acquiring Europe's largest fleet and Europe's largest shipyards? Because they were weak in airplanes, tanks, and artillery they made no serious attempt to keep Hitler from acquiring by his victories on land a preponderance of naval and industrial power."

The armament of the United States is woefully inadequate to fight Germany alone, but it might nevertheless be adequate to turn the tide in the defense of Britain.

The moral force of our aid, if prompt and unstinting—or even the effect of the knowledge that we were trying to give that aid—would be incalculable. It would work both ways—bringing a surge of hope to the British, and, to the German people, memories of the role we played in 1917.

In practical terms, what should our aid consist of? First and foremost, support for Britain's navy. At the tempo of the clock's hands rather than the calendar's days, we should consider sending to Britain's assistance units of our own Navy, taking all risks up to the point of not risking the loss of any vital part of it. As long as our fleet is largely intact we can hold off Hitler for time enough to replace, many times over, the planes and guns we send to Britain. We should consider taking some of the burden of convoying British ships off the shoulders of the British Navy, send our warships to chase Nazi surface raiders in our half of the Atlantic, open new ports and navy yards to British warships for fueling and repairs.

The greatest need of Britain at this moment is one which we are able to supply physically, but not legally. The law still prevents our letting the British Navy defend itself, and us, with destroyers which we have, and can spare. There are about 140 of these overage destroyers. We should amend the law so that Britain can have half of them at least. Her losses in destroyers have been heavy. These vessels are her best insurance against invasion by sea and the inroads of the submarine.

We should send planes, Britain's next most urgent need. All the planes we can spare. And redefine the word "spare" so that we shall redouble our efforts to turn them out, and produce them as if our lives depended upon it. Which is not far from being the case.

We should repeal the cash-and-carry provisions of the Neutrality Act—and as much else of that act and other laws as will leave us free to help the belligerent who is fighting our battle without helping the belligerents whose next victims we may become.

And, of course, we should be ready to receive, and call for and bring over in American ships, under American convoy if necessary, all of Britain's children whom her Government may decide to send us.

We must act so that the dreadful dirge of Europe, too little—and too late—does not ring in our ears. We must take serious risks in the hope of avoiding even more serious ones. I say "hope," not "certainty." There is only one certainty: That if Britain is defeated, no matter how safe we play, no matter how hard we try to hide behind the tattered rags of our neutrality, our turn will come next.

Foreign Loan Restrictions

With the national elections only a few weeks off, it is not surprising, perhaps, that administration leaders are cool to the idea of a full-dress debate at this time on Senator King's proposal for extending financial aid to Britain. But with the presidential candidates of both parties pledged to a policy of the utmost aid to England "short of war," it is clear that this issue is one that must be dealt with openly and frankly in the not distant future.

Senator King's bill, introduced this week, calls specifically for a scaling down of the British World War debt, according to the formula applied in the case of Italy's debt (a formula which, on the basis of "capacity to pay," was much more lenient than that employed in the case of England); also, suspension, with respect to England, of the foreign loan restrictions contained in the Johnson Act and the Neutrality Act.

Action with respect to the British war debt can be taken at the leisure of Congress, but there can be no logical objection to proceeding without delay to repeal the existing antilending legislation. The Johnson Act never had any sound justification. This law was a product of the revulsion of the 1920's against war, and, more particularly, of an emotional upsurge predicated on a naive belief, cultivated by a small but highly vocal minority, that all wars were the work of persons interested solely in preserving their foreign investments. Today this thesis not only has no standing in general opinion, but, except in a few isolated instances, has been abandoned completely and emphatically by its own disillusioned advocates. Thus, in the case of the Johnson Act, we have the spectacle of a law surviving on the statute books long after the philosophy which created it has ceased to exist.

Hardly less anachronistic is the provision of the Neutrality Act forbidding loans to belligerent nations. A plausible case could be made for that measure when it was enacted into law, but that is no longer true today. Not, at least, if you believe, as most Americans do, with Senator King, that "the time has come when we must do everything possible to aid England in her fight, not merely for the preservation of Britain but for the preservation of democracy."

Show-Down With Japan

Day before yesterday two of the highest spokesmen of the Japanese Government delivered warnings to America which, if words mean anything, amount to a practical ultimatum. Deliberately and provocatively, these officials told us to keep our hands off the Far East—or else!

Yakichiro Suma, formerly in the Japanese Embassy here in Washington and now foreign office spokesman, declared to the Japanese people in a nation-wide broadcast that recent United States moves in the Far East "clearly indicate it is taking step after step in the wrong direction, which might precipitate it into the vortex of armed conflict." The dramatic climax was reached when the Japanese Prime Minister, Prince Konoye, in an interview with the Japanese press, urged the United States to reconsider its position and "positively cooperate with axis construction of a new world order. Should the United States deliberately refuse to understand the true intentions of Japan, Germany, and Italy, and consider the triple alliance hostile to herself and challenge the axis nations, the axis would be ready to accept such a challenge and fight to the finish."

Perhaps the most significant part of this sensational episode is contained in the final paragraph of the Associated Press dispatch which carried the story. This paragraph reads: "Konoye was on his way back to Tokyo after a formal journey to the grand shrines at Ise to report his recent assumption of the premiership to Amaterasu, the sun goddess."

There, in a nutshell, we have the spirit of Japan militant. In Japanese eyes the sun goddess is no mere symbol; she is very much alive. Every Japanese devoutly believes that Amaterasu is the ancestress of the Imperial dynasty which, for 2,500 years, has uninterruptedly ruled Japan. Their divine Emperor, with the blood of the gods in his veins, is the spiritual head of the Japanese people, that "Yamato race" which itself partakes of the nature of the Divine Ancestor in that it enjoys the lasting favor of the gods and is thus raised above the level of other mortals. From earliest childhood, every Japanese is taught that the Yamato race is eventually destined to world preeminence and world dominion. This is no exaggeration; it is sober fact. And the bold leaders who now rule Japan apparently believe that great Nippon's hour of destiny has struck.

With such men, leading a people thus conditioned in a religious nationalism far transcending anything exhibited by either Nazi Germany or Fascist Italy, the very word "appeasement" is dangerous folly. Faced by these provocative challenges, our Government should not yield an inch. On the contrary, certain definite steps should be taken to checkmate their grandiose ambitions while there is yet time. Economic pressure should be wisely yet unflinchingly applied. This might take the form of new embargoes on exports to Japan and possibly on imports vital to Japanese economy. Aid should be extended to Free China. Understandings should be perfected with Britain, the Dominions, and the Netherland Indies for concerted defensive action in the Far East. Particularly, these understandings should look to possible use by our fleet of British and other naval bases in the Far East. To stand aside while Japan attempts to crush China, grab the Dutch Indies, and capture Singapore would be the height of folly. For Japan militant is insatiable.

RUSSIA AND THE TRIPLE AXIS

Semiofficial statements come from Berlin that the Triple Axis Powers, Germany, Italy, and Japan, have assigned Soviet Russia a definite area of leadership in their projected new world order. These reports arouse much speculation as to just where the new sphere may be located, and also as to whether Moscow had advance information of the gracious gift. Late rumor even has it that German Foreign Minister Von Ribbentrop is en route to Moscow in order to get the Soviet Government's formal assent.

At this stage it is impossible to say whether or not Stalin had been told what was about to be done. In either case there is good reason to believe that the Russian dictator is far from pleased with the new set-up. But to jump from this to the surmise that a falling-out between Russia and the axis partners impends, is to indulge in the same wishful thinking that has been so often disappointing during the past year.

Of course, Russia distrusts the Axis Powers, precisely as they distrust her—and distrust one another. All four of them, Communist and Fascist alike, follow the same basic policy of ruthless, cynical aggression. Theirs are the ethics of the wolf pack, each member of which must be forever on guard against his fellows. Between such powers genuine confidence and abiding friendship are impossible.

Yet even the most ravenous wolves work together effectively when they are after a common kill. And surely the totalitarian big four can glimpse in the offing the greatest potential loot the world has ever seen. Already Stalin has profited enormously by his association with Hitler. At the cost of one relatively minor war in Finland he has regained almost all of Russia's western borderlands lost during the revolution, inhabited by nearly 30,000,000 people. Even though no further westward expansion is possible without running afoul of Germany and Italy, there is still much to be won through agreement with the Axis Powers in the Near, Middle, and Far East.

To begin with, leaving aside the thorny question of Constantinople and the straits, there is Asiatic Turkey. The Axis Powers could yield Stalin a generous slice of Anatolia with small loss to themselves. That would safeguard Russia's Baku oil fields, now dangerously near the Turkish border. Still more important is Iran or Persia, an old field of Russian imperialistic penetration. Czarist Russia schemed there continually against Britain, seeking to reach warm water on the Persian Gulf and the Indian Ocean. In this connection, we must not forget that Stalin is a Georgian from Russian Trans-Caucasia and that he has always shown a special interest in that region. If the British Empire is smashed, Russia would be the logical heir to the middle east.

Even in the Far East, Russia could gain much without clashing too irreconcilably with Japan. Take China's inland dependencies. Already, Russia controls Outer Mongolia and has subtly penetrated the equally vast region of Sinkiang or Chinese Turkestan. Probably Tibet and some adjacent Chinese provinces might be added, if a Russo-Japanese partition of China should become practical.

These are, of course, mere speculations. Yet they indicate what may constitute the share assigned Russia by the triple axis in their grandiose redistribution of other people's property throughout the Old World.

CONTEND UNITED STATES MUST STOP JAPANESE—CORRESPONDENTS SUGGEST MEANS OF MEETING THREAT IN FAR EAST

To the EDITOR OF THE STAR:

Germany dominates the continent of Europe, possesses a military machine unrivaled in the history of the world, and has given the clearest indications of an intention to use that machine for the purpose of becoming dominant throughout the world. Japan, nourished by imports of war materials from the United States and sustained by the proceeds of exports to the United States, is on the point of establishing herself as the dominant power in the Far East and is developing all her energies to that purpose. Japan has joined forces with Germany and Italy with a view of pushing military conquest to its uttermost limits and extending economic domination to those regions where military conquest may be impracticable. There are 2 major obstacles that Japan must overcome before she can pursue her designs and become an effective partner of the Axis Powers: (1) She must win the Chinese war, where her energies are being dissipated in the conquest of 400,000,000 people, eager and able to fight but lacking the supplies and munitions necessary to carry on much longer an effective war; (2) she must acquire undisputed naval dominance in the South Pacific.

If Japan is successful in overcoming these obstacles, the course of events is marked with substantial certainty:

(a) Japan would seize and absorb Indochina, Thailand, and the Dutch East Indies.

(b) With these possessions consolidated in Japanese hands, there would be no further effective obstacle to the conquest of all British possessions in the Far East, including Australia.

(c) The most that the British could hope for as a result of the present war would be the successful defense of their island against German invasion—a defense which would be rendered even more precarious by the fact that Germany had acquired the Japanese alliance.

(d) With the Axis Powers dominating Europe and Japan dominating the East, economic control of South America by these three would be a probability, and history has shown that economic domination merges by imperceptible degrees into political domination.

In a world where the foregoing events had taken place the position of the United States would not be an enviable one. In the first place, there would be a constant necessity of maintaining a military and naval establishment of war-time proportions, with the attendant disrupting of our peacetime pursuits, dissipation of our national income in armaments and waste of the millions of valuable years in the lives of our young men in military service. Second, our foreign trade would be substantially eliminated, a condition which could not fail to affect, directly or indirectly, every person living in this country. Thirdly, the enforcement of the Monroe Doctrine would become an impossibility due to the extent of the pressure that could be exerted upon South America and the extent of our preoccupation with our own defense.

The conditions precedent to the success of Japan in her designs and in her usefulness to the Axis Powers are the conquest of China and naval dominance in the South Pacific. We can prevent both of these conditions from being fulfilled, but this can be done only by an immediate, vigorous taking of the initiative. The steps that must be taken to accomplish this result are the following:

(a) We must deprive Japan of raw materials which she must have to wage effective war. The embargo on aviation gasoline and scrap iron are steps in the right direction. They should be followed by embargoes on pig iron, copper, oil, gasoline, motor vehicles, and machinery, all of which can now be freely shipped to Japan. Moreover, there should be an embargo on imports from Japan, for without exporting to this country Japan cannot acquire the credits necessary to the acquisition of materials she must buy.

(b) We must give all possible aid to China. This means granting substantially unlimited credits to the Chiang Kai-shek government. In meeting the Japanese axis menace, it is far better that we provide, gratis if necessary, the munitions to enable the Chinese to fight than that, sooner or later, we sacrifice not only our munitions but also the lives of our young men. The Burma Road is available to transport all supplies the Chinese could purchase. English cooperation in reopening this road is a foregone conclusion since Japan joined the axis.

(c) We should arrange with Great Britain to share or assume control of the Singapore naval base and other British bases in the East, so far as this is practicable from the point of view of sound naval strategy. The United States Navy is now superior to that of the Japanese. This condition may not long continue, for it is probable that there are Japanese ships under construction adequate in numbers, tonnage, and modernity to tip the balance against us. With the United States Navy based at Singapore, Japanese conquest of the East Indies from distant bases would be a practical impossibility.

CREDITS FOR BRITAIN

In offering legislation designed primarily to remove statutory obstacles to the extension of credits to the British, and to authorize the President to negotiate for the use by this country of British bases in the Pacific, Senator KING of Utah, has taken a long and a realistic look into an uncertain future.

At this time, the Johnson Act and the Neutrality Act stand in the way of extending credits to Britain, the former prohibiting any governmental loans to nations defaulting on their old war debts and the latter barring the granting of any credits to belligerents. At the time these laws were adopted they appeared to be amply justified by then existing conditions. But times have changed, and the real measure of our security lies in our capacity to adapt our policies and our thinking accordingly.

Britain is engaged in a struggle for survival, and we have come at long last to the realization that in a very literal sense it is our war as well as hers. We know now that the defeat of the British would be a calamity of the first magnitude for us, and, with that clear understanding, our foreign policy has been deliberately directed toward the prevention of any such result. That being the case, it would be incredibly short-sighted to permit resentment over the default in the first World War debt payments to interfere with the adoption of a policy at this time which so plainly promotes our own best interests. To refuse credits or even outright gifts of munitions to the British when need arises would be closely analogous to a refusal to arm our own forces in the face of an attack, and any nation which pursues such a fantastic policy has little reason to expect to survive for long in the predatory world of today.

Nor is there any justification, under existing circumstances, for retaining the credit prohibitions of the Neutrality Act. They were approved in the belief we could stay out of the conflict if we had no financial interest in it. But the fortunes of war have made a mockery of that belief. We know now that our interest in the struggle is infinitely greater than any monetary consideration could possibly be. We know that in all but a military sense we are in the war and that we must see it through with every means at our disposal.

The exigencies of the situation are such that Congress should begin immediately to consider Senator KING's bill. No thought of adjournment, no shallow political consideration, should be permitted to stand in the way.

Senator BARKLEY, the majority leader, has expressed the belief that the bill has no chance of passage at this session of Congress because it would "provoke a lot of debate." On the latter score he is probably correct, but it is not the function, nor has it been the habit of the Senate to dodge debate. This is a vital and an urgent matter, and it should be viewed as such by every Member of Congress.

Time and the aggressor nations are not going to wait upon the convenience of the Senate. If this matter of relaxing credit restrictions is one which calls for extended debate, the sooner the administration leaders bring it to the floor, the sooner the debate will be over. The United States is no longer so situated that we can afford to wait until each fresh emergency is upon us before we prepare to deal with it. The great weakness of the states which have fallen under the impact of totalitarianism has been that they refused to prepare in time for what was inevitably coming. If we have not yet learned that lesson, there is real cause to despair of the future.

BILL ASKS LOANS TO BRITAIN AND BASES IN PACIFIC—KING OFFERS MEASURE FOR SINGAPORE LEASE, DEBT CUT, AND CREDIT GRANT

WASHINGTON, September 30.—Senator WILLIAM H. KING, Democrat, of Utah, introduced a bill today to authorize the President to enter into negotiations with Great Britain for the leasing of lands and islands in and adjoining the Pacific Ocean for American bases. In the same bill he provided for the extension of loans and credit to Great Britain, the scaling down of her war debt, and the repeal of the Johnson Act so far as it affects that country.

The bill now lies upon the table of the Senate and the question of what committee it will go to is to be taken up tomorrow by Senator KING.

ACTION RESULT OF TOKYO PACT

The effect of the bill would be to legalize in advance the acquisition of leases in the Pacific such as Singapore, Hong Kong, and the islands of Malaysia, useful in the event of trouble with Japan. Senator KING said he introduced the bill with the fact of Japan's joining the Rome-Berlin axis in mind.

"I want the President to be entirely warranted in making these leases in this instance," said Senator KING.

President Roosevelt was recently criticized in both Houses of Congress and by the Republican Presidential nominee, Wendell L. Willkie, for the manner of his making a ships-for-bases arrangement with the British. No authorization by Congress was asked for.

Senator KING said he entirely approved of that deal, but wanted to insure the legality of a comparable deal in the Pacific. The Senator, who was recently defeated for renomination in the Democratic primaries, did not assert that his bill had administration backing.

One of the Democratic leaders in the Senate said today that he did not anticipate that the part of the King bill having to do with repealing the Johnson Act would be reported out at this session of Congress by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

JOHNSON ACT REPEAL LATER

The exigencies of the situation, such as the inability of the British to continue paying for supplies in this country with cash on hand, do not yet point to the immediate repeal of the Johnson Act. It is considered inevitable, however, that one of the early steps taken in the next session of Congress will be to repeal the act, which forbids the selling in this country of securities of any nation in default of its war debts.

Great Britain owed this country $1,411,169,427.23 as of December 31, 1939, after the original debt had been scaled down.

Senator KING seeks in his bill to scale the debt down still more by applying the same concessions as were granted to Italy because of Italy's comparative inability to pay. Great Britain only received one-fifth the debt concession that Italy received, according to Senator KING. He argued that the same concession should now be extended to a country which is fighting for democracy as had been extended to a country which is fighting against democracy.

Under the terms of the bill the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, through the United States Export-Import Bank, would be authorized to make further loans to Great Britain.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish merely to state that the bill was introduced about a week ago. There are undoubtedly many in the United States who feel about the proposed legislation as does the author. But it has not been acted upon by the committee. Whether it will be I cannot say. It was obvious, I think, when the bill was introduced, that it could not be taken up in the Senate at once; and it cannot be. Everyone knows that if the committee were to report the bill to the Senate and it should be taken up, it would involve very considerable debate. We all know that. So it is a moot question now whether we shall take it up or shall not take it up. It is not in order to take it up. It is all well and good to banter one another, and dare some one to take up a bill which cannot be taken up. I have stated the situation. So I cannot assure the Senator from Utah that the bill will ever be taken up, because the committee has to act on it, it has to be brought out in the regular way, and I am not in a position to predict what the committee will do about it.

SCHOOL FACILITIES NEAR MILITARY AND NAVAL BASES

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, if the subject matter which has been before the Senate is disposed of, I should like to submit a Senate resolution. I ask unanimous consent that I may submit the resolution, and I ask that it be reported and be given immediate consideration. It will take but a brief time.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The resolution, Senate Resolution 324, was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War are requested to make a full and complete study and investigation of all school facilities at or near naval yards, Army and Navy reservations, and bases at which housing programs for defense workers are being carried out or are contemplated, with a view to determining (1) whether such housing programs will necessitate additional school facilities, (2) whether the communities adjacent to or near such yards, reservations, and bases are financially able to provide such additional facilities, if needed, and (3) whether the Federal Government should provide such additional facilities irrespective of the financial ability of the community. The Secretaries are further requested to report to the Senate as soon as practicable the results of their study and investigation, togeher with their recommendations, if any, for necessary legislation.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the resolution speaks for itself. Army bases and naval bases are located throughout the country, frequently near communities which are exceedingly small, and the expansion of defense activities at our navy yards and other bases, especially in connection with the housing program, is resulting in raising a serious question as to how the children of the workers can be taken care of, so far as education is concerned. In view of the fact that the communities receive no taxes from the Government on these reservations, a very serious problem has arisen, particularly in those communities which are small in population and have no great wealth. The resolution seeks to obtain information for the Senate, so that it can determine whether legislation may be necessary to provide school facilities near such Government reservations.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

PROPOSED RECESS ARRANGEMENT

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Kentucky a few questions, if we may recur to the subject of our previous discussion.

I have in mind that within a few days the Attorney General has issued some sort of ruling, the exact purport of which I do not know, for I have not seen the language; but the ruling, according to press reports, would have the effect in many industries of absolutely denying to those industries defense contracts at a time when obviously defense needs are greatest.

Whether or not the effect of the ruling has been correctly reported I do not know, and do not say, but I can imagine a situation where any number of industries may be seriously affected, at a time when the Congress has made vast appropriations to the departments, authorizing the Army and the Navy to contract for materials, only to find that if the effect of the ruling has been correctly reported, the contractors will be debarred from either receiving contracts or proceeding under them.

I can envision, further, that the House, since the House is continuing in session, may very properly deal with that very problem. For example, the press further reports that the Attorney General was under subpena to appear before a special committee of the House yesterday afternoon. Whether he did or not I do not know.

Mr. BARKLEY. He did, and so did the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. DANAHER. Since the Senator now states facts of which we lacked knowledge, that raises a question with reference to whether or not legislation will be recommended by the House which will be emergent in character, and on which the Senate should be available to act, it would seem to me.

I am at a loss to understand why we should adjourn at this time. I know that over the Labor Day week end we were not out of town 3 hours before we discovered, without the proposal having been submitted to the Congress in any respect, that 50 destroyers allegedly had been traded to Great Britain, Congress having no previous notice of it, and never an opportunity to consider whether it should be authorized or not.

Now we find that there is being promulgated in the press and otherwise a proposition that we shall transfer some 25 flying fortresses, 4-engine bombers, to some other power, at a time when the condition of our own defense is most precarious, when we have been engaged for nearly a year and a half in the general discussion of the subject; when we have been told that Omaha itself is only 2½ hours' bombing time from Tampico; when there is a schedule for attacking bombers to follow from Brazil to the United States; when the people of the United States are told that we must have 50,000 airplanes, our needs are so great. It is now contemplated that we transfer 25 bombers to some other power, and perhaps Congress should consider this proposition.

Within the week there was word in the Evening Star, right here in Washington, that we had 48 bombers on hand, and only forty-eight, that we were going to have sixty-eight available by January 1, that we were going to have a newly designed, longer-range, faster bomber, and therefore we should immediately get rid of these twenty-five which are servicing the United States Army today.

So I took the matter up with the Secretary of War, in writing, to ascertain what the facts were. The Secretary of War responded to me that he could not release the information to me, but that if I would come to his office I could talk to him about it.

Things have been going on in this country about which the American people do not know the facts, and Senators do not get them for public use at a time when propagandists of one kind or another are urging our entry here and our action there, all in the direction of war, which, it seems to me, threatens a situation which very properly requires the presence of the Congress here. If there be no quorum present, and if Senators have left, it seems to me they can very properly be brought back and kept on the job until the American public knows just what is going on, and every step taken which is open to us to take, to the end that we be not precipitated into this war, either in the east or in the west.

It seems to me that American national interests should be canvassed, and canvassed thoroughly right here, and we could use the intervening time very properly in having someone tell us just what our national interests demand, and what the objectives are in the foreign policy of our Chief Executive.

That is something on which we can spend more time, Mr. President, and if we can save our people from war, these intervening weeks can be well spent right here. That is my view, and such matters underlay the position which we took in our conference, and in general it was the attitude, I am sure, of the minority, that we should vote against adjournment of Congress. It seems to me the proposal for recesses until November 18, as submitted, is tantamount to nothing but an adjournment, subject to our doing nothing in the meantime.

I submit these few considerations, Mr. President, with reference to essential items in addition to the Walter-Logan bill, which I also consider of prime importance, and which may properly engage the attention of the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, before the Senator from Kentucky replies, I should like to say that I think the Senator from Connecticut ought to insist that the very brief question he has propounded to the Senator from Kentucky be answered positively, "Yes" or "No."

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator from Connecticut and to the Senator from Nebraska, that if what the Senator from Connecticut has said is a question, the answer is, "Yes" and "No."

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I should like to answer the Senator from Connecticut; but I will yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. As I understand the proposal of the Senator from Kentucky it is that we recess for 3-day periods, and that no legislative business shall be transacted until November 18, unless there is a call of the Senate. I should like to ask the Senator: Who would issue the call? Who would have the responsibility to call the Senate again together for legislative action?

Mr. BARKLEY. I was taking that responsibility myself, in cooperation with the minority leader.

Mr. BYRD. I have great confidence in the Senator from Kentucky, but I do not believe there is a Senator who denies that it is our constitutional right to transact business in the event an emergency arises sufficient to warrant such action, and if there is a quorum present.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator entertains any fear on that subject, I can assure him that if a quorum is present on the call of any responsible Member of the Senate who has that duty to perform then, of course, we can transact business. I do not suppose that a quorum would simply come back of its own accord unless——

Mr. BYRD. That is the point I wanted to make to the Senator.

Mr BARKLEY. Unless Senators are advised they are needed.

Mr. BYRD. As I understand, the proposal is to have a gentleman's agreement, and I wish to ask the Senator if he will modify his proposal so the call will be issued upon a petition signed by 20 Members of the Senate citing the fact that there exists an emergency greater than is apparent now, which should receive legislative action promptly by the Senate. Would the Senator then, as majority leader, be willing to issue a call?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I do not think that request is quite fair, because we all understand that any 20 Senators who might be interested in some particular bill might get together and sign a petition asking that the Senate be called together. That might create a situation which would be entirely against the views of the other 76 Senators, who might not be here at the time. I do not think that is quite a proper proposal.

Mr. BYRD. Do not let us camouflage this proposition. What the Senator is proposing is an adjournment——

Mr. BARKLEY. No.

Mr. BYRD. Because he is providing for a gentleman's agreement. I assume that if a quorum of the Senate is present Senators can act under the rules of the Senate. The Senator is providing that there shall be nothing considered until November the 18th, unless he himself issues a call. I have great confidence in the Senator, as he knows, but I think that is a responsibility which we should not place upon any one single Member of the Senate in the great crisis which I entirely agree with the Senator from California now confronts the country. Unless the Senator from Kentucky is willing to modify the request, by giving some freedom of action to the individual Senators, I for one will have to vote against the proposal.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, of course, I wish to say to the Senator from Virginia that if any situation should arise which would make any Senator of the United States Senate from any State feel that he ought to be back in Washington, then it is his duty to come, and if by such a method a quorum should arise, Senators could, of course, nullify what we are doing here today.

Mr. BYRD. But the Senator from Kentucky well knows that there will not be a quorum, if the proposal is agreed to, unless the Senator from Kentucky issues the call. Senators are not simply going to gather here because some——

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I agree with that. I do not think they would. I do not think there would be any need for them to do so. From time immemorial this sort of an understanding has been entered into in the Senate and in the House.

Mr. BYRD. Let me call the attention of the Senator to what the Senator from California said, that the Senator from Kentucky himself urged us to vote for an adjournment last June. The judgment of the Senator was no doubt at that time in accordance with his convictions. He was wrong, and he must now admit that he was wrong, because since June we have passed the most momentous legislation that has been passed during the 7 years I have been in the Senate. The Senator may be wrong again.

Mr. BARKLEY. That very situation is one which has militated against any effort to adjourn the Congress at this time, and against any effort that seems to be effective even to recess for a certain length of time, and the very object of having the meetings after 3-day recesses is that we may keep in touch with the situation and be able to reassemble the Senate if necessary.

Mr. BYRD. But the Senator admits that there can be no business transacted. What is the use of having the Senate convene if it cannot transact business made necessary by a supreme crisis, such being prohibited by a so-called gentlemen's agreement?

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator agrees to this arrangement, business can be transacted.

Mr. BYRD. How can it be transacted when there is not a quorum present?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator, as I understand, proposes that 3-day recesses be taken. If any Senator who happens to be here makes the point of no quorum and asks for a quorum call, and if that were done with sufficient persistence, assuming some real emergency existed, it would be exceedingly uncomfortable for those who were not present if they did not assemble.

Mr. BARKLEY. Any Senator has the right to make a point of no quorum at any time, and if a quorum is not developed, either to have the Sergeant at Arms send out for the absent Members or move to adjourn.

Mr. BYRD. I wish to get the Senator's proposal clear in my mind. His proposal was that no business be transacted during the period when 3-day recesses are to be taken, unless the majority leader of the Senate should issue a call to the Senate, and that would be a gentleman's agreement to which, if I assented to it, I would adhere.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate that. I am sure the Senator would. But someone has to have a certain responsibility.

Mr. BYRD. Why should not a certain number of Senators have the same responsibility?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know of any instance heretofore when the Senate has been called back into session, after having recessed or adjourned, on the petition of 20 Senators or of any other number of Senators.

Mr. BYRD. Does the Senator from Kentucky know of any time before when we attempted to recess in a manner similar to that now proposed?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; I do. I was a Member of the House of Representatives during the World War, and when we had enacted all the legislation that was requested, Congress for a period of time took 3-day recesses. That was done while the war was in progress.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, was that done with the understanding that Congress would not transact business during that time, subject to the will of only one Senator?

Mr. BARKLEY. There were several times when 3-day recesses were taken covering a period of as much as 6 weeks or 2 months.

Mr. BYRD. Let me call the attention of the Senator to the fact that we were in the war during the period he speaks of, and full provision had already been made by the Congress to prosecute the war. Now, we are not in a war, but we may get into war. Now, we are under the duty to stay here.

Mr. BARKLEY. We certainly were worse off when we were in war.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to make a brief observation?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AUSTIN. I think the colloquy between the distinguished leader of the majority and myself has the sanction of honor and good faith, and would be certain to be carried out in spirit and in truth as if governed by law.

Let us assume for a moment that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] should request that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] call the Senate into action during this period for the reason that a war had broken out in the Pacific Ocean, which involved us, and that the Senator from Kentucky should not regard that as a cause, and should refuse to issue the call, and that thereupon the Senator from Oregon should telegraph every Member of the Senate that he had made that request, and ask them voluntarily to appear here in the Senate—what would happen? Every Senator here knows that no agreement we could enter into—and I do not expect we are going to be asked to enter into an agreement—would have more binding effect than a recess taken upon the basis of the colloquy that has already occurred, in spirit and in truth to keep the Congress in session, and at the same time accommodate its meetings to actual facts. We are dealing with realism and shall continue to do so.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from Vermont does not, I am sure, suggest or entertain the notion that under the circumstances he has outlined I myself would ignore such a situation and not take the responsibility of calling the Senate back.

Mr. AUSTIN. Certainly not. I made my illustration as absurd as I could in order to make the point.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate what the Senator has said.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me ask the Senator from Kentucky a question. Would it meet the objections of the Senator from Virginia if the proposal were amended or modified, with respect to the matter of transaction of business, that no business would be transacted unless, upon a roll call, a quorum was developed?

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no objection to that, because that is the rule anyway, if the point is made.

Mr. CONNALLY. No business could be transacted without a quorum.

Mr. BARKLEY. No.

Mr. CONNALLY. But if there were a quorum of Senators in the city, and they wanted to attend and transact business, they could do so.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no objection to any understanding which will accommodate Senators, or which will keep the Senate amenable to any call or duty which may devolve upon it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Such a modification would be tantamount to allowing a majority of the Senate to call the Senate back.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no objection to the understanding that if a majority of the Senate wishes to transact business, it may do so.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I understood that to be the Senator's original idea.

Mr. BARKLEY. It was so contemplated. It may not have been clearly stated.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, is it not true that regardless of what the Senate does, in all probability the House will adopt the system of adjourning for 3 days at a time, and consequently we could not pass any very important legislation with the House in recess?

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true.

With respect to the comment of the Senator from Connecticut on the opinion of Attorney General Jackson in connection with the National Labor Relations Act, it seems that that opinion has been very greatly misinterpreted and misunderstood. Attorney General Jackson was informally asked for an opinion. I do not know that he was under any obligation to render an opinion, because it is my understanding that he is not required to render opinions unless they are asked for by the President of the United States. However, an informal request was made of him by a member of the National Defense Council on the question whether or not Government departments were bound by the decisions of the National Labor Relations Board. He merely responded that the Government departments are bound by such decisions until they are reversed by a competent court. That statement has been magnified into an opinion that contracts may not be awarded to any industry in the United States which has been charged with violation of the Wagner Act, and has been held by the Board to be guilty, and has taken an appeal.

In the testimony yesterday before the House committee, I think both Mr. Knudsen and Mr. Stettinius stated that they would not regard that situation as barring contracts with concerns which had been brought before the National Labor Relations Board on charges of violating the law. Assistant Secretary Patterson made the same statement. I think Secretary Knox made the same statement to the House committee. Attorney General Jackson was present; and I think they all agreed as to the proper interpretation of the opinion of the Attorney General in response to the informal request. So I do not see that that situation creates anything out of which any fear should arise so far as we are immediately concerned with legislation.

CLAIMS FOR DAMAGES IN CONNECTION WITH INTRACOASTAL WATERWAY, MIAMI TO JACKSONVILLE, FLA.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House bill 6945, which is a claims bill now on the desk. The House bill was reported favorably by the committee. It involves no appropriation of money, but merely confers upon the Court of Claims jurisdiction to determine certain claims.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the calendar number?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the bill is not on the calendar. It has just been reported from the committee.

Mr. PEPPER. It is on the table, but not on the calendar.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 6945) conferring jurisdiction upon the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of Florida to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claims of all persons who have claims for damages or losses allegedly resulting from the construction, further development, and improvement of the intracoastal waterway, Miami to Jacksonville, Fla., and for other purposes.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, may I inquire what the calendar number of the bill is?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is not on the calendar. It was reported today, and there is no calendar number.

Mr. REED. I object. I shall object to any attempt to bring up business of this character.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is heard.

INVESTIGATION OF AIRPLANE ACCIDENT AT LOVETTSVILLE, VA.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report favorably, with an amendment, Senate Resolution 307, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 307) submitted by Mr. MCCARRAN on September 5, 1940, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments, on page 2, line 19, after "commerce", to strike out "and"; on page 3, line 2, after "air", to strike out "commerce" and insert "commerce; and (7) the origin and accuracy of, and the responsibility for, reports to the effect that the Honorable Ernest Lundeen was under investigation by the Department of Justice at the time of his death or that in connection with such an investigation one or more agents of the Department of Justice were on board the airplane which crashed at Lovettsville, Va., August 31, 1940"; and which thereafter had been reported from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate with an amendment on page 3, line 24, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$20,000" and insert "$5,000", so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce, or any subcommittee thereof authorized by the chairman of such committee, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete investigation with respect to (1) the cause of the crashing of the Pennsylvania-Central Airlines Corporation airplane at Lovettsville, Va., on August 31, 1940; (2) any other crashes of, or accidents to, airplanes engaged in interstate air commerce resulting in the loss of lives; (3) the precautions taken, and the safeguards provided, by those engaged in interstate air commerce for the purpose of preventing the loss of lives of persons transported by them; (4) the adequacy of the safety regulations, air-safety devices, and inspections prescribed or provided by the Government or any department or agency thereof for the purpose of safeguarding the lives of persons transported in interstate air commerce; (5) any inefficiency in the administration by any department or agency of the Government of any of its functions relating to the safety of persons transported in interstate air commerce; (6) any other matters which such committee or subcommittee may deem it necessary to investigate for the purpose of obtaining adequate information to enable it to recommend action designed to prevent the loss of lives of persons or the loss of property transported in interstate air commerce; and (7) the origin and accuracy of, and the responsibility for, reports to the effect that the Honorable Ernest Lundeen was under investigation by the Department of Justice at the time of his death or that in connection with such an investigation one or more agents of the Department of Justice were on board the airplane which crashed at Lovettsville, Va., August 31, 1940. The committee shall report to the Senate, as soon as practicable, the results of its investigation, together with its recommendations.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the Senate in the Seventy-sixth and succeeding Congresses, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures, as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $5,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

Mr. BAILEY subsequently said: Mr. President, under the resolution adopted a few moments ago providing for an investigation of the airplane accident at Lovettsville, Va., in which our late colleague from Minnesota, Mr. Lundeen, lost his life, the duty is imposed upon me of appointing the committee. I wish now to announce the committee. I announce as the committee the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], and the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, in connection with the naming of the committee, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point a letter written to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] and signed by Mr. J. Edgar Hoover in regard to certain phases affecting the late Senator Lundeen.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION,
UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
WASHINGTON, D. C., October 4, 1940.

HON. PAT MCCARRAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have observed the resolution which you introduced in the Senate on September 5, 1940, relating to a proposed investigation of the crash of the Pennsylvania-Central Airlines' plane near Lovettsville, Va., on August 31, 1940. I have further noted that the resolution as finally submitted to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate provides for inquiry into the origin and accuracy of the reports to the effect that Hon. Ernest Lundeen was under investigation by the Department of Justice at the time of his death. For your information I desire to set out the following facts in connection with the personnel of the Federal Bureau of Investigation who were passengers aboard this plane on the occasion of its crash.

You will recall that this airplane was originally scheduled to depart at 1: 45 p. m. on August 31, 1940, and that it was known as flight 19.

Aboard the ill-fated plane was Miss Margaret L. Turner, a stenographic employee of this Bureau. The records of the Pennsylvania-Central Airlines reflect that Miss Turner made her reservation on flight 19 for August 31, 1940, at 10: 45 a. m. on August 27, 1940, at which time she purchased a round-trip ticket to Cleveland, Ohio, engaging return space for the 15th of September. This trip was paid for in cash and Miss Turner was traveling not on official business but was actually on vacation leave on the occasion of this crash. I am attaching hereto a photostatic copy of the application for leave which was filed by Miss Turner on August 27, 1940.

Also aboard this plane was Special Agent Joseph J. Pesci, who was a newly appointed special agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation and had completed on Saturday, August 31, 1940, his training as a special agent. He was under instructions to proceed to Chicago, Ill., which was to be his first post of assignment.

The Bureau has been advised by Mr. M. E. Cole, reservation manager of the Pennsylvania-Central Airlines in Washington, that a check of the waiting list of the Pennsylvania-Central Airlines indicates that Agent Pesci first called the reservation clerk for reservations at 7:30 p. m. on August 30, at which time Mr. Pesci requested reservations only from Washington, D. C., to Pittsburgh, Pa. He requested reservations on the 1:45 p. m. plane. At the time that Mr. Pesci talked to Mr. L. M. Miles, Mr. Miles made a notation on the waiting list dated August 31, 1940, to the effect that a passenger wanted transportation from Washington to Pittsburgh Saturday afternoon and then on to Chicago any time on Tuesday morning. Mr. Miles, when interviewed about this matter, stated that while he has no personal recollection of this conversation, the fact that he recorded this data on the reservation sheet indicates that the passenger inquiring had so advised him. Mr. Cole advised the Bureau agent that the last call received by the Pennsylvania-Central Airlines from Agent Pesci was at some time between 9 and 11 a. m. on August 31, at which time Mr. Pesci again advised Mr. Cole that he wanted only to go to Pittsburgh and that he would continue on to Chicago at a later date. Mr. Cole suggested to Mr. Pesci that since the flight 19 was completely sold out, he might, if he desired to take the chance, come to the airport on the possibility that a last-minute cancelation would make a seat available. Pesci advised Mr. Cole that he would do this, and it is to be noted, as will hereafter be pointed out, that Agent Pesci had completed his arrangements for a reservation to Pittsburgh prior to the time that Senator Lundeen was given a reservation on this plane.

With reference to Agent Pesci's travel, it is to be further noted that the daily report of ticket sales shows that Agent Pesci's trip was paid for by Government transportation request J-744141, the ticket being purchased from Washington to Chicago with a layover in Pittsburgh. At approximately the time the plane was scheduled to leave the Washington Airport, it was determined that a Miss C. Brubaker of Charlottesville, Va., who had a reservation on the plane, failed to claim her reservation and at that time Agent Pesci was given his space. Collaterally I may add that Agent Pesci desired to proceed to Pittsburgh by plane in order that he might stop off to see his father who was ill. The selection of the plane method of travel was made by Mr. Pesci of his own volition.

In connection with the bureau's inquiry into this matter, Mr. M. E. Cole pointed out that Agent Pesci at no time requested any information concerning Senator Lundeen and further that had Agent Pesci desired any reservations to continue on the balance of the trip which Senator Lundeen was making, or had he desired to have other agents continue on the trip, it would have been necessary for the airport to have made reservations through T. W. A. from Pittsburgh to Chicago and Minneapolis. A photostatic copy of the passenger manifest which is attached hereto indicates that Agent Pesci was only scheduled to go to Pittsburgh whereas Senator Lundeen was scheduled for Chicago and Minneapolis.

Further in this regard I am attaching hereto a copy of the Bureau's Register of Departures which is maintained at the seat of government from which it will be noted that Agent Pesci signed out of the Bureau as departing on August 31, 1940, for his headquarters at Chicago, Ill.

From Mr. M. E. Cole of the Washington Airport I have ascertained that Senator Lundeen's secretary contacted Mr. Cole between 4 and 6 p. m. on August 30, 1940, and requested a reservation on the 1: 45 p. m. plane for Chicago and Minneapolis. At this time the secretary was advised that the plane was filled and the suggestion was made that the Senator take the 5:15 p. m. plane for Minneapolis. Later Senator Lundeen himself called and demanded that he be given space on the 1: 45 p. m. plane on August 31. The Senator was informed that the plane was filled but that he would be placed on the waiting list, and in the event any cancelations were received, he would be given preference. Senator Lundeen was placed on the waiting list for the 1: 45 p. m. Pennsylvania-Central Airlines plane on August 31, but no definite space was assigned to him until a period between 11:45 a. m. and 12 noon on August 31, when a seat was assigned to Senator Lundeen for Pittsburgh, and reservations were made for him on the T. W. A. plane from Pittsburgh to Chicago. On the passenger manifest, a photostatic copy of which is attached hereto, it will be observed that the destination of Senator Lundeen is noted as being Chicago and Minneapolis. The reservation assigned to Senator Lundeen was made at about 11: 45 a. m. on August 31, 1940, and his reservations had already been made on the 5:15 p. m. plane on August 31 for the same destination.

From these facts it will be noted that Miss Margaret L. Turner, a Bureau stenographer, made her reservations and paid cash for a round-trip ticket to Cleveland, Ohio, 3 days before Senator Lundeen's secretary indicated that the Senator desired to proceed by plane to Chicago and Minneapolis. It will be further noted that Agent Pesci, on August 30, inquired for a reservation to Pittsburgh on the 1: 45 p. m. plane on August 31, 1940, on a ticket purchased from Washington to Chicago with a stop-over in Pittsburgh. It is further noted that the suggestion was made to Agent Pesci that he come to the airport in the chance of obtaining a reservation on this plane prior to the time that Senator Lundeen was assigned a seat upon the plane.

For the purpose of the record, I desire to state, without any reservation whatsoever, that neither Miss Turner nor Mr. Pesci were engaged in any investigation of Senator Lundeen at this or any other time. Miss Turner was proceeding on a vacation trip to Cleveland, Ohio. Agent Pesci was proceeding to his first office of assignment, stopping over in Pittsburgh to visit his sick father. Mr. Pesci and Miss Turner were not, to my knowledge, acquainted with each other and neither one knew the identity of the other.

While inquiring concerning this data, I also made inquiries concerning the travel of Mr. William Garbose, an attorney of the Criminal Division of the Department of Justice, who has been alleged to have been engaged with Agent Pesci and Miss Turner in conducting an investigation or surveillance of Senator Lundeen. I must point out, first, however, that Agent Pesci was not acquainted with Mr. Garbose and that Miss Turner was not acquainted with him, and I doubt that Mr. Garbose knew the identity of either Agent Pesci or Miss Turner.

According to Mr. M. E. Cole, reservation manager of the Pennsylvania-Central Airlines, Mr. William Garbose, of the Department of Justice, telephoned between 6 and 7:30 p. m. on August 30, 1940, and requested a reservation on the 11:35 a. m. plane on August 31 to Milwaukee, Wis. Mr. Garbose was advised that this plane was completely sold out but that his name would be placed on the waiting list. Mr. Garbose's name was placed on the waiting list for the 11:35 a. m. plane. There were no cancelations on this plane, however, and Mr. Garbose was unable to obtain space. He contacted Mr. Cole by telephone on the morning of August 31, 1940, and was finally given space on flight 19 after a cancelation of a previous space on this plane. It will be noted from the photostatic copy of the passenger reservation list which is attached hereto that Garbose was interested in going to Milwaukee and the airport employees obtained train schedules for him as set forth in the space-released column under No. 18. It may be further noted that the daily report of ticket sales for August 31, 1940, indicates that Mr. Garbose purchased his tickets for cash.

I thought that this data would be of some value and assistance to you in connection with this matter, and I would appreciate your bringing the contents of this letter to the attention of those of your colleagues who are interested in this matter.

Sincerely,

J. EDGAR HOOVER.

ACTIVITIES OF FOREIGN AGENTS AFFECTING NEUTRALITY

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, yesterday I gave notice that today, when I could obtain the floor, I intended to move to discharge the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate from the further consideration of Senate Resolution 186, generally known as the propaganda resolution.

I have conferred with the majority leader about the matter, and we are both convinced that it is very doubtful that a quorum is in the city at the present time. Inasmuch as a very important matter is involved in the consideration of the motion to discharge the committee, I shall not make the motion at this time, but give notice that at the first opportunity after the conclusion of the recesses I shall make the motion and press it.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if there be nothing further, I shall move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, does the Senator intend to move for a recess at the conclusion of the executive session? I desire to address the Senate for a short time. If the Senator will move to have an executive session, and at the conclusion of the executive session move that the Senate resume the consideration of legislative business to allow me to discuss the matter which I should like to discuss, I shall appreciate it very much. Does the Senator object to resuming legislative session at the conclusion of the executive session?

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no objection.

I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting several nominations and a convention, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. McKELLAR), as chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably from that committee the nominations of sundry postmasters.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

POSTMASTER—THOMAS E. TRULOVE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Thomas E. Trulove to be postmaster at Inglewood, Calif., which had been previously passed over.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I ask that the nomination be passed over.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination will be passed over.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the remaining nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

That concludes the calendar.

Mr. BARKLEY subsequently said: Mr. President, earlier in the day we had an executive session and confirmed some appointees; but there are on the Executive Calendar a number of nominations of postmasters in New Jersey whose confirmations have been held up. I ask unanimous consent, as in executive session, that the postmaster nominations in New Jersey which have been held up may now be laid before the Senate, and that the nominations be confirmed.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are several nominations from other States which have received the approval of the Senators from those States in all cases, including the eighty-odd from New Jersey.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that they all be confirmed en bloc.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nominations referred to are confirmed en bloc.

Mr. BARKLEY. I also ask unanimous consent that all resolutions of confirmation in the hands of the Secretary of the Senate be transmitted forthwith to the President of the United States.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT] may speak in executive session if he so desires. It is not necessary to resume legislative session unless he prefers to do so.

Mr. HOLT. I prefer to speak in legislative session.

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate resume the consideration of legislative business, if any.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of legislative business.

OWNERSHIP OF WAR STOCKS

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, time after time on this floor I have discussed certain individuals whom I have called "p-a-y-t-r-i-o-t-s." I have watched with much interest the record of Gov. Herbert H. Lehman, of New York, and I have noticed his activity in behalf of our involvement in war. I feel that the people of the United States have a right to know some of the background of Governor Lehman and his connection with war industries.

As we all know, Lehman Bros. own the Lehman Corporation. The Lehman Corporation is an investment trust which has money invested in various industries in this country. I find that during the year 1939, according to its portfolio of stock, the Lehman Corporation bought 3,000 shares of Bendix Aviation stock. We all know of the great amount of aviation business as a result of Government contracts. Between January 1 and July 1 of this year, the same Lehman Corporation, owned by the Lehman family, of which Gov. Herbert H. Lehman is a member, has increased its holdings of Bendix Aviation stock to 5,000 shares.

What else has it bought? In the past year the Lehman Corporation has bought 12,500 shares of Chrysler stock. We know that on the 15th of August of this year the United States Government gave to the Chrysler Corporation one order for $54,000,000 worth of tanks, and many, many smaller orders.

What else did the Lehman Corporation buy? Let us see if Lehman Corporation is disinterested in this war. Let us see why Gov. Herbert Lehman is helping to create hysteria throughout the country. He has actually said in private conversation—not publicly, of course—that he feels we should go into the war.

What else did the corporation buy? In the past year the Lehman Corporation has purchased 3,000 shares of Electric Auto-Lite stock; and between January 1 and July 1 of this year this firm increased its stock holdings of Electric Auto-Lite Corporation from 3,000 to 6,000 shares.

Why do I mention Electric Auto-Lite? Because the Electric Auto-Lite Co. makes small arms for the United States Army. Is the Lehman Corporation disinterested in this war drive?

Let us see what else the Lehman Corporation has bought. In the last year the Lehman Corporation has increased its stockholdings in Firestone Tire & Rubber by 7,100 shares. Firestone Tire & Rubber has quite a number of contracts with the Army and the Navy.

What else did the Lehman Corporation buy in the last year? It bought 10,000—not 1,000 but 10,000—shares of Yellow Truck & Coach. What do they say in their discussion of Yellow Truck & Coach stock. They say:

> Greater foreign and domestic military demand is the major factor in the earnings of this company.

Every time the United States Government gives the Yellow Truck & Coach Co. a contract it means more money for the Lehman Corporation, of which Gov. Herbert H. Lehman and his brother are large stockholders.

Mr. President, I do not want to detain the Senate long, but I am going to put in my remarks the contracts given by the United States Navy and the United States Army to the corporations of which Lehman Bros. have bought much stock in the last year.

(See exhibit A.)

LEHMAN CORPORATION INVESTS IN AVIATION

What else did they buy? They bought 76,000 shares of Aviation & Transportation Co. stock. What does Aviation & Transportation Co. stock mean? It means the Columbia Axle Co., the aviation corporation which controls Vultee Aircraft, which has an order for $35,000,000 worth of military aircraft alone. It owns Lycoming Motor Co.; it owns Stinson Aircraft. What else does the Aviation & Transportation Co. own? It has a part ownership in the New York Shipbuilding Corporation? What does the New York Shipbuilding Corporation mean in this defense item? The New York Shipbuilding Corporation has received from the United States Navy contracts for more than one-half billion—not million—but one-half billion dollars. Every time the New York Shipbuilding Corporation gets a contract from the United States Government it means money to Lehman Bros. and the Lehman Corporation.

Now let us see what else Lehman Bros. bought or the Lehman Corporation has bought in the last year. They bought 900 shares of Lockheed Aircraft. I do not think it is necessary to say any more about that. Every time Lockheed gets a contract from the Government it means money for Gov. Herbert H. Lehman.

Now let us see what else it bought. It bought 2,000 shares of Dow Chemical. We all realize the value of chemical stocks in preparation of war.

What else did Lehman Corporation buy? It bought 1,000 shares of Du Pont, which has orders for much powder from the United States Government.

What else did it buy? It bought 1,200 shares of Hercules Powder Co. stock, a company which sells powder for war purposes and which the Wall Street Journal has called a war baby.

Let us see if Lehman Corporation is entirely disinterested. Let us see if Gov. Herbert H. Lehman is disinterested in this war angle. What else did Lehman Corporation buy? It bought 1,500 shares of Monsanto Chemical Co., with its English subsidiary making money out of the war in Europe.

What else did Lehman Corporation buy? It bought 8,000 shares of Allis Chalmers, which makes engines and has unfilled orders of $25,000,000, much of which is Government. Every time the Government gives a contract in its defense drive to Allis Chalmers it means an increase in the amount of money that goes into the pocket of Governor Lehman.

Let us see what else the Lehman Corporation bought. It bought 3,000 shares of Bridgeport Brass. The Lehman Corporation did not have a cent of Bridgeport Brass stock in January 1939, I understand, but on the first day of this year we find they had 3,000 shares of Bridgeport Brass. What do we find in connection with Bridgeport Brass? We find that the United States Government has given orders for cartridges to the Bridgeport Brass Co. Every time a cartridge is produced it means more pennies for the Lehman Corporation.

Now let us see what else. I am not nearly through; I have much more that I could bring to the attention of the Senate. We all know how Fairbanks-Morse has obtained many orders as the result of the defense program. During the last year Lehman Bros. purchased 2,700 shares of Fairbanks-Morse, which has contracts with the Army and Navy. Between January 1 and July 1 of this year the Lehman Corporation increased their ownership of Fairbanks-Morse stock from 2,700 shares to 5,000 shares.

What else? Lehman Corporation has bought 5,000 shares of Mueller Brass Co. Mueller Brass Co. has quite a number of contracts with the United States Government in the defense program.

As I have said, as a part of my remarks, I am going to show these contracts, but I do not want to detain the Senate by reading them in full. But I have the exact dates and records to prove my statements.

What else has Lehman Corporation bought? It bought 500 shares of Aluminum, Ltd., and 1,500 shares of Aluminum Co. of America. I wish I could read the dozens and dozens of contracts which the Aluminum Co. has obtained from the Army and Navy of the United States.

I am advised that Lehman Corporation has since the first of the year acquired 8,000 shares of Borg-Warner. This company has been awarded several substantial defense contracts by the Army and the Navy.

What else did the Lehman Corporation buy? It bought 5,000 shares of Freeport Sulphur. We all know the value of sulphur in time of war in the production of sulphuric acid, in the making of steel and also in the development of chemicals. The Lehman Corporation bought 5,000 shares of Freeport Sulphur and 4,500 shares of Texas Gulf Sulphur, which has a direct war connection.

What else did the Lehman Corporation buy? It bought 2,300 shares of Hudson Bay Mining & Smelting Co., 700 shares of St. Joseph Lead, both war stocks.

NEGOTIATED CONTRACTS

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. VAN NUYS in the chair). Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. Does the Senator know whether or not some of the companies he mentions as having acquired large Government contracts have been given them by competitive bidding or whether they have obtained them under the so-called negotiated contracts without bidding? Is he familiar with that situation?

Mr. HOLT. Yes; quite a number of them are negotiated. For instance, in the case of the Bethlehem Steel Co., I will refer first to the New York Shipbuilding Corporation, some of the stock of which is owned by Aviation & Transportation, received contracts for three light cruisers at $17,164,500 each, and were guaranteed a profit of $1,493,300 on each cruiser, and part of that profit went to Lehman Corporation because of its ownership of Transportation & Aviation stock. The New York Shipbuilding Co. was awarded this by negotiated contract, not by a competitive bid. That is the New York Shipbuilding Corporation, with which Lehman Corporation has a connection.

What else? The Senator from New Hampshire asked me if there were any other negotiated contracts. I find negotiated contracts with Fairbanks-Morse, of which Lehman Corporation owns considerable stock. I find a negotiated cotract, with profit guaranteed, to the Bath Iron Works, and in the last quarter, according to the statement of the New York Herald Tribune, Lehman Corporation has acquired 2,400 shares of Bath Iron Works stock. What kind of contracts have the Bath Iron Works? Let me indicate to the Senate. They have negotiated contracts for six destroyers at $6,267,900 each, with a guaranteed profit of $545,300 each.

BUYS STEEL STOCKS

Mr. President, I desire now to refer to the acquisition of some more war stocks by the Lehman Corporation, in which Gov. Herbert H. Lehman, whom the President called his strong right arm, is interested. Let us see what they own. They have acquired in the last year 10,000 shares of Bethlehem Steel, 6,000 shares of Republic Steel, 19,000 shares of United States Steel, 4,000 shares of Youngstown Steel, all of which are making profits out of Army and Navy contracts. The Senator from New Hampshire asked me if any of the contracts were negotiated. Let me tell him of some of the negotiated contracts.

The Bethlehem Steel Corporation, of which the Lehmans are a stockholder through Lehman Corporation, and an interested party, has received contracts—negotiated contracts, not competitive contracts—for four heavy cruisers at $21,746,600 each, and the Bethlehem Steel Corporation was guaranteed a profit of $1,871,400 on each of the cruisers to be built by it. That is not all. They had a contract for four light cruisers at $17,101,400 each, and were guaranteed a profit on that contract of $1,471,600.

What else was negotiated? Two destroyers at $6,842,200 each, with a negotiated profit of $588,800 on each of the destroyers. I call attention to the fact that this was the company of whose stock Lehman Corporation purchased 10,000 shares. Did they know, did they have any inkling from inside, that Bethlehem Steel was to get these contracts?

Let us see what else was negotiated: Two destroyers at $5,503,400 each, with a negotiated profit of $473,600 each—a negotiated profit, guaranteed by the United States Government; no risk at all; the profit guaranteed.

(See exhibit E.)

So, we may go through these things; and we find, as I say, that as the profits came into these "war baby" stocks the profits drained to Lehman Corporation, and in turn drained to Gov. Herbert H. Lehman, who has been going all over New York trying to incite hysteria for American involvement in war, knowing that when America is involved in war it means more war business for the corporations in which he himself has a financial holding.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BRIDGES. Did the Senator happen to read the speech which Mr. Lehman, as Governor of New York, delivered to the Democratic State convention?

Mr. HOLT. No; I have been too busy to do that.

Mr. BRIDGES. I may say in passing, as long as the Senator is talking about Governor Lehman, that his reference there to the Republican candidate, and his reference to this Presidential contest as being a contest between Mr. Roosevelt and Hitler, was the cheapest demagoguery and the most reprehensible talk I have ever read. It is not in keeping with what should be the attitude of the Governor of any State of the Union, let alone the great State of New York.

Mr. HOLT. I desire to say to the Senator from New Hampshire that many of these individuals who become very patriotic and slur and call anybody pro-German who wants to look into these contracts, had better be watched very closely. I hope the American people will really look into these war contracts. They will find that a great deal of the present political move is specifically tied up with these war profits. Of course, we cannot secure an investigation now. If we ask for an investigation we are told, "You are against defense." What some of us want is plenty of defense; but we want every dollar that is spent for defense to go to defense, and not have 80 cents spent for defense and 20 cents spent for political favorites. We want real protection, but we are not going to have protection when contracts are negotiated with favored concerns whose stockholders are important parts of the Democratic machine.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BRIDGES. Perhaps the Senator will answer me on this point:

Of course, if Mr. Roosevelt, as President—that great international authority, by his own thought and regard and by the admission of some of his New Deal cohorts—had had the vision and the foresight that a President of the United States should have had, he would have been planning this preparedness program over a period of years, rather than rushing it as he has had to do in the past 2 or 3 months, and negotiating contracts. If it had been started at the proper time and done in an orderly fashion there would not have been any excuse in the world for negotiating contracts, because they could have been put out to bids, and persons could have been awarded contracts on the basis of merit and cost.

Mr. HOLT. I desire to say to the Senator from New Hampshire that this so-called speed is only an excuse to cover negotiated contracts. We all know why contracts are negotiated. They are not negotiated to increase speed. Time will prove that the war profiteering coming out of negotiated contracts at this time will make the profiteering of 1917 look small in comparison. Let me make the prediction now on the floor of the United States Senate that when the actual facts are known by the American people they will find graft and corruption and favoritism clear through and through this defense program. No; it is not some of us who are fighting for actual defense who are holding up the defense contracts. It is riddled with politics, favoritism, and, I think time will prove, with graft.

Why should these contracts be negotiated? Why should they not be let by competition? You know and I know why, and time will prove it.

But let me go back to the Lehman Corporation, because the Lehman Corporation, through Governor Lehman, seems to be so much interested in national defense. I give him credit for being intelligent. He seemed to know what corporations were to get Government contracts. Of course he is not officially connected with Lehman Corporation now. He still has his holdings there, however; and the corporation is in the family, just like some other things that I might mention, but I shall not.

Referring to what they bought, let us see:

We find that they own 700 shares of American Locomotive preferred and 9,000 shares of American Locomotive common, an increase of 4,600 shares in 1939. In 1939, American Locomotive did not pay a cent dividend on its preferred stock. In 1940, with Government contracts for gun carriages, artillery carriages, and the like, American Locomotive earned their preferred stockholders $3.35 a share, as compared to nothing in 1939.

What else do Lehman Corporation own? They own $347,000 in Baldwin Locomotive bonds, and 1,905 shares of Baldwin Locomotive preferred stock. In 1939 the preferred stock did not pay a cent dividend, but in 1940 it earned $26.80 a share. Baldwin Locomotive has received millions of dollars of Government contracts, and every time a profit is made on one of those contracts Lehman Corporation gains therefrom.

You may go on through, and you will find, as I say, corporation after corporation showing the interest of Lehman Corporation in these defense contracts.

Mr. President, I desire to put in the RECORD also a list of the holdings of Lehman Corporation as shown by their portfolio, and show the prior earnings of the stock as compared with the earnings after the corporation had received part of the war profits. (See exhibit B.) No wonder Governor Lehman traveled over New York State with the President of the United States trying to incite the idea of defense, because every time expenditures were made for defense it meant a few pennies or a few dollars for Lehman Corporation.

LEHMAN INVESTMENT IN SOUTH AFRICAN COPPER

That is not all. We find, when we start looking into the facts, according to the book on nonferrous metals by Eliott, May, Rowe, Skelton, and Wallace, that Lehman Bros. have large financial holdings in South African copper.

South Africa is a country at war. Is Governor Lehman a disinterested party? Oh, of course he is going to wave the flag to the skies. He is going to wave the flag while Lehman Corporation keeps getting dividends as the result of war contracts. That was the case in the last war; and when the elder Senator La Follette and other Senators asked for an investigation of the war contracts, they were laughed at, and the matter was passed aside; but we noticed that many of the individuals who waved the flag and called for defense in 1916 and 1917 were getting contracts and getting money therefrom. We found the profiteering long after the war, long after the taxpayers had paid the bill. Just recently a case was being tried about war profits from the war of 1917–18. Let us check these matters now. Let us not throw aside the protection for the people. Let us not duplicate the experience of the war profiteers and the making of twenty-odd thousand millionaires. We all want speed in building our defense, but it is not necessary to let down the protections which the last war proved so necessary.

I want the American people to know the background of some of these patriots—let me say again, "p-a-y-t-r-i-o-t-s," with the accent on the "p-a-y." Let us see about some of the other individuals who seem to be so particularly interested in involvement and intervention in war.

FRANK ALTSCHUL

Frank Altschul is president of the General American Investors' Co. and an officer of Lazard Fréres, which also has a connection with the Lehman family. I understand Mr. Altschul is connected with the Lehman family. What did they buy in the last year? Let us see their holdings:

One thousand seven hundred shares of Allied Chemical & Dye, 1,000 shares of Aluminum Co. of America, 4,000 shares of American Brake Shoe & Foundry, 3,000 shares of American Car & Foundry, 5,000 shares of Bendix Aviation, 10,000 shares of Bethlehem, 7,500 shares of Chrysler, 5,000 shares of Consolidated Aircraft, 8,000 shares of Du Pont, 10,000 shares of General Motors, 4,000 shares of Glenn L. Martin, 3,500 shares of Monsanto Chemical Co., 8,000 shares of United Aircraft, 12,000 shares of United States Steel, 6,000 shares of Westinghouse.

Contract after contract has been let to these corporations, and that means profit to the General American Investors Co. and to Frank Altschul, who is calling for more intervention in the war. He is a sponsor of the William Allen White Committee.

COL. HENRY BRECKENRIDGE

Another one of the individuals who has investments with companies which have contracts is Colonel Breckenridge, who called for the draft, who is going through the country trying to create a spirit of hysteria for war, and says himself that he believes we should be in the war. Colonel Breckenridge is a director of Aeronautical Securities, Inc. He was a director and founder. Let us see what they had their money invested in.

The following is a list of the increases of their holdings during the last year:

800 shares Bendix Aviation.
700 shares Douglas Aircraft.
100 shares Ex-Cell-o Corporation.
500 shares Fairchild Aviation.
100 shares Grummann Aircraft.
400 shares Irving Air Chute.
1,300 shares Lockheed.
1,200 shares Glenn L. Martin.

Every time a bomber is built it means more money to the Aeronautical Securities Co., and in turn more money for Col. Henry Breckenridge. No wonder he wants war. Let us see what else they had their money in:

500 shares North American Aviation.
200 shares Polick Manufacturing.
700 shares Sperry Corporation.
900 shares United Aircraft.
600 shares Curtiss-Wright "A."

(See exhibit C.)

As we go through those stocks, we find millions and hundreds of millions of dollars worth of contracts with profits.

FRED M'KEE AND CASKETS

It may be quite ironic to also cite another man who is treasurer of the William Allen White committee, a man by the name of Mr. Fred McKee, of Pittsburgh. He is not only treasurer for the William Allen White committee, he is treasurer for the National Casket Co. That is a good job for a man who is treasurer of a committee that wants to get us into war, because if we go to war we are going to need plenty of caskets, not to be filled by these individuals like McKee and Breckenridge and Lehman, but by American boys who have not a thing involved in the war except their lives.

Speaking of Fred McKee, I shall insert in the RECORD here from the Ohio Valley Labor News an editorial entitled "Caskets for Whom, When, and Where?" See exhibit F. It discusses how the Government is looking around for caskets. It says that Major Ginsburg is just looking around to see if we do not have to have more caskets, and it quotes him as follows:

> After all, if you have 1,000,000 men under arms, even in peacetime you are going to have some casualties; some men are going to fall off trucks and have other accidents and illnesses.

That is not why they are going to have caskets, because the men are going to fall off trucks. Everyone knows they are going to have caskets because this drive is to get us into war. Men are going to be killed by cartridges made by companies from which the Lehman Corporation is getting its pennies and its dollars of profits.

I call a spade a spade here, and I intend to continue to do that, but I want to say that I am not afraid, and I challenge anyone to deny any statement I have made about this matter.

Who else is in this so-called interested group? Let us look. A few days ago when the Senator from Missouri was talking about Ward Cheney I did not know why Ward Cheney was interested in the William Allen White committee, the transfer of the destroyers, and those things. I thought I would ascertain who Ward Cheney was. I knew he was connected with Cheney Bros., who are in the silk business, but I decided to look into the matter to see what Cheney Bros. are getting out of war, getting out of the defense contracts.

WARD CHENEY

Since the war started, according to Moody's Investment Service, Cheney Bros. got a contract for $133,800 for parachute silk, another for $67,000, another for $135,000, another for $156,000, and, according to the Department of Labor, they received also contracts for the Army and Navy, one for $15,557.50, another for $18,150, another for $56,350, another for $90,225, and another for $15,400.

Those are contracts under the defense program, and Ward Cheney is out waving the flag, telling why we should go to the aid of Great Britain, and why we should have all these airplanes. Airplanes mean there must be parachutes, and parachutes mean silk, and when the Government buys silk, it buys it from Cheney Bros.

So when we look back into the record of these individuals like Governor Lehman, like Fred McKee, and like Frank Altschul, and like Ward Cheney, and many others, we see that their investments are in war stocks. The American people have a right to know these things.

When I say these things I am not fighting defense, but I want the American people to know who are getting the contracts, and show that these individuals are not interested only in the defense of America, but that they are interested also in their dividends—dividends they receive as profits from war contracts.

I do not wish to hold the Senate longer, although I have much material, and I ask to have inserted as a part of my remarks two chapters from the book War Madness, by Stephen and Joan Raushenbush, and an article in the American Federationist, the official publication of the American Federation of Labor, entitled "Dollars versus Defense." I want the American people to have the facts, and when they find out the facts they will discover why some of these individuals wanted to lift the embargo, and why these individuals want war expenditures. These patriots who are waving the flag are also stuffing dollars into their pockets, which all means the death of American boys, but more profit. American boys are being carried out into this profit-motive war.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from West Virginia?

There being no objection, the matters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHAPTER III—THE PROFITS IN A BIG NAVY

Once you start something you have to keep it going. Once England had acquired India it had to keep up a fleet to protect it. Then it had to build naval bases for the fleet. Then it had to get control of oil lands to fuel the fleet. Then it had to put favorable governments into those oil lands. Then it had to build naval bases to protect them. Then it had to police them and put down revolutions sometimes even by bombing insurgents. One thing led to another in the long history of imperialism.

We have started somewhat the same chain of events with the Philippine Islands as a jumping off place.

We have a swarm of shipbuilding and supply companies who live off the Navy, who live from building warships, and who constantly desire that bigger and better warships be built. We have huge steel, boiler, and electrical companies who make a pretty penny every time our Navy is increased.

It is, of course, possible that the late General Mitchell was right, and that it would take only a few airplanes to demolish any naval vessel which could be built. In that case a big navy would simply be a fraud on any nation's hopes and on the taxpayers of all naval nations. It would be nothing but a subsidy-in-error of hundreds of millions a year to the shipbuilders and the supply companies. In the fall of 1935, when the great ships of the British Fleet were gathered at Gibraltar, the Italian opinion seemed to be that a few bombers could sink them all. From the way the British acted at that time, the conclusion might be drawn that some agreed with that opinion.

Unfortunately, the decision on this question seems to rest with the naval people of the world themselves, and they are a vested interest. In all nations their way to promotion and pay rests on a constantly increasing navy. No group in such a position can be considered impartial. Military men can make mistakes. The German general staff made the colossal errors—from the angle of a desired German victory—of not forcing the attack on Paris in the early days of the World War and not bothering to secure the Channel ports when they were undefended. The French kept their soldiers in bright blue and red uniforms, walking targets, for a long while, and started to dismantle the fortress of Verdun. The English stuck to rifles and bayonets long after the machine gun had outdated those weapons.

To the lay mind the late Gen. William Mitchell's contentions that big ships are simply foolish from the military angle, has some appeal. The statesmen of England and France seem to be agreed that nothing can stop great bombers from getting over cities and blowing them up. If they are correct in that, it would seem to be only a matter of a few technological improvements in bomb sighting before the same bombers could blow up a warship with the same ease and freedom from interruption, even at a great height in the air above the ships. And, always there is the possibility of a power dive down onto a ship, in the course of which a hundred-thousand-dollar plane plus one man might account for a forty-million-dollar battleship with a thousand men.

When England brought out her dreadnoughts in 1906, the other nations of the world, and England herself, had to begin all over again and scrap what they had. The airplane bomber may be the equivalent of the dreadnought, but the nations of the world may not yet have been allowed to find it out. If that should, by chance, be true, the nations of the world including the United States are pouring vast sums down a rat hole.

Meanwhile, however, there is money in big navies. There are vested interests which want them to grow bigger and bigger, regardless of the effect of such increases on world peace. Just as before the World War, every big-navy speech in Germany was seized on in England and was a cause for stock-market increases in British shipbuilding and steel stocks, so today the naval munitions makers of Japan appreciate to the full all our big Navy talk, nor are we slow to capitalize their big-navy talk. In fact, there might even be developed a kind of international etiquette about it. For so much provocation afforded Japan, our interests would have a right to receive a like amount in return. It would help the business on both sides of the Pacific. That kind of etiquette seemed to prevail between France and Germany before the World War. Whenever French papers could be prevailed upon or bribed to talk of new French armament, the German munitions people capitalized the news into more orders for themselves and thanked whatever gods they worshipped, and vice versa. In the end enough fear, hatred, and suspicion had been engendered so that the people of the two nations went to war readily, but in the meantime business had been good. When the war came, of course, it was better.

The way the Vickers-Electric Boat combination worked this trick in Chile and Peru has been indicated. Basil Zaharoff, who was connected with both companies, used it on Greece and Turkey. Nothing scares the people of a nation so effectively as the armaments of a neighboring nation. The people who have arms to peddle are very reluctant to admit that in this way their business differs from other kinds of business. The English businessmen who made and sold textile machinery to India probably did more to ruin England's great textile center, Manchester, than the German battleships could ever do, but the people of Manchester grow a hundred times more incensed at an increase in the German Fleet than at the activities of fellow-British manufacturers that ruined them. A new mechanical cotton picker may do more to ruin our South than the capture of all China by Japan, but the chances are that an able demagogue could arouse in the cotton pickers a hundred times more hatred and fear of the yellow peril than of the cotton picker.

During the World War the private shipyards could not make anything like the number of warships we needed. We had to set up Government yards, and tried to make ships like automobiles, on a mass-production basis. The shipbuilders, however, made some fine profits and wanted to keep on making them. After the Armistice was signed, and the war was supposedly at an end, the keels for 91 destroyers were laid down in private yards, a gift of $181,247,000 to the shipbuilders. A year later the Navy was willing to sell these ships for $100,000 apiece, completely armed, to Peru, and would have done it if the Electric Boat Co. and our own Cabinet had not objected. The submarine company was trying to sell some destroyers for $230,000 and the Cabinet held the strange notion that increased navies might cause war.

In wartime people are supposed to put their country before their own interests. The Senate munitions committee officially found "that the record of the present shipbuilding companies during the war, wherever examined, was close to being disgraceful." * * *

"They made very considerable profits. On Treasury audits they showed up to 90 percent. They secured cost-plus contracts and added questionable charges to the costs. They took their profits on these ships after the wartime taxes had been repealed. They secured changes in contract dates to avoid war taxes. They bought from the Government, very cheaply, yards which had been built expensively at Government costs. In one case this was prearranged before the yard was built. One yard did not build necessary additions until it was threatened with being commandeered. Knowingly exorbitant claims were filed against the Government for cancelation. Huge bonuses were paid to officers. Profits were concealed as rentals." * * *

"The committee finds no assurance in the wartime history of these companies to lead it to believe that they would suddenly change their spots in the case of another war."

After the Washington Naval Conference of 1922, one company (Newport News) put in a bill to the Government for $14,973,000 for stopping its construction of two cruisers and a battleship. At the same time the company's president wrote to the company's owner that he was willing to take $6,616,000. The claim for the extra $8,357,000 was just patriotism. Treasury agents figured that the net profits of this company, in 1917, were 90.6 percent, but the company and the Treasury were never able to agree on the investment figure for the company. Bethlehem Steel, which was accused by the Government of "perpetrating a gross fraud" in the cost of ships it built for the Emergency Fleet Corporation, paid a bonus to Eugene Grace, the president, of $2,887,725 during the years 1917 and 1918. Mr. Grace, reminded that the doughboys were getting $465 a year, said these bonuses had been a great inspiration to him. When we entered the war Charles Schwab made a grand gesture of offering the Bethlehem plant to the Government, but after the war Admiral Bowles was stating "We wish to place on record the fact that the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation's representatives have insisted on comparatively high prices for these vessels; that they have only with difficulty been persuaded to quote us on the types of ships referred to, and their attitude has been characterized by the arbitrary refusal to stand behind delivery dates."

After the wartime building had been stopped by the Washington Conference there was a lull in naval shipbuilding until 1926. The interest of the American shipbuilders in wrecking the Geneva Naval Conference of 1927 is described in chapter IV. The extent of their interest in our having a big fleet if they didn't make all the money out of it themselves may be indicated by a letter which the vice president of Newport News wrote in 1928 to New York Ship and Bethlehem Shipbuilding, the other members of the Big Three, when the proposition was being made in Congress that half of the new cruisers should be built in the Government's own navy yards. "I think it will be better for the Government and for the shipbuilding industry to kill the Navy bill entirely rather than use it for building up further Government competition with the shipbuilding industry."

But even before we began building ships after the Geneva Conference, there was agitation for new ships. The Navy League, which was a front for the Navy on various occasions, and for the various shipbuilding and shipping interests on others, took part in this agitation. Navy Day was used as a threat against Congressmen who voted against building more ships. For years the officers of steel and shipbuilding companies were State chairmen of Navy Day. Officials of the Navy seemed to understand clearly enough that Navy Day was for the purpose of defeating such Congressmen as did not agree subserviently with the Navy's ideas about its growth. R. E. Coontz, signing himself Rear Admiral, United States Navy, wrote the Navy League: "If your office would make a map, taking the congressional districts * * * and see where the dark spots are that we have never had any votes from and send speakers particularly to those districts next October we would certainly get some results. We have made such a splendid showing in the South this last campaign that it should not be neglected, and we should attempt to regain the lost votes, particularly in Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Ohio, and Illinois."

Navy League letters in the 1920's show the purpose of Navy Day very clearly. Writing to a naval officer the League's secretary said: "I think it is particularly important that we have a good Navy Day celebration in Georgia this year, because only half of the Representatives from that State voted favorably on the Britten bill, authorizing the eight new light cruisers and the modernization of our older battleships. This is a great improvement over the previous test vote * * * and I am encouraged to believe that * * * Navy Day is partly responsible for the improvement."

When the sentiment finally was worked up to the building of new cruisers in 1927, the three big companies seem to have gotten together and decided that each would get one of three cruisers to be allotted to private yards. Bethlehem got one, New York Shipbuilding one, and Newport News received one and an additional one the Navy decided to give to the private yards. On its two, the Augusta and Houston, the first rewards from the wrecking of the Geneva Conference, Newport News made 35 percent profit. Bethlehem made 25.4 percent on the Northampton and New York Shipbuilding made 36.7 percent on the Chester.

These figures, the companies' own, were not made public until 1935. Meanwhile, the Navy had obligingly been telling committees of Congress that the profits of the private shipbuilders on these cruisers were low, specifically offering to the House Naval Affairs Committee an itemized tabulation showing that the profit to New York Ship on the Chester was only $983,000. A few months after that, the company, on its own figures, admitted that its profit on that ship was $2,946,706. In some other country this action by Navy officials might, at least, have called forth a reprimand, but we seem to accept the partnership of the shipbuilders with the Navy in such affairs as a matter of course.

The years 1927 and 1928 were great years for the shipbuilders. They spent money in lobbying, about $140,000 of which has been more or less accounted for, and got back millions in subsidies for a merchant marine. Later, the shipowners' counsel, the man reported to have written the Jones-White subsidy bill, told representatives of the Navy League that the shipowners ought to make a contribution. "They are all tightwads, the whole crowd. * * * They have certainly raked in enough millions to contribute $7,200 a year without feeling it at all."

There was much talk in the companies about getting bills through, placing Congressmen on the proper committees, and generally running things. Mr. Shearer was back with the triumphs of Geneva on his shoulders and claiming that "as a result of my activities during the Sixty-ninth Congress, eight 10,000-ton cruisers are under construction. Further, that owing to the failure of the tri-power naval conference at Geneva, there is now before the Seventieth Congress a 71-ship building program costing $740,000,000." He boasted that the shipbuilders were "delighted with the results," and published The Cloak of Benedict Arnold, paid for by the shipbuilders, in which Franklin D. Roosevelt, President Pendleton of Wellesley, Ralph Pulitzer, Colonel House, and others were grouped together as traitors to the country, knaves, and fools. This was the development of a technique later used most extensively. All those who doubted that ultimate wisdom and truth about national defense and peace lay with the Army, the Navy, the shipbuilders, or other munitions makers, were simply branded as pacifists, Communists, or internationalists.

Shearer was boasting that he had gone to Geneva originally at the request of Admiral Pratt, and his many other contacts with the Navy, as he later described them, generally gave the impression that he was one of the Navy's own agents, although he was paid by the shipbuilders, Mr. Hearst, and others.

It was at this time that New York Shipbuilding was having its taxes for 1922–25 lowered from $14,500,000 to $5,705,000 by a half-hour audit, and a proposed congressional investigation was welcomed by the company's vice president as follows: "Publicly, of course, we could not say other than that we welcome an investigation. * * * There is altogether too much dynamite in a congressional investigation, and we are altogether too vulnerable from the standpoint of political attack to leave anything undone which will forestall the investigation."

When more cruiser contracts were to be let in 1929, the Navy called for bids for both one and two cruisers. Unanimously the Big Three yards declined to bid on two, and each bid on one only. Newport News, which was in process of making 35 percent profit on the cruisers it had, jumped its 1927 bid by $488,000, and admitted later that it did not expect to get the ship. Bethlehem was given the Portland and New York Ship the Indianapolis. On these they made 21.8 percent and 33.4 percent profit, respectively. In 1930, Newport News made up by getting the aircraft carrier Ranger, and on that, too, it is doubtful whether the three companies were bidding against each other very seriously. On that, Newport News made 23.1 percent profit according to its own figures.

In 1931 the Washington representative of a company building destroyers, Bath Iron Works, of Maine, wrote about the fine zeal of the shipbuilders: "I understand this morning after the [appropriation] bill went through every east-coast yard had its representatives in Washington with their tongues hanging out and all teeth showing ready to fight for their share of the plunder, and the only thing that stopped the west-coast yards from being here was the fact that they couldn't come bodily by telegraph."

The cruiser that year was the Tuscaloosa.

Strange things happened. All three companies bid. Newport News found out that it would cost them $355,000 less to build it than they estimated in 1929, but instead of lowering its bid under the one it had made in 1929, it raised it $170,000. Its bid was $658,000 higher than on the ship in 1927, when it made 35 percent profit. That put it out of the running. New York Ship got the cruiser.

When 1932 came, a competitor, United Dry Dock, entered this field which was so profitable to the Big Three. Since the cruiser-building game had started in 1927 the score was Newport News, $36,488,000; New York Ship, $32,228,000; Bethlehem, $21,428,000. It was Bethlehem's turn. Bethlehem, in the face of real competition, dropped its bids $2,499,000. The two other companies dropped their bids in this one case an average of $1,242,000. It was a depression year. The difference between the first figure and the second, about $1,257,000, was the benefit to the Government in having a real competitor in the field for once. Bethlehem got the armored cruiser Quincy and it has been a headache to the Navy ever since.

When 1933 came, the Navy went into big business, and there was much rejoicing on all hands. Hardly had the Public Works Administration money been voted when $238,000,000 was allocated to the Navy. Instead of its being a buyer's market when honest competition could bring the price down, as it had in the one year of 1932, it was now a seller's market. There was no more nonsense about low prices, even once. The N. R. A. had been set up, and that was an excuse for high prices, although actually steel shapes were lower in 1933 and 1934 than in 1927–29, and labor only slightly over 1929. But the fact that the United States Navy needed every yard to build the ships was the main reason for the increased prices. Admiral Robinson, the Chief of Engineering, was asked: "They [the shipbuilders] were frank enough to say they were putting up the prices because of the great amount of work at the time?" He replied, "There is no question about that."

One almost needs a chart to show the way the shipbuilders jumped the prices when they knew that the Navy wanted ships badly. It was the war all over again. From 1927 to 1932 the average of all bids for one cruiser was $10,334,000. In 1933 it was $13,870,000 on the same basis, an average increase of $3,536,000. In 1934 the average fixed price bid for a cruiser had jumped to $15,219,000, an increase over the 1927–32 average of $4,885,000.

Some strange things went on in Washington early in 1933, but among the strangest were incidents connected with the shipbuilders' desire for business as usual—only more so. Shipbuilders' prices jumped greatly and jumped together.

Bethlehem had bid on the Quincy for $8,196,000 and now got the Vincennes, a duplicate, for $11,720,000, a jump of $3,524,000. United, which had entered for a brief moment as a real competitor in 1932, now gracefully dropped out with an increased bid of $5,075,000. It took some destroyers instead of a cruiser. New York Ship admitted it didn't want the Vincennes, although it had bid on it. It was trying to get light cruisers instead. So it bid high. Newport News was concentrating on two aircraft carriers, the Yorktown and Enterprise, and jumped its bid on this cruiser $4,150,000, which took it out of the picture.

Strangely enough bidding on the light cruisers Savannah and Nashville fitted into the bidding on the Vincennes like pieces of a Chinese puzzle. There wasn't much difference in the work to be done in the two types, but Bethlehem jumped its bid for a light cruiser (which it didn't want) by $1,380,000 over its bid for the Vincennes. Newport News admitted it was more interested in the aircraft carriers and destroyers than in the cruisers. United showed its lack of interest by bidding even higher on the light cruisers than on the Vincennes. The result was that New York Shipbuilding got the Nashville and Savannah.

Quite a while before the bids were opened, Clinton L. Bardo, president of New York Shipbuilding and president of the National Manufacturers Association, wrote to the chairman of the board of that company about talks between the shipbuilders and representatives of the Navy.

"* * * There was also expressed to us the desire that the builders themselves should get together and agree as far as we could upon what each would bid and then bid on nothing else. The situation as it now stands is substantially as follows:

"Newport News: The two airplane carriers.

"Bethlehem: The 10,000-ton 8-inch cruiser.

"New York Ship: A new 10,000-ton 6-inch cruiser and a distribution of the 8 destroyer leaders."

It came out that way, except that New York Ship received an additional cruiser. Another shipbuilder, Mr. Lawrence Wilder, delivered an envelope to some union leaders before the bidding with exact predictions of the low bidders.

Admirals tried to explain to the Senate Munitions Committee in 1935 that the presence of plenty of bidders meant honest competition, but the figures showed nothing of the kind.

That committee, after months of hearing about the way bids were raised and lowered to give the impression of competition when there was actually none at all, concluded that with certain exceptions "there was no hard-hitting competition" from 1927 through 1934 on most of the ships. "If there was no collusion, there was a sympathetic understanding among the big companies of each other's desires. If there were no conversations about bidding among them, there was telepathy." The result of that lack of honest competition was that the Government has far fewer ships than it would otherwise have. Or, looked at from another angle, the men in the Navy are being paid considerably less than they would otherwise get.

This business of agreement among supposed competitors to force the Government to pay a high price—and give it fewer ships for its money—is not confined to the United States. Vickers and Electric Boat Co. were doing it in other quarters of the world.

Just before Vickers took over another shipbuilding concern, Armstrong's, in 1927, it informed its American friends that it would arrange to have Armstrong put in bids on Admiralty submarines at a price "slightly above ours." Not only was the Admiralty to be fooled but the stockholders as well. "You will notice * * * that Armstrong's had to make a terrible fuss about the Merchant Shipyard, etc., which they are retaining. * * * This, it will be obvious to you, is for the benefit of their debenture and shareholders. For your own private information, the only works they are retaining are the ones we refuse to have anything to do with."

In 1932 Vickers was put in the same position by the admiralty as our shipbuilders were by our Navy in 1927—they had a lot to lose if the Disarmament Conference succeeded. Vickers was to be given an order for a large submarine which would be good only if "Geneva or some other fancy convention" in Vickers' words, did not decide that large submarines were to be abolished as offensive weapons. At the same time, Vickers was getting orders for small submarines, for their Spanish subsidiary "on the pretext that they are purely defensive," in their own language.

Meanwhile, Vickers was being told by Electric Boat to please stay out of the Brazilian market and encouraged to get into the Argentine market. "It may be our policy to support the bid of our English friends (Vickers) in the Argentine and that we may also decide to have a friendly controlled bid put in from Italy. * * * The general idea, of course, is to fix the Italian price a little higher than Vickers' price and if by any chance they should get the order, the profit will be ample to take care of them as well as Vickers and ourselves." At the same time Vickers was handling the Chilean market in the same way. "During the last few days by skillful maneuvering we have managed to get some of our competitors' prices in the Chilean competition put up."

After looking at the way our shipbuilders operated, and their way of looking at our Government as if it were something which was being run for their benefit, the munitions committee made some comments:

National defense should be provided for without profiteering or collusion.

A purely defensive Navy should not be confused with the private necessity of the shipbuilders for private profits. This is a possible consequence of the present close relations between the Navy and the shipbuilders.

Suppliers for the Navy are in a different class from ordinary Government contractors. Their activities ultimately affect our foreign policy.

The Nation should avoid a situation where the Navy goes to the shipbuilders for help in getting increased appropriations and the shipbuilders get a return from the Navy in high profits.

It is plain bad for the Navy to be dependent on those primarily interested in their own profits and "who may be unscrupulously glad to be in a position where they can wrap the flag around those private interests."

Congress must not let the people be confused between the actual needs of the Nation for national defense and the needs of shipbuilders and suppliers for profits.

Either the shipbuilders and suppliers should be policed in moves made by them to confuse public-defense needs with their own profits or the building of warships should be taken away from them.

The naval race between England and Germany before the World War was kept going by steel, shipbuilding interests, and navy leagues.

The record of the shipbuilders during the war was so bad that the committee thought they were not "exactly the right people to allow to hang around very close to the powder keg of international relations."

The private yards cost the Government from $1,569,000 to $2,116,000 a cruiser more than the navy yards.

The Navy doesn't know about private costs or profits.

The profits on the 1927–30 ships, the only ones on which figures were available, were excessive.

The private shipbuilders took advantage of the Navy's needs in 1933 and 1934 and raised prices unjustifiably.

The Navy is dependent upon the private yards for plans and instead of getting less dependent on them is growing more dependent. The statement of one officer was "The Navy's developments of 15 years were handed to the Electric Boat Co. on a silver platter." This dependence on the private yards for plans has resulted in great delay in construction of the ships.

The Navy has failed to use the navy yards as yardsticks to keep down the charges of the shipbuilders.

The shipbuilders and supply companies make up a powerful lobbying force.

The Vinson Act, decreeing that no more than 11.1 percent profit on naval work should be made, is not enforceable and can be easily evaded. The shipbuilders and suppliers have gotten together to set up a process of procedure by which they can bulldoze the Government into actually giving them more than 11.1 percent profit. "If the shipbuilders, boiler manufactures, and electrical manufacturers act in accordance with uniform rules, it will be so strong I think the Income Tax Bureau will have a hard time resisting it," were the words of Mr. Gillmor, president of Sperry Gyroscope Co.

When the Navy started letting the shipbuilders bid, beginning in 1933, at the risk of the Government as far as increases in prices were concerned, it was doing them a great favor and practically giving them cost-plus contracts.

The committee then recommended (and Senator VANDENBERG, of Michigan, introduced) two bills, one to have the Comptroller General examine the estimates and bids of private yards and navy yards and recommend to the Navy whether the bids should be accepted, or the ships should be put into navy yards. This bill (74th Cong., S. 3098) also included a provision against lobbying and proposed to make the Navy independent of the private yards in planning of the ship designs.

A second bill was also introduced (74th Cong., S. 3099) providing that the Navy should not award cruisers to private yards if they proposed to charge the Government over $500,000 more than the cruiser could be built for in a navy yard. Not more than $1,000,000 surcharge was allowed to private yards on an aircraft carrier and not more than $300,000 bounty on a destroyer.

These bills got nowhere. The Navy objected to them.

A year later a majority of the committee's members reported that they favored building all the warships in Government navy yards, leaving tankers and auxiliary craft to the private yards. In 1937 a bill to do this and to transfer other munitions manufacture from private companies to Government arsenals was introduced by Senator NYE.

CHAPTER VI—UNITED STATES PRODUCTION OF MUNITIONS

Since 1935 England has been rearming at a great rate. She felt herself obliged to do this in order to catch up with Italian and German preparations for war. It seemed to her statesmen like a race with death. After 2 years it became clear that the program was going very slowly, in spite of huge appropriations and a national desire to be armed rapidly. In 1937, Drew Pearson, in London, offered an explanation of this fact.

"The reason for Britain's arms program bogging down is not the pacifism of British leaders, but the conservatism of British industry. British factory owners still insist on 15-percent profit on arms orders, whereas France has nationalized its munitions plants, and Hitler and Mussolini squeeze the big industrialists."

To some mighty words once uttered by Chancellor Philip Snowden, "Let the world come against her, England stands there still," one might now add, "waiting for 15-percent profit."

The first reason advanced for Government production of munitions is the fact that private munitions companies hold the Government up for high profits in peacetime.

When the big Navy program began in 1933, they did it, and the Navy knew and said they were doing it, and was powerless to prevent them from doing it. Prices went up largely because the Navy needed all the shipyards. This meant that the Government got fewer ships for its money than it would have received from its navy yards, and fewer than other nations receive for their money.

Three times in 1936 the Government asked for bids on copper. According to the Walsh-Healy law the copper offered for sale to the Government had to be produced by labor working no more than 8 hours a day. The copper companies preferred not to bother to make any such provisions for their labor, and did not bid, although the copper was vital for the national defense. In spite of the law, the Navy was forced to go into the open market and bid in competition with foreign armaments companies.

In January 1937, Secretary of the Navy Swanson was quoted in the press as saying that private bids for a floating drydock for Pearl Harbor, considered a vital defense measure by the Navy, were $21,000,000, and that the price was so high the Navy would build it itself for $12,000,000.

The greater cost to the Government of building cruisers in private yards than in navy yards has been indicated in chapter III. Estimated by three government bodies, even including items only private companies need pay, such as insurance and taxes, the difference is close to $2,000,000 per cruiser.

The steel companies are no laggards, either, in charging the Government amazingly high prices. Before we entered the World War, Josephus Daniels, then Secretary of the Navy, pointed out that the price for armor plate was scandalous. Identical bids were being received from Carnegie, Bethlehem, and Midvale, at exactly the same price, $454 a ton. The Government figured it could produce that plate at $262 a ton.

In response Congress authorized the building of a Government armor-plate plant. After the war it was closed, and when cruiser building began again in 1927, this plant was not put back into action, a decision which must have pleased the steel companies greatly.

In 1936 the question of the prices for armorplate came up again, very briefly. No Navy figures were offered. The bids no longer were identical. The steel companies had learned something. But the results were still amazing. Carnegie Steel, one of the three companies which get armor-plate orders from the Navy, had secured an award of some tonnage in 1930 by a bid of $560 per ton. On this bid, according to its own figures, freely submitted, it made a profit of 58.2 percent. It cost the company $350.73 to make the steel. By the company's own figures the profit was $203.14, or 58.2 percent. It received from the Navy a little less than it had bid, $553.87 per ton.

How can a company make so much money out of the Navy on armorplate? Where were the "competitors" when such high profits were being made? They were there, bidding, making it look like competition. When Carnegie bid $560 a ton, Midvale bid $110 a ton more, $670. If Midvale had been awarded the contract, with costs the same as Carnegie's, it would have made $319.27 a ton profit, or 91 percent.

And where was the third "competitor" when Carnegie was making the pleasant profit of 58.2 percent a ton on Navy work, and when Midvale was willing to do the Navy work for 91 percent? Bethlehem was there. It was right in there, as usual, bidding its head off to get the business, in the middle of the depression. It bid $120 a ton more than Carnegie. If it had gotten the contract, with costs the same as Carnegie's it would have made over 96 percent profit.

Did Carnegie lower its bids to the Government on later demands for the same class of armor plate? It must be reported that they went up instead of down. Apparently 58 percent was not enough.

The company was asked why it had not lowered its prices to the Navy when it found out that it was making such high profits. It replied that prices were determined by competitors' prices. In other words, the company had bid too low rather than too high.

On another Navy contract—for turret armor—the company's own figures showed it made $166.72 a ton, a profit of 43.4 percent of costs. That wasn't enough, either. In 1934 it was bidding $585 a ton instead of $560, and in 1935 it raised the ante to $595.

On still another Navy contract, in 1933, it made 42.7 percent profit on a bid for $545 a ton. That wasn't enough, either. Bids in 1934 and 1935 were $40 and $50 more.

The British companies, holding up their Government's program for but 15 percent, begin to look moderate and reasonable.

Of course, most companies did not choose to present such figures to the Munitions Committee, and that committee had no staff to do the enormous accounting job involved in checking even a few profits for each company. Midvale, a Baldwin Locomotive subsidiary, developed an accounting technique which consisted of penalizing the Government for its naval holiday from 1922 to 1927. On Government business of $5,982,386 it showed profits of only $553,095 by adding to the other costs depreciation charges as high as $1,157,591. Over 21 percent of the costs were charges added to pay for the fact that the plant was idle during the years of the naval holiday.

Occasionally the Army audits costs, although these audits do not seem to find their way to Congress. One was found in the files of Sperry Gyroscope, which is a big Army and Navy supplier of stabilizers, pilots, and anti-aircraft equipment. It has licensed Germany and Japan for some of its devices and has a subsidiary in Japan. It has led the fight to abolish the 10 percent profit limitation on Navy work which was imposed a few years ago. An Army auditor found that it was making profits from 39.7 percent to 89.8 percent on an order for 108 flight indicators, an average profit of 54.6 percent of cost. On an order for 114 turn indicators for the Army Air Corps profits went as high as 91 percent, averaging 40.4 percent.

Pratt & Whitney went into the business of manufacturing airplane engines, largely for the Government, and made $11,437,250 in 8 years on a $1,000 investment. This is something like a record.

Wright Aeronautical Co., manufacturing engines, reported its own figures showing profits on sales to the Navy of 31.88 percent, 1925; 21 percent, 1926; 29 percent, 1927; 44 percent, 1928; 30 percent, 1929. On sales to the Army these unchecked figures showed profits of 93 percent, 1926; 31 percent, 1928; 18 percent, 1933.

In 1926, when Midvale was bidding against the Government arsenal at Frankford, the bids ran like this: Midvale, $102; Frankford, $68; Midvale, $96.75, Frankford, $31.74. On the 1926 awards for projectiles the Government saved $623,296 by awarding them to Frankford.

The fact that Government production is cheaper has been recognized for some time by the Army. In 1916 the Kernan board found that the Government was manufacturing in its arsenals at a cost 18.6 percent lower than the cost charged by private companies, even before adding in a charge of 6.6 percent for Government inspection of articles made in the private factories. Since inspection by men paid for by the Government is an essential part of the final costs to the Government of private production, the actual conclusion of the Kernan board was that Government production was over 23 percent cheaper than private production. Material costing the Government $100,000,000 when bought from private companies would cost it only $77,000,000 when made in the arsenals. The difference is probably much greater now.

In 1928 the private ammunition companies persuaded the Frankford Arsenal to add to its costs all items which private companies have to add, including interest, taxes, and profits. After that was done the companies compiled their own cost figures for the manufacture of the standard Army 30.06 cartridge. The results showed Frankford's costs, including the items it does not actually have to pay, to be $23.18; Peters', $29 21; Remington's, $28.88; Winchester's, $31.67; Western's, $33.87. This comparison is especially interesting because it was made by the private companies themselves, who refused to show it to Frankford when it was completed.

The big customer of the Du Ponts for powder is the Army. In recent years it has been selling the Army over 2,000,000 pounds of powder annually, and has even been selling some to the Navy, which has its own powder plant. It has been making the Army pay to keep Du Ponts ready to work for it during a war. The company's own unchecked figures show that in 1931 they made 39-percent profit on the cost of powder sold to the Government. In 1932 it was 34.8 percent, and in 1933, 35 percent.

In spite of the fact that it is cheaper to make powder for big orders than for smaller ones, the company does not always give the Army the lowest prices. In 1932 it was offering a certain type of rifle powder to England for 54.5 cents and to Belgium for 57.6 cents, although it was charging the Army 71 cents for the same kind of powder. The agent who was offering such prices to foreign countries was, in fact, rebuked by his superiors, who said, "We cannot take the chance of this reduced figure being divulged." They told the agent that "you must arrange some plan in submitting your proposals so that you will be absolutely satisfied that the prices quoted will be regarded with the utmost secrecy." If he couldn't guarantee secrecy of the fact that the prices were so much below what our own War Department was being charged, he was advised not to quote. There was no statement that there would be a loss at the lower prices.

While any good accountant can make a high profit look like a low one, there is enough evidence available to indicate that Government production of munitions is about the only way to protect the taxpayers' pocketbook. The munitions companies are holding up the Government for almost all that they can get.

In the debate concerning Government production of munitions, of which we will hear more in the coming years, the principle of private ownership or of public ownership is not so much involved as in debates concerning power or railroads. The power of the Nation to provide for its national defense is absolute. Moreover it has already accepted the principle of producing munitions itself. Not only our own military services but those in most other large nations own their war facilities. We build half our ships in navy yards, manufacture our own field and naval guns, rifles, ammunition, powder for the Navy, part of the projectiles. The question is not one concerning the principle of governmental production; it is one concerning the advantage or disadvantage of it, in peacetime as well as in wartime.

A second reason for establishing it, is the desire to prevent militarism from growing up in this country as it did in Germany through an alliance of the munitions makers with the Army and Navy. This has been mentioned in the previous chapter. The munitions suppliers would be kept from imposing themselves on the Army and Navy for various favors. The Army and Navy, instead of having to wait for private plans for ships, or until the latest machine-guns or airplanes had been sold abroad, could have control of those matters themselves. They would be masters in their own house, instead of being forced to entertain tenants because those tenants say they are essential when war comes.

A third reason for establishing Government production of all munitions is that there would no longer be any pressure from private munitions companies to sell new inventions and military secrets abroad. This has been mentioned in chapter IV. At the moment, almost all manufacturers of new inventions patent them abroad in order that they may be protected from private manufacture of those inventions abroad. Actually this practice lets every government know the details of every new device. The danger that other munitions makers will make money by manufacturing without the formality of paying for a license is an excuse for letting every other government know what our best brains have developed. Communism of military secrets is the price of private profit. Of course, in a war, the government of every nation will pay no attention to these patents, and will take what it needs. It may even do so before a war begins, and a patent suit against a foreign government, tried in foreign courts, is no way to make money or protect inventions.

A fourth reason for governmental production is that the munitions companies hold up the Government for high prices in time of war as well as in time of peace. In time of war the Government needs them even more badly than it needed the private shipbuilders in 1933 and 1934, when cruiser prices were almost doubled. The Government wants to win the war. It needs munitions. Price is no object. The Government has few munitions factories of its own as yardsticks. It pays whatever the private manufacturers ask it to pay. Later, when the war is over, the taxpayers get around to paying the extra taxes because the munition makers were able to hold up the Government.

The story of what happened during the war is too well known now for more than a few illustrations. Midvale Steel & Ordnance (not the present Midvale Co.) files showed by company figures that the Government had paid $580 for 14-inch shells on which the cost was $300 and the profit $280, or 93 percent. Shells for 12-inch guns cost $230 and were sold to the Government for $380, a profit of 65 percent. Shells for 16-inch guns cost $551 and were sold to the Government for $900, a profit of 63 percent.

While this was going on Midvale Steel and Ordnance was telling the Government that pig iron cost it $75, when the actual cost was $51.29. They made their huge profits on the basis of that misrepresentation.

Take another case, showing the power to hold up the Government in time of war. In the fall of 1917, while the boys were being drafted, the War Department found that there was a desperate need for a huge additional powder factory. It went to the Du Ponts, who controlled about nine-tenths of the Nation's powder production, for help. It offered them liberal terms to direct the building of the plant. It offered to pay every dollar expense, to advance a million dollars on account of profit, and to have the profit go to arbitration.

But Du Ponts wanted the Government to pay more for their skill and ability. Pierre du Pont, then president, wrote that "we cannot assent to allowing our own patriotism to interfere with our duties as trustees" for the stockholders. He was one of the 10 largest stockholders at the time.

The Government threatened to build the plant itself, but it did not have the expert knowledge. Finally a contract satisfactory to the Du Ponts was given, but not until after the plant had been held up for over 3 months at a very critical time in the war. It would have made $15,000,000 a year for the Du Ponts if the war had gone on longer.

What would have happened to one of the drafted soldiers who could not assent to letting his own patriotism interfere with his duties as trustee for his family and children and had refused to go to the front, is another story. The War Department handed the company certificates of good conduct.

It would be an error to limit this custom of insisting upon what you wanted and making the Government pay for it to the munitions companies. It was so much a general wartime custom that the Munitions Committee described it as a "strike of capital."

Take Aluminum Co. of America, a Mellon organization. In the midst of the shooting it quietly approached the Government for a price of 32 cents a pound for its aluminum. That was an important war material. It asked for the increase in price partly on the ground that it was building additional plants which would be useful only during wartime and would be useless thereafter. At the time, the company said its costs were 17½ cents a pound, and the Government said they were 15½ cents. Yet it got what it wanted.

That wasn't enough. Later the company induced the Government to deduct $10,650,000 from its income on the ground that it had built wartime plants which it wasn't going to use in peacetime when production dropped off. That was getting paid twice for the same thing.

Then, on top of everything, it produced even more aluminum after the war than it did before or during it. It was paid twice for something it had no right to receive any payment for.

Much sinister, high-powered stff was worked against the Government and the taxpayers during the war, and the taxpayers are still paying for it.

The thought that there would be a little less of this if the Government produced its own munitions is another reason for Government production.

A fifth argument for it is that attempts to regulate and limit profits of private munitions companies, even in peacetime, are practically futile.

After investigating this matter the Munitions Committee made this finding: "The failure of the Navy Department to turn the navy yards into effective yardsticks by which the charges of private shipyards could be measured and kept down, has resulted in leaving the profits of shipbuilders practically uncontrolled.

"The committee finds that the Vinson-Trammell bill of 1934, limiting profits to 11.1 percent of cost, cannot be enforced without a huge police force of accountants, and that disputes concerning its interpretation, similar to those which delayed the payment of wartime taxes by the companies for 12 years, may confidently be expected.

"The committee finds that the Navy, which has no responsibility for enforcing the act, and which has no reliable figures about private costs, is in a position to allow—and according to one company has actually allowed—increased overhead charges, which can invalidate the whole attempt by Congress to limit profits. The committee notes that it was by the allowance of such theoretical overheads during the war years above actual overheads that the New York Shipbuilding Corporation was paid $2,152,976 more by the Government than it actually paid out itself.

"The committee finds that the shipbuilding industry and its subcontractors and suppliers have united in efforts to find ways to avoid the incidence of this law, and that Mr. Gillmore, president of Sperry Gyroscope, Navy suppliers, told them, 'If the shipbuilders, boiler manufacturers, and electrical manufacturers act in accordance with uniform rules, it will be so strong I think the Income Tax Bureau will have a hard time resisting it.' "

Any good accountant can work out a system of theoretical increases in costs on military work which it would take many scores of accountants many months to disprove. The Government does not have those scores of accountants working on attempts to prevent evasion of the profit-limitation law.

Another danger is that the high peacetime profits will be used to justify high wartime profits. The precedent for this has been set by a master in a case of the United States v. Bethlehem Steel. In this case Bethlehem was charged with fraud on certain ships it built for the Emergency Fleet Corporation, and the Government made the point that if the steel company were allowed to escape unpunished it would be a bad precedent for any future war. The master, giving an opinion in favor of Bethlehem, pointed to the high profits made on the 1927 and 1929 cruisers, cited above in chapter III, and said if such high profits were allowed in peacetime, obviously war profits which were less were quite allowable.

Following that logic, every minute that private munitions companies stay in the business in peacetime and run up the high profits they are now making will cost the Government millions in wartime. High profits taxes cannot touch profits which are concealed by unusual overheads, amortization allowances, and similar items if approved by the Navy in peacetime.

A sixth argument for Government operation is that it will end, to a large extent, American participation in the corruption of foreign officials, and will also end the incentive of munitions companies in America to discourage disarmament conferences, arms-control pacts and the like. The munitions peddlers will have to get some less dangerous kind of work. Life insurance is hereby suggested to them. The need for a cessation of their foreign activities has been touched on in chapters II and IV.

An astonishing discovery made by the Munitions Committee was that the cost of a plant sufficient to extend Government production of munitions into most of the combat weapons was relatively little.

For 7 months engineers of the Interstate Commerce Commission worked on this problem for the committee, and finally reported that the cost of building enough additional navy yards to let the Government build all the ships it needed, not for normal need, but for a naval race, was only $23,600,000. This figure included $6,000,000 for necessary new machinery. This figure, about the cost of one cruiser complete with armament, would provide the Navy with enough ways and machinery to enter into a considerable naval race. If such a race were not entered, the ways would still be available as a war reserve. The figure does not include the purchase of any private yard facilities.

Mr. Charles H. Spencer, Chief Valuation Engineer of the Interstate Commerce Commission, who was in charge of the study, stated that the new machinery would pay for itself very rapidly. In fact, it can be calculated that, with an average cruiser saving of $2,000,000 on a private cost of $12,000,000, the whole cost of the additional facilities might be paid for in the savings on $144,000,000 worth of work, or in a year or 2 years' time, with the present program.

The Commission engineers reported that the cost of a new machine-gun plant would be $8,800,000. A large airplane and airplane engine plant and field would cost $8,450,000. A new powder plant for the Army would cost $3,640,000.

Certain steel company figures indicate that a projectile plant might cost $7,000,000. The Government's armor-plate plant might be put into shape for less than $4,000,000. For $55,000,000 the Government would have enough to cover a great many of its needs in peacetime, including about a fourth of its airplanes and half its airplane engines, and facilities to step up a considerable amount of production in wartime.

There has never been any intent to have the Government go into the production of food and other supplies for the Quartermaster Corps. The discussion is limited to combat weapons, including warships.

No plan for Government production of combat munitions can begin to cover all the munitions needed in wartime without running into hundreds of millions of dollars, and in peacetime that is a big figure. In wartime, hundreds of millions can be thrown away fast, as the work on the Liberty engines for airplanes demonstrated. The plans being discussed in Congress are for the Government to produce in its own arsenals and yards what it needs in peacetime and to do what it did in 1917, expand into private plants of all kinds in wartime.

One objection to Government production is that the Government might find it harder to expand from an arsenal into a general manufacturing plant, such as Westinghouse or General Electric, than a private company, say Bethlehem Steel, might do. There is no question both would encounter some delay, but it would be the same kind of delay in both cases. Either Bethlehem or the Government arsenal would have to see that Westinghouse was tooled up to machine shells or whatever the job might be. There is no particular reason to believe that the Government could persuade General Electric to work on the shells less effectively than Bethlehem could persuade them.

Another objection made is that the workers in the Government plants would have political influence enough to keep the plants going although there was no need for the munitions. If that is so, then it means we will be overarming, which is not a peaceful policy. The answer is in a question of fact. Are the Army and Navy oversupplied with those things which the arsenals and navy yards produce? None of the services report themselves overloaded with anything. It is also hard to think of a few workers in any one place having one-tenth as much influence as all the munitions companies, who are united for the sake of bigger and more profitable orders and no nonsense in wartime about profit limitation.

Another objection is that the Army and Navy do not like to take on the responsibility of manufacturing munitions because they have not trained men for that purpose. That may well be true, although the commandants of the navy yards and the officers of the arsenals seem to give efficient service to the country. It may, however, be necessary for the services to employ civilian chemists and engineers and perhaps managers for new production until they have trained officers who can take over the duties of managers.

It might save the Government a great deal of money to take over the operating personnel of some of the munitions concerns, the executives (other than the sales managers), the engineers, and chemists, and designers. Take Newport News Shipbuilding Co. as an example. The know-how of the shipbuilding is in the heads of about 20 men. Their combined salaries in 1 year would not exceed $300,000, and would probably be less. At present they work for the Huntington family, absentee owners who have little interest in the business and no expert knowledge of it. The actual operators of the plant have done some amazing things to make amazing profits for that family. They are running a constant dog fight with the Government for more profits, more allowances, less taxes, less responsibility. Yet each and every one of the 20 men in those offices at Newport News would probably die for his country as gladly as the next man. It is simply the fate of munitions men not to be called upon to do this. They are considered too valuable to be sent into the firing lines.

These men could be more patriotic in the Government service than they are, in the nature of things, allowed to be in private employment. They would side with the Government in trying to get the most defense for the money instead of fighting the Government to get the most money for the Huntingtons.

The navy yards building against Newport News and other private companies can save the Government about the profit Newport News makes on a cruiser, around $2,000,000. If these 20 men were in the navy yards, using the same labor, the Government might produce ships at an even greater saving than now, and still pay these men their present salaries, and provide them with normal promotions.

The same thing might apply to some of the other munitions companies. Some of the officers on the stand practically blushed as the story came out of the bribery and pressure their subordinate officials had used to get business. Some of them would doubtless be glad to work for the Government, if they were given responsibility and a reasonable freedom from red tape. The guess is offered that they do not all enjoy the process of fleecing the Government.

A seventh and final argument for Government production is the fact that it would keep arms out of the hands of the underworld and ambitious Fascist leaders. At present there are too many companies peddling arms to the population, submachine guns, gas, reconditioned machine guns, weapons useful in the hands of American Hitlerites. Munitions companies reported that many American submachine guns were getting to Hitler when the Nazis were still fighting in the streets for power. The power to make weapons which may some day be used against the state should certainly be confined to the state.

The case for Government production of almost all the combat weapons except those precision instruments where engineering developments have become concentrated in a few minds, and perhaps some part of airplane development, is almost overwhelming.

In spite of this fact it is not improbable that the Army and Navy high officials will oppose it for years. It has been a long tradition with them to pay a high price to keep the private companies in business, ready for the next war. The proposal for extension of Government production of munitions into the remaining private fields would mean that they would have to pay for the brains of those companies instead of for their brains plus their plant. The proposal really is that it is better to have those brains with the Government than engaged in devising means of getting more money out of the Government.

From another angle, the general public will be less worried about the size of the huge Army and Navy appropriations which have been going through in recent years if it doesn't have a lingering suspicion that each appropriation bill has had a half hundred mute, inglorious Shearers smoothing the ways for it.

[From the American Federationist for October 1940]

DOLLARS vs. DEFENSE

Billions for defense. Steel, aircraft, shipbuilding. Guns, munitions, and explosives. Airplanes and engines. Ships, turbines, and armor plate. Tanks and trucks. Powder and bullets. One appropriation after another is sped through Congress. Thoughts of economy are thrust aside. The Nation is mobilizing its every resource in a single effort for a single purpose—defense.

Decision follows decision and is translated into action. National Guard called into service. Conscription: Hundreds of thousands of men to be called to the colors each year for 5 years. Personal plans shattered? Careers interrupted? Families broken up? Yes; but what of it? America is arming for defense. The defense must be impregnable. Democracy must be protected against all threats. It is the one thing that matters above all else.

May, June, July, August, September. For 5 months the American people intensely and feverishly devoted themselves to the most urgent task of their generation. Time was most important and, therefore, speed most vital.

Everyone knew that. Everyone knew also that the first and foremost requirement in modern defense was to produce and to make available supplies and equipment with which defenses were to be reared.

Yet at the end of 5 months much of our production and distribution machinery was paralyzed by relative inactivity. Earnestly determined to act, industry seemed to be slowed down, its activity palsied.

Although $2,000,000,000 in defense orders were given clearance, contracts awarded, loan agreements negotiated and approved, most of this production was still on paper, not yet translated into real action in mills, plants, shops.

Of the $2,000,000,000 of cleared defense orders, only a third—$670,000,000—was shown in the cash flow from May through August which reflected defense production actually "working."

What was the trouble? The slowdown in our defense orders could not be charged to delays of bureaucracy or red tape. Punctilious procedural rules and exacting record-keeping requirements were swept aside and short cuts taken to avoid every circuit of action which appeared too long.

Was it because the Government was high-handed and arbitrary with business and industry? No. The Defense Commission and the President had met about every condition and agreed to every demand made by industry since the defense program was launched.

Was labor the bottleneck? No. Labor cooperated from the start, and no delays had been charged either to labor disputes or to labor shortages.

What happened was that in many lines of production which served as keys to defense, industry refused to move until it would receive full assurance of clear and unimpaired profit without risk.

Ships and armor plate? The Newport News Shipbuilding Co. had not been able to procure armor plate when it was scheduled to be ready. As the result the aircraft carrier Hornet had to be launched without its armor plate. This was due to the refusal of United States Steel and Midvale Steel to do business with the Navy under the existing profit limitation.

Powder and explosives? Well, perhaps, but only on pretty definite conditions. In the case of Du Pont de Nemours the condition was that the Government would build $20,000,000 worth of new powder plants for which the public would pay and which Du Pont would operate.

Airplanes? The Boeing Aircraft Corporation refused to sign a $32,000,000 contract for four-engined bombers until it could be quite sure that Congress would pass profit legislation which suited it.

As reported by the Associated Press: "One of the major obstacles is that the Boeing officials are unwilling to undertake a large plant expansion. * * * The exact amount of the ultimate contract cannot be determined pending final adjustment for amortization, tax, and profits purposes."

HARD BARGAIN DRIVEN

The Packard Co. would be willing to produce 9,000 Rolls-Royce Merlin motors but only if the Government would let it have $30,000,000 for a plant plus guaranteed profits on the subsequent output. That was a hard bargain, but the Defense Commission agreed to it. Even then, Packard, in line with other defense manufacturers, preferred to wait until Congress had approved the amortization and excess-profits legislation demanded by industry.

Curtiss-Wright, Pratt & Whitney, and Douglas Aircraft were also among the companies which were willing to do their part for national defense, but only as, if, and when they could do it on their own terms.

A high pace was set by some of these companies, but not so much in terms of actual production as in terms of jockeying for the position of greatest advantage.

Curtiss-Wright was one of the companies that went off to an early start in the race for defense profits. While Curtiss-Wright's manufacturing facilities were valued at only $18,291,000 at the beginning of 1940 the company completed successful negotiations for R. F. C. loans amounting to $92,000,000 to be used in the construction of plants for the manufacture of airplane engines.

With this public money the Wright Aeronautical Corporation was to construct a plant in Cincinnati with capacity to produce 12,000 air-cooled radial engines a year and a new assembly plant. The condition was that these two plants would be amortized in 8 years.

The Government was to provide the Wright company with enough engine contracts to repay the loan within the 8-year period. At that time the company would either have a cost-free plant or it could sell the plant back to the Government, in which case the Government would pay for the plant twice.

If the company failed to repay the loan under the terms of the contract, the Government would have no recourse against the company other than to take over the plant for which it had paid anyhow.

According to the Wall Street Journal, the cost of the proposed plant and its equipment was to be not more than $38,000,000. When queried by this newspaper about the "apparent discrepancy" between this cost and the amount of the loan, the Federal Loan Administrator, Jesse Jones, said that it would not "be in the public interest" to make the answer known.

In the meantime, Curtiss-Wright's profits increased almost 100 percent for 1940 over 1939 and by June 30 it had $248,668,000 of unfilled orders on its books.

In the light of these facts it is startling to note that some of the aircraft plants were operating at as low as 40-percent capacity as late as August and that the bulk of the defense aviation contracts were still in a log jam.

Industry's slow-down strike meant that the protection of armed wings against the sky raider would be delayed by months. It also meant that industry would get the asking price for the implements of defense and keep the profit, no matter how large.

What were the conditions demanded by industry as its price for helping the Government in the defense of the Nation? They were (1) amortization of new plants and equipment needed for defense production, and (2) profits-tax legislation which would leave the bulk of defense profits intact.

The demand for amortization simply called for an arrangement whereby companies building new plants or installing new equipment would be allowed to amortize these additions—or deduct their cost from tax-free earnings—within 5 years.

In other words, each year one-fifth of the cost of new plant and equipment could be deducted by defense producers from their income, before arriving at the net income on which excess-profits taxes as well as income taxes must be paid.

At the end of 5 years the plants would be completely paid off with the money received from the Government for defense orders and owned by the company outright for the company's own future production or available for resale to the Government if the Government were willing to pay twice for the same plant.

INDUSTRY DEMANDS A LAW

Although the plan obviously did not protect the public interest, speed was of the essence and the amortization policy was fully agreed to by the administration on July 10. Contrary to the administration's hopes, however, this acquiescence to industry's demands failed to produce the desired results.

What industry now demanded was legislation duly enacted by Congress, printed in black and white, and signed by the President on the dotted line. The minimum demand for settlement was an excess-profits-tax law satisfactory to industry. Until the passage of such law was fully assured, industry was determined to continue its slow-down strike.

Much of the World War profiteering was made possible by placing orders through directly negotiated contracts on the basis of cost plus a specified percentage of profit. In 1934 Congress placed a profit limit on plane and ship contracts of 12 and 10 percent, respectively.

When the Senate Naval Affairs Committee, on June 18, discovered that the Navy had let $1,000,000,000 worth of shipbuilding contracts without competitive bidding on the old basis of cost plus 10 percent, Congress acted quickly and by the "Navy Speed-Up Act" of June 28 reduced the profit limitation to 8 percent on the cost of competitively bid contracts and 7 percent on those negotiated privately.

With the new tax law on the books, the tax legislation had reached a patchwork stage and was clearly inequitable. The profits were limited only on contracts for naval vessels and airplanes, reaching the contractors as well as subcontractors, but placing no limit on profits derived from other defense contracts.

Thus, a gun manufacturer had no profit limitation on a contract for the Army but had to submit to an 8-percent profit limit to be able to deliver the same gun to the Navy.

This was bad business for the Government as well as industry, because clearly the manufacturer would prefer to devote all his attention to Army guns, and find the prospects of naval contracts to be dull and unexciting by comparison.

SEEK REPEAL OF PROFIT LIMITS

Finding this situation advantageous, industry began to press for outright repeal of profit limits on planes and ships. Having received some backing from the Defense Commission as well as the War and Navy Departments, industry was given encouragement by the House, which wrote the repeal of the 8- and 7-percent profit limitation into its version of the excess-profits-tax bill.

But the last round of the fight remained to be won on the provisions of the excess-profits-tax bill itself.

The profits-tax issue was joined in H. R. 10413, the second revenue bill of 1940, drafted by the House Ways and Means Committee and passed by the House under a gag-rule procedure on August 29.

As reported by the House, the bill contained three major provisions: (1) It suspended the 8 and 7 percent profit limitations of the Vinson-Trammell Act applicable to aircraft and naval contracts; (2) it gave statutory sanction to industry's 5-year amortization proposals; and (3) it provided for a corporate excess-profits tax, allowing two methods of exemption from the tax which the taxpayer could choose to his advantage.

The bill imposed an excess-profits tax on current profits which are over and above an exemption provided in the bill.

A corporation subject to the tax may take as its exemption (1) the amount of its average profits for the years 1936–39 or (2) a percentage figured on the basis of invested capital by means of a complex formula.

The Senate Finance Committee modified and simplified the methods of calculating the allowed exemptions, but left open to industry the choice of submitting to the least burdensome taxation.

The bill was reported to the Senate on September 12 with this alternative choice, which, in the apt language of Senator LA FOLLETTE, gives to all corporations subject to the excess-profits tax a heads-they-win, tails-the-Treasury-loses proposition.

The Senate committee also increased the regular corporation tax by 3⅒ percent, making this applicable to all corporate incomes regardless of the size or nature of the business and regardless of the source or rate of the profits. As reported by the Senate committee, the bill largely reflected the wishes of big business.

Under its provisions, the large, prosperous corporation which consistently earns substantial profits and is most able to pay an excess-profits tax would pay little or nothing in excess taxes. Under the average-earnings method of the bill such a corporation could continue to earn 50, 100, or 1,000 percent on the invested capital without paying any additional tax on such profits.

At the same time competitors of the prosperous, established corporations would be heavily penalized by the inequitable incidence of the proposed tax. Most important of all, the proposal failed to meet the test proposed by the President in his message to Congress on July 1, when he urged Congress to enact an excess-profits tax bill to help pay for the defense program because "it is our duty to see that the burden is equitably distributed according to ability to pay, so that a few do not gain from the sacrifices of the many."

By failing to place a ceiling upon excess profits the bill failed in its purpose as a taxation measure, but apparently met the wishes of the defense contractors.

It was well-nigh miraculous to see the tax bill clear the hurdle of the Senate committee on September 11, and to find contracts long tied up in negotiations suddenly move with such speed that the War Department alone was able to announce the award and clearance of contracts for 6,800 planes by September 16.

Defense industries are entitled to a fair and equitable return on their investment incidental to defense production. They would be justified in seeking a measure of protection for expanded plants and added equipment against the risk of disuse and bankruptcy when the emergency is over. But when the whole Nation is called upon to make sacrifices, these sacrifices must be shared epually by all.

Our Government would be derelict in its duty to the American people if it wrote a rule of special privilege into our national-defense policy and into our national laws.

By yielding to speculative pressures of those who would profit from the threat of common disaster facing our entire Nation, our Government would be betraying the public interest and serving to deepen the economic inequalities, opening a way for the ultimate destruction of the system in which the American people have firm faith.

LEHMAN FAVORS INVOLVEMENT

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, again I say, "Governor Lehman, when you were going through New York making these speeches for conscription, for aid to Great Britain, and when you were in Chicago trying to get the Democratic platform changed"—

I stop there. Many of my hearers did not know it, but they may have seen in the paper that Governor Lehman was in Chicago in connection with the foreign-affairs plank. Why? To get stricken out of the platform anything which would stop America from being involved in the war.

"Governor Lehman, I would like to know, when you were doing those things, if you did not know that the Lehman Corporation, owned and controlled by your family, was making hundreds of thousands and maybe millions of dollars out of defense contracts. Was your patriotism spelled 'p-a-y-t-r-i-o-t-i-s-m' or was it 'p-a-t-r-i-o-t-i-s-m'? Time will record, and your good strong right arm will be shown to be a good strong right arm grabbing contracts, and sticking that arm into the pocketbook of its country."

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD following my remarks certain exhibits.

There being no objection, the matters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On October 4, 1940, there appeared in the newspapers a summary of the Army and Navy plane contracts. These showed only the contracts awarded from July 1, 1940. Note the corporations and then refer to the ownership of the stock in these companies by the individuals mentioned in speech:

A summary of Army plane orders, totaling $928,374,073, since July 1 showed that the business went to 17 concerns:

Aviation Manufacturing Corporation, Stinson Aircraft division, Nashville, Tenn., $527,517; Cessna Aircraft Co., Wichita, Kans., $900,378; North American Aviation, Inc., Inglewood, Calif., $84,192,680; Fairchild Engine and Airplane Corporation, Hagerstown, Md., $7,710,500; Consolidated Aircraft Corporation, San Diego, Calif., $100,661,342; Beech Aircraft Corporation, Wichita, Kans, $21,373,101; Stearman Aircraft Division, Boeing Airplane Co., Wichita, Kans., $8,976,043; Ryan Aeronautical Corporation, San Diego, Calif., $7,429,321; Vultee Aircraft, Inc., Downey, Calif, $36,983,415; Lockheed Aircraft Co., Burbank, Calif., $45,925,237; Boeing Aircraft Co., Seattle, Wash., $130,212,805; Bell Aircraft Corporation, Buffalo, N. Y., $19,896,668; Republic Aviation Corporation, Farmingdale, N. Y., $56,499,924; Glenn L. Martin Co., Baltimore, Md., $113,911,526; Douglas Aircraft Co., Inc., Santa Monica, Calif., $199,011,915; Curtiss-Wright Corporation, Buffalo, N. Y., $48,514,891.

AIRCRAFT ENGINES

During the same period, the Army bought $75,492,958 of aircraft engines from three concerns: Wright Aeronautical Corp., Paterson, N. J., $8,277,416; Packard Motor Car Co., Detroit, $62,448,000, and Continental Motors Corp., Muskegon, Mich., $4,727,542.

The Navy's plane program shows $262,353,172 of orders for aircraft and engines, including the $38,551,966 contracted for prior to July 1. The $75,129,763 of orders for planes went to: Spartan Airplane Co., Tulsa, Okla, $1,859,880; Stearman, $3,779,628; Naval Aircraft Factory, Philadelphia, $6,759,042; Consolidated, $20,016,699; Grumman Aircraft Engineering Co., New York, $10,584,240; Lockheed, $290,179; North American, $1,134,504; Curtiss-Wright, Buffalo, $12,598,528; Douglas, $12,743,672; Beech, $324,775, and Vought-Sikorsky Aircraft Co., New York, $324,775.

The Navy's $187,223,409 for engines went to: Continental, $1,442,272; Lycoming Motor Co., $1,527,084; Ranger Engine Corporation, $5,437,960; Wright, $2,457,060, and Pratt & Whitney, of United Aircraft Corporation, Hartford, Conn., $172,993,590.

On August 21, 1940, the Investors Service showed this interesting information on unfilled orders of certain aircraft companies: Consolidated Aircraft, $111,000,000; Douglas Aircraft, $135,000,000; Lockheed Aircraft, $137,000,000; North American Aviation, $93,000,000.

CASKETS FOR WHOM, WHEN, AND WHERE

Quite by accident there slipped out the fact the other day that the United States Army is making a survey of the supply of caskets in the country and is checking up on the production facilities of casket manufacturers. This announcement did not come, of course, from the Army officers themselves. No, indeed. When the story of the survey was brought to them by newspapermen they tut-tutted it as of no moment whatever.

The fact came out at a meeting of the board of the Advertising Funeral Directors of America at the Hotel Mayflower in the Nation's Capital. Maj. A. Robert Ginsburgh in the Office of Assistant Secretary of War was asked about it. Major Ginsburgh has long had the role in the Army of handling ticklish and embarrassing problems with the press. When Patrick Hurley was Secretary of War back in the dim distant Herbert Hoover days it was Major Ginsburgh who skillfully wove the Irish wit into Pat Hurley's speeches for which they became famous. Discovery of that service by Major Ginsburgh to the debonair Irishman, Mr. Hurley, caused many a chuckle in official circles but the major came through the kidding unscathed.

So, when a newsman was directed to him on the casket-survey story, Major Ginsburgh was equal to the occasion. "Why," said the Major as reported in the Washington News of September 20, "we haven't stopped surveying the casket industry for 20 years. It is just part of our routine survey of Army necessities. We have surveyed caskets as we have artillery, airplanes, and other materials of war."

Then, apparently realizing the reporter was not falling for that line, the facile officer moved a little closer to the actualities of the situation. "After all," he said, "if you have 1,000,000 men under arms, even in peacetime you are going to have some casualties; some men are going to fall off trucks and have other accidents and illnesses." Enough fall off trucks to warrant a survey of the casket supply, Major? Surely now, Major, you don't expect us to swallow that one, do you?

Pressed in this manner, Major Ginsburgh finally popped out the truth. "Then, too," he admitted, "when you have an army you have to figure that it's going to fight some day. Fighting means casualties, and casualties call for caskets. That's all there is to it. Just simple matter of being prepared with essentials. We survey everything from armor plate to underwear." So there it is, perfectly simple, as the major says—"when you have an army you have to figure that it's going to fight some day." That's the whole military philosophy in a nutshell. That's one of the basic reasons why labor—C. I. O., brotherhoods, and most of A. F. of L.—was so earnestly opposed to the setting up of a conscript army—that and the fact that no substantial evidence has ever been presented of possibilities of military invasion of this country.

What labor and the common people of the land want to know is where and when the Army officers expect this big conscription army to fight. There have been solemn assurances from the President that no American soldier will be sent to European soil to fight. These assurances have been repeated often in Congress. Then, where? Latin America? The Orient? Labor has grounds to be worried and should keep asking questions and insisting on answers.

PROPOSED RECESS ARRANGEMENT

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado obtained the floor.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado be courteous enough to yield to me for just a moment so that I may propound an inquiry to the able Senator from Kentucky regarding what he intends to do during the remainder of the week?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it is my purpose to move to adjourn until Friday, and then to adjourn until Monday, and then from then on until the end of the period which has been discussed today, adjourn every 3 days from Monday to Thursday, and from Thursday until the following Monday, which is customary.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I may say that I read the colloquy between the able leader and the able assistant minority leader [Mr. AUSTIN], and there has been no agreement reached at any time. I am not in accord with the position taken by the leader on the Democratic side. As I interpret his statement, while he would give notice to the minority party, or to the representative of the minority party, he, the majority leader, would be the sole judge as to whether there should be a return of the legislators to Washington, or, I may say, of the Senators to the Chamber. I would not want it to rest in that fashion. Conditions may arise, as I look across the Pacific, and they may occur earlier than we anticipate, and I think the minority should be represented with equal authority with the majority. While there was no agreement reached, from reading the colloquy I concluded that the whole matter would rest with the Senator from Kentucky. I think that is too much authority to give to one man, however able and fair he is, and I should object to that proposal. I think we ought to stay here now for a time without entering into any agreement. I shall be very happy to be coming back on Friday and again on Monday, but I would not consent on Monday to any agreement in the form in which it has been proposed. I think in fairness I should make that statement to the Senator. In the meantime we may, by discussion, come to some agreement.

Mr. BARKLEY. Apparently the minority leader does not agree with his delegated assistant.

Mr. McNARY. I think the Senator from Vermont is precisely in accord with my view, but I am speaking my own view, and that is the attitude I am taking.

Mr. BARKLEY. Very well, Mr. President. I have tried the best I could to enter into a gentleman's agreement as to our procedure in the near future. It had been my purpose, and it is my purpose now, to move to adjourn today until Friday. It was my purpose originally to move to adjourn until tomorrow in order that we might adjourn until Monday, and the change was made at the request of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN]. Instead of adjourning until tomorrow, we shall adjourn until Friday and then adjourn until Monday, and, following the understanding which I think we reached in the colloquy, adjourn every 3 days thereafter until the 18th of November, subject to certain exigencies that might arise. It is still my purpose to move to adjourn until Friday and then to move to adjourn until Monday, and then to move to adjourn until Thursday, and thereafter, unless some exigency arises, as suggested in the colloquy which at some length took place here this morning, to move to adjourn every 3 days.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the RECORD will speak for itself. My very able assistant [Mr. AUSTIN] can speak for himself. But as I read the RECORD a few moments ago when I entered the Chamber, there was no agreement entered into that I could see.

Mr. BARKLEY. There was no order entered on the Journal of the Senate with respect to any agreement. It was a gentleman's agreement, which is frequently entered into here, and which has been entered into from time immemorial.

I wish to say to the Senator from Oregon that I have no desire or intention to act in any arbitrary way in this matter.

Mr. McNARY. I appreciate that.

Mr. BARKLEY. I would not assume the responsibility of calling the Members of the Senate back to Washington under any emergency or exigency without conferring with the Senator from Oregon or his delegated assistant. Yet I will say frankly that I do not think the minority ought to be given the power to determine whether the Senate shall be called back for the consideration of measures.

Mr. McNARY. That is a splendid courtesy, but it is not coupled with sufficient authority resting and vested in the minority.

Mr. BARKLEY. What is the authority the Senator thinks the minority ought to have over the reconvening of the Senate?

Mr. McNARY. I think any considerable group, if in their judgment a situation existed that ought to receive the attention of Congress, should have the power to do so without reposing that power arbitrarily in one person. I think if I, as the minority leader, or if the able Senator from Vermont, as assistant leader, believed that conditions existed which required our presence in this Chamber we should have the authority to call the Senate back. I stand on that. That is my personal conviction.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think there is nothing I can add to what I have said on that subject.

Mr. McNARY. I shall be very happy to agree to having the Senate adjourn to Friday, and then again adjourn to Monday, but I am opposed to the proposition that a Senator, however fair or able he is, should have the sole authority to decide that the Senate should meet, after adjournment, on Monday next, and then adjourn every 3 days thereafter until November 18.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. I understand the Senator from Kentucky desires that an agreement be entered into that 3-day recesses shall be taken until the 18th of November, and that the Senator from Kentucky himself shall decide what legislation can be considered during this period.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator that there has been no formal order entered on the Journal of the Senate with respect to our procedure during this period, and it is not customary to have a formal entry on the Journal with respect to these 3-day recesses which we frequently take. It would be rather difficult to formulate an order.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator has a very different situation here now confronting him. He is attempting to adjourn for 6 weeks in the form of 3-day recesses under a gentlemen's agreement as to legislation to be considered, and I for one wish to voice my disapproval of that method, and to say that I, as an individual Senator, will not be a party to any gentlemen's agreement that may be arrived at giving to the Senator from Kentucky the sole power to determine what legislation can be considered between now and November 18.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from Virginia can pursue such course as to him seems wise, and as to him may seem to be his duty in that regard.

Mr. BYRD. I merely wanted to ask the question of the Senator because I wish clearly to understand the exact effect of his proposal when it is made. It is not a matter of record. It is proposed that it shall be a gentlemen's agreement.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is a matter of record in the discussion and colloquy which has occurred heretofore.

Mr. BYRD. If it is a matter of record, I want to have a vote on it.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is not a matter on which there can be a vote. Of course, the Senate cannot vote formally here on a matter of that sort.

Mr. BYRD. Does not the Senator appreciate that the Senate is making an important decision? Certainly the individual Senators ought to know the effect and purpose of what is being done, and I think we can vote definitely upon it.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I do not think it is a matter on which the Senate can vote formally upon a roll call, as to whether we shall meet every 3 days, and whether when we do meet every 3 days there shall be any business transacted.

Mr. BYRD. What can be done then? The Senator makes the statement that no business will be considered except such as he thinks should be considered? Is that an obligation upon the Senate?

Mr. BARKLEY. In the first place I have made no suggestion that no business should be considered except what I consider ought to be considered. I said that during this period, unless the Senate were called back because of some exigency, there would be no business transacted.

Mr. BYRD. Unless the Senator called us back. Now I asked the Senator the question and he said he was the one with this great power, and I assume that if any one Senator is selected, he should be the one. I am not willing to leave that to any one Senator. Please understand that I am not criticizing the Senator from Kentucky, for whom I have a great regard and admiration.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it is a very unpleasant thing for me to assume the responsibility of undertaking to call the Senate back here in case the Senate needed to be called back. But I suppose that it goes along with the position that I occupy, and it is regrettable, I suppose, that I am in that situation.

Mr. BYRD. Is it going to be the motion, or rather is it the purpose of the Senator, that no business is to be considered whatever unless he issues the call?

Mr. BARKLEY. No; the gentleman's agreement, which has always prevailed under similar circumstances would be that during these 3-day recesses no business should be transacted. On one occasion a formal order was made providing that no business should be transacted except the introduction of bills and the receipt of messages from the House, or from the President which, of course, had to be accepted and received and properly referred. But an order of that sort would be ironclad, and it would even prevent anyone from reconvening the Senate if an emergency should arise. For that reason it has seemed to me unwise to make an order on the Journal here recessing the Senate every 3 days until a given time.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator answer this question? Is the proposal that he will make the same that he made originally earlier in the day? Is there no change in it?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; it is substantially the same.

Mr. BYRD. I will say that I intend to vote against it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator there is not going to be a vote on it.

Mr. BYRD. I will ask for a quorum call.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator has the right to do that, and the Senator has the right to be here every 3 days from now on until the Senate is reconvened, and make a point of no quorum, and have a roll call to determine whether there is a quorum here, if the Senator wants to pursue that course.

Mr. BYRD.. I am only pursuing that course because the Senator persists in the proposal that he shall be the one to notify the Senate to reconvene to perform business and to consider some legislation which in his judgment is important.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; Mr. President, I assume no such thing. The thing we discussed this morning I think is thoroughly understood. It is an arrangement which has been frequently entered into.

If any Senator feels that the authority or responsibility I have assumed will be abused——

Mr. BYRD. Please understand that I do not assume that.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. There has been much talk about a gentlemen's agreement. I should like to know what the Senator from Kentucky understands by a gentlemen's agreement.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand that a gentlemen's agreement is an agreement entered into among gentlemen.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does the Senator mean to say that he would regard it as a violation of the so-called gentlemen's agreement—and, if so, I wish now to save my exception to the gentlemen's agreement—if at any time during the period between now and November 18 any Senator should conclude that an emergency had arisen requiring the presence of a quorum of the Senate, and should make the point of order of no quorum? That is what it really is. It is called a "suggestion" in the Senate, but it is really a point of order. If any Senator should suggest the absence of a quorum and force a quorum call, disclosing the absence of a quorum, and should then move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the presence of absent Senators, does the Senator think that would be a violation of the gentlemen's agreement?

Mr. BARKLEY. The question of whether or not any Senator has violated a gentlemen's agreement is a matter for the Senator himself to determine.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am merely trying to find out what the gentlemen's agreement is. I claim to be a gentleman, but I do not wish to enter into any agreement——

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not undertake in advance to pass upon whether or not any gentleman has violated a gentlemen's agreement.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Certainly a gentleman ought to know what a gentlemen's agreement is.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think I announced earlier in the day that neither I nor anyone else could prevent any Senator from making the point of no quorum if he should desire to make it, and that under those circumstances the only thing the Senate could do would be either to send for those absent or adjourn, which may always be done in the absence of a quorum.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. As I suggested to the Senator earlier, it is entirely possible that a Senator might make the point of no quorum, disclosing the absence of a quorum, which would make it impossible for the Senate to recess. It would then be possible only to adjourn. If such Senator should do the same thing at each succeeding meeting of the Senate, he would probably be able finally to obtain a quorum of the Senate, because most Senators who might be roaming around in their own constituencies would find it very uncomfortable to have that sort of procedure going on. What I wish to find out is whether or not, if such a situation should develop that any Senator should think a quorum ought to be present, the Senator from Kentucky considers that the Senator would be precluded from making the point of no quorum, which course is undoubtedly authorized under the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not interpret the arrangement into which I thought we had entered as precluding any Senator from making the point of no quorum, if he should see fit to do so.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That was my understanding. I merely wished to make it perfectly clear, because if there were any other implication in the understanding or gentlemen's agreement, I should not be able to agree to it.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. The Senator has just this moment put his finger on the crux of the whole discussion. He referred to the arrangement into which he thought we had entered. I submit that the RECORD will show that after the Senator from Kentucky had stated the proposal, he and the Senator from Vermont engaged in a colloquy lasting about 10 minutes, while they were undertaking to understand each other. Far from concluding an agreement, the Senator from Vermont, who is present in the Chamber at this moment, will tell the Senator from Kentucky that he did not enter into any agreement with the Senator from Kentucky; and there is no gentlemen's agreement.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from Vermont is able to speak for himself.

Mr. DANAHER. I call upon him to do so.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have not been informed that the Senator from Vermont has delegated the Senator from Connecticut to speak for him.

Mr. DANAHER. I call upon the Senator from Vermont to speak for himself.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, no agreement has been concluded. I have never assumed that I could conclude an agreement about this matter. All I could do was to clarify the proposal and have it interpreted, so that when the Senate should act upon it, whatever action should be taken should be based upon the proposal as interpreted and clarified by our colloquy.

Is not that the exact situation?

Mr. BARKLEY. I think the Senator has fairly stated the situation. I thought our colloquy had clarified it so that every Senator understood what to expect.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me it ought to be perfectly clear to every Member of the Senate that any Member of this body has the constitutional right to avail himself of the privilege of making the point of no quorum if he desires to take that course, gentlemen's agreement or no gentlemen's agreement. Even if every Senator present should enter into a gentlemen's agreement, and even though we should put that gentlemen's agreement on the Journal as a record of the Senate, it would not preclude any Senator, at any meeting of the Senate, from taking any course he desired to take—such, for instance, as making the point of no quorum. Such an agreement could not preclude the right of any Senator to do so. We have had such agreements before.

As I understand, a gentlemen's agreement would mean that we should agree to a certain course. Any Senator entering into the gentlemen's agreement might go back on it the next minute if he so desired. It is like a pair. We announce pairs, and let the RECORD show with whom we are paired, but neither the law nor the rules of the Senate recognize such a thing; and a Senator has a perfect right to make an agreement about a pair today, and violate it tomorrow if he wishes to do so.

It is apparent that we cannot make a gentlemen's agreement unless we can have an understanding that someone is to decide something when it comes up. So far as I personally am concerned, I do not care whether anyone is to decide it, or whether it is to be left undecided. We have certain rights which we cannot legally agree to set aside. It seems to me that it is all nonsense to continue this discussion in regard to an agreement which we have no constitutional right to make, and which, if we should make it, we could violate the next day if we so desired.

Under the circumstances, it seems to me that what we ought to do is to let the Senator from Kentucky or some other Senator make a motion to adjourn or a motion to recess. Then we may vote upon it. If we choose, we may vote it down, and not adjourn until 5 o'clock, and meet at 10 in the morning every day, if we have the votes to do so. We cannot agree that the constitutional procedure shall be abolished. It seems to me we are wasting time talking about such a proposal.

So far as I personally am concerned, I have never believed that it is necessary for the Senate to stay in session every day, or to meet every 3 days; but a majority of the Senate will determine that question. If the majority should vote the other way, no matter what I think of the action, I must abide by the result, and I shall do so cheerfully, even though it goes contrary to my own views as to what we ought to do.

I do not see any sense in staying here; but we are elected to stay here, and if the majority of the Senate shall vote to stay here every day, we must do so.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, during this whole colloquy I have never contended or suggested that any Senator was to be deprived of his constitutional rights. We all know that at any time any Senator has the right to make a point of no quorum and have a roll call to determine whether or not a quorum is present. I do not recall a single sentence which was uttered on my part or on the part of the Senator from Vermont which contemplated precluding the right of any Senator to make the point of no quorum.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not wish to be understood as finding fault with anything the Senator from Kentucky has said or anything the Senator from Vermont has said. I think there may be a difference of opinion about the matter; but if there is, we must go ahead in the usual way, as we do in connection with other matters.

Mr. BARKLEY. Furthermore, I wish to state that never at any time have I made the suggestion that I wanted to be the person charged with the responsibility of advising the Senate that it ought to come back. That suggestion was made to me by Senators who wanted some assurance that if an emergency should arise during the recess or adjournment of the Senate the Senate would be reconvened and a majority asked to come back to Washington.

Manifestly, under this sort of an arrangement the President could not call Congress back, because it would not be in adjournment or in recess. The Vice President would have no authority to call the Senate back into session. The proposed understanding was that if such a situation should arise that the Senate ought to be reconvened, some Member of the Senate should have some responsibility bearing on the subject to advise Senators that their presence is needed in Washington. I assured the Senator from Vermont that before taking such action I should consult either the Senator from Oregon or the Senator from Vermont, who is his very able assistant.

So far as I am concerned, if any Senator is better qualified than I to determine that matter after consultation, I am willing to designate any such Senator as the person to do it. Someone must do it if a situation should arise requiring the presence of the Senate. We cannot have a town meeting to determine whether or not such a situation shall have arisen. We cannot ask all Senators to come back to Washington to determine whether or not they ought to be here. Someone must have some judgment, discretion, and responsibility in the matter. If Senators do not wish me to assume that responsibility I am glad to yield it to anyone else who is better qualified.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I stated earlier in the afternoon that I would oppose the proposition made by the able Senator from Kentucky for the reason that it vested too much power in one person to determine, upon his own fiat, whether an emergency existed. I would consider it if the minority had an equal voice, but under the circumstances I said we had better adjourn until Friday, and then on Monday probably continue in that fashion.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish merely to state that I think every Member of the Senate understands the situation. It is not entirely devoid of politics, to be perfectly frank about it. It is my purpose, and Senators may govern themselves accordingly, to move to recess or adjourn until Friday; then, to move to adjourn until Monday; then to move to adjourn until Thursday, and on the following Thursday move to adjourn until the following Monday, and to proceed with that sort of course, unless some exigency arises that requires the presence of Senators. Based upon that suggestion, Senators are at liberty to pursue whatever course they desire to pursue in regard to the sessions of the Senate.

Mr. McNARY. I am glad to hear the Senator is now following my suggestion. We could have saved an hour if that had been the statement of the Senator from Kentucky at 2 o'clock. That is satisfactory. It will all depend upon the majority of the votes; if the Senator moves on Monday to adjourn until Thursday and a majority wants to meet again on Tuesday, that will be the order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Well, Mr. President, it is too bad the Senator from Oregon was not here at 2 o'clock instead of being away. I realize that the exigencies of the situation require his absence frequently from the Chamber now.

Mr. McNARY. Not so often.

Mr. BARKLEY. And I am glad to welcome him back to the Chamber so that he may register his objection to an arrangement which had previously been entered into by his designated assistant. But I only made the suggestion with respect to the responsibilities to which he now objects on the suggestion of members of the Senate from his own side of the Chamber.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I never like to carry on a running debate indefinitely, but I read the RECORD and there was no understanding entered into between the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from Vermont. The whole thing was nebulous, uncertain, without an ending place. When I read the RECORD, I repeat, with the greatest courtesy and affection for the able Senator from Kentucky, I reached the conclusion that too much power would rest in one man to determine what is an emergency during these emergent times.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I inquire if the Senate has concluded its business?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado still has the floor. He yielded for the colloquy which has taken place.

Mr. BARKLEY. It has been so long since he yielded I had forgotten about it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yielded temporarily.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado has the floor.

AVIATION CADETS IN REGULAR ARMY AIR CORPS

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, on September 16 last, after a long controversial debate, the Congress enacted the so-called Burke-Wadsworth peacetime conscription bill. Few pieces of legislation ever to come before the Congress have received the attention and interest that was accorded this legislation by the Congress and the people. While I was bitterly opposed to the principles upon which it was based, nevertheless I labored diligently day after day through many long weeks in committee in an effort to improve its provisions and make it more workable and more acceptable. I am certain that every member of the Senate Military Affairs Committee and every Member of Congress did his utmost to make it the best measure possible. On this floor on August 27 I pointed out many of its bad provisions and said that it gave us a miserable defense. The American people in time will be convinced of its utter futility. However, for the present, it is the law of the land and entitled to the support of every good citizen.

I desire to call attention now to another measure which passed the Senate by a unanimous vote on Monday, September 30. I refer to S. 4365, an act to create the grade of aviation cadet in the Air Corps of the Regular Army. It fell to my lot also to serve on the subcommittee of the Senate Military Affairs Committee whose duty it was to study and perfect this measure. For reasons which to me appear to be consistent, I find myself as enthusiastic in its support as I was in opposition to the Burke-Wadsworth bill.

When I opposed peacetime conscription, some of my constituents and friends pointed out that one should not oppose a program unless he had a better program to offer in its place. S. 4365 is my complete answer to that pertinent suggestion. The conscription bill is costing the Treasury a billion dollars a year, and will not give us one soldier skilled, trained, and capable of operating any one of our modern implements of war. On the other hand, S. 4365, at an estimated cost to the Treasury of $300,000,000 a year will give the United States 100,000 young, alert, skilled, and thoroughly trained aviators.

The Burke-Wadsworth Act represents a mossback approach to our military necessities. Twenty-five years ago a huge civilian army of foot soldiers meant great military strength, but the science of war has not stood still with the present head of our War Department; and today deadly machines of great speed and invincible power directed by a few men have replaced the big army. Modern warfare requires men of unusual skill and broad experience to operate her costly and complex machines of wholesale destruction. Progress is the most difficult thing to accept. Our reactionary Secretary of War apparently does not know it, but the bayonet is obsolete, and the Springfield rifle is on its way out. His conscripts, trained in the use of hand weapons once upon a time indispensable, will not stop a "blitzkrieg" of planes and tanks. The United States needs 100,000 first-class aviators and she does not need a million foot soldiers armed with Springfield rifles and bayonets.

This bill creates the grade of aviation cadet, and authorizes and directs the Secretary of War to establish and maintain schools for the instruction and training of aviation cadets. The cadet is to be paid a salary of $75 a month, plus a dollar a day for subsistence, and traveling expenses, while in training. He is furnished with quarters, medical care, hospitalization, his uniform, other clothing, and equipment. In addition, he is given a Government life-insurance policy in the amount of $10,000, upon which the premium is paid by the Government during the duration of his training, which will require from 6 to 9 months. After his period of training has been completed he is to be commissioned a second lieutenant in the Air Corps Reserve and automatically called to active service for a period of 7 years. While in active service he is to receive the regular pay and subsistence of a commissioned officer, and $150 clothing allowance in addition. As a commissioned officer his insurance continues if he elects to have it continue, but he must now pay the premium out of his salary. He is also paid a $500 bonus for each completed year of active service. This is in addition to any pay allowance, compensation, or benefit which he may otherwise be entitled to receive as a commissioned officer.

The opportunity to learn a useful vocation, the adequate compensation, and the promotion features of this bill will appeal to ambitious young Americans who do not relish the idea of serving in the Army for $21 or $30 a month, with no opportunity to learn anything useful. Ambitious young Americans want to learn to do important things. This modern vocational training, therefore, will prove very attractive to them, and will challenge their best efforts. I fear that the advocates of compulsory peacetime conscription completely underestimate the patriotism, courage, intelligence, daring, and especially the realistic ambition of our present-day youth.

Under this bill the Secretary of War is authorized to prescribe the regulations for the enlistment of male citizens of the United States as aviation cadets, and he may appoint enlisted men who are in the Regular Army as aviation cadets if they be otherwise qualified. The Secretary of War may at any time discharge an aviation cadet or relieve from active duty an aviation cadet holding a commission in the Air Corps Reserve, but the candidate, at the time of his appointment, must agree to serve at least 3 years on active duty, unless he is sooner relieved. After serving 3 years as a second lieutenant he will be promoted to the grade of first lieutenant, Air Corps Reserve, just as second lieutenants in the Regular Army are promoted.

I like this legislation because men enter it of their own free will and accord. They are not drafted or conscripted. In fact, there is no need for conscription, because there will be a thousand applications for every enlistment. The pay will be fairly good and the service attractive. Men have to be conscripted for bayonet service because the pay is low, and the service not attractive. Congress does not always keep in mind the realistic attitude of young America. Our young folks are not easily deceived. They are not afraid of anything and they are not gullible. They know what they want. They do not look with favor upon a year's waste of their time learning something that they do not want to learn. Anyone who has kept up with the science of war in these modern times should know the importance of aviation to the Military Establishment. Our young men know it. They understand its implications. They have a desire to have a part in it. They are challenged by its possibilities. There may be skeptics who will say that American youth will not voluntarily respond to an opportunity of this kind. As an indication and assurance that I am not too optimistic in my appraisal of what the youth of this country will do, may I give you some pertinent statistics? There were more than 50,000 applications in our colleges last year for elementary pilot training and we could only give 25,000 of these youths training because of a shortage of facilities. Give the young men of America a chance in keeping with their ideals and ideas and they will respond magnificently.

I am indebted to The Adjutant General of the Army for the general information concerning aviation and the operation of this measure, which I shall now give you. Portions of it will be quoted directly from a statement issued by him.

Aviation, both military and civil, has made tremendous strides in the 35 years since its beginning, and has developed to such an extent that it now offers splendid opportunities to the young man about to choose a career or profession.

The great advance in the science of flying is strikingly shown by the successful trans-Atlantic, trans-Pacific, pan-American, and world flights, and by the constantly increasing use of airplanes for commercial purposes. Air mail and the commercial air-lines require the services of a considerable number of pilots, engineers, and technical personnel; the design and construction of airplanes and their accessories require competent designers, craftsmen, mechanics, and the like. These positions pay good salaries, and the specialized positions require education and training equivalent to that essential for the learned professions.

The average individual in considering aviation is likely to think of what it has to offer the pilot. At present, air-line pilots receive an average of $600 a month, and the pay of co-pilots ranges between $190 and $350 a month. This phase of aviation is not only interesting but serves as excellent training for administrative and executive positions in the industry. Aviation leaders agree that the best foundation for the majority of positions in the field of aeronautics is thorough pilot training.

A young man who decides to follow aviation as his career, and who receives the benefits of Army Air Corps flying training, will find himself in a most favorable position to seek employment in civil life either in one of the many remunerative positions in the field of aviation itself, or with one of the growing number of commercial concerns which are becoming more and more interwoven, in one way or another, with this rapidly expanding industry.

The course of instruction for an aviation cadet will require approximately 9 months, including 3 months' elementary, 3 months' basic, and 3 months' advanced training. This instruction, in addition to the flying training, includes courses in navigation, meteorology, radio, and other subjects allied with military aviation.

Upon completion of the 3 months of elementary training, the aviation cadet will be sent to Randolph Field, Tex., for 3 months' additional instruction, and, upon graduation therefrom, will be sent to Kelly Field, Tex., for the final 3 months of training.

The course of training will include approximately 215 hours in the air, during which time the student will receive instruction in all maneuvers necessary to pilot military airplanes. In addition to the pilot training, the student will also pursue academic work in specialized military subjects.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I gladly yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. I understand the Senator is discussing now the training of aviation cadets?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is correct.

Mr. BRIDGES. I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Colorado in the training of cadets and bringing them into the Army whether he intends to provide they shall enter the service as captains or whether some of them will start below that rank, and, if so, why?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I will say to the Senator that under the provisions of the bill to which I have referred a boy who has had 2 years of college would enlist for 9 months of very intensive training. If, after the 9 months of intensive training, he has proved that he is qualified he is automatically made a second lieutenant in the Reserve Corps, and serves 3 years' active service in the Reserve Corps; then he is promoted to a first lieutenant in the Reserve Corps, and, after he has served his time as first lieutenant, he retires in the Reserve Corps. That is as far as his promotion goes. So he never reaches the grade of captain.

Mr. BRIDGES. How long would it take, under the Senator's plan, for a man who enlisted in the service to reach the rank of first lieutenant, which, as I understand is a grade below a captaincy? How long would it take him to reach the grade next below a captain, which some of us thought was the rank the men who were going to enlist would attain.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. He would have to have 2 years' college work, then it would take 9 months of intensive training; then, it would take 3 years as a second lieutenant; then, if he wanted to go on up, it would take him 7 years as a first lieutenant. Before he would be eligible to the grade of captain it would take, under this bill, 12 years and 9 months.

Mr. BRIDGES. I thank the Senator. It would take, then, under the Senator's bill, 12 years and 9 months for a man starting at scratch to attain the grade of captain? I think that ought to be perfectly plain to the Senate and to the country, because in the case of certain other enlistments of which we know it has not seemed to take 12 years and 9 months to attain that rank. I do not think I need to mention any names, but the short cuts to promotion and attainment certainly must be rather discouraging to the American youth who, as the Senator has pointed out in this bill, must serve 13 years to attain the grade of captain. I thank the Senator.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, as the physical condition of flyers is of primary importance, special attention will be paid to the health of the aviation cadet. Not only will physical exercise be a part of the curriculum, but facilities will be provided for aviation cadets to engage in various forms of recreation to enable them to maintain a good physical condition.

The requirements for appointment as aviation cadets, under the rules prescribed by the Secretary of War, probably will be that candidates must be unmarried-male citizens of the United States who at the time of application have reached their twentieth but who have not reached their twenty-seventh birthday. No candidate will be appointed an aviation cadet after he has reached his twenty-seventh birthday. An applicant must present a certified document from the office of the registrar of a recognized college or university showing that he has completed satisfactorily at least 2 years of the necessary credits leading to a degree. To me the 2 years' college-work requirement is absolutely asinine and without a sound basis. There are a million boys in these United States who have never been to college but who would make exceptionally fine pilots. Why the privilege of becoming an aviation cadet should be limited to college men is beyond my comprehension—it is arbitrary and silly. Applicants must, of course, be of excellent character and must present evidence of that fact. They must be of sound physique and in excellent health.

The physical standard for flying training will be higher than that for enlistment in the Regular Army, and the examination itself will be somewhat different, particular attention will be given to those factors and functions of greatest importance in flying. In general, physical defects which disqualify for enlistment in the Regular Army will also disqualify for flying training. In addition candidates for appointment as aviation cadets will have to meet the following physical and mental requirements:

Vision 20/20 bilateral, without glasses; unimpaired ocular muscle balance; unimpaired optical organism, anatomically and mechanically; good respiratory ventilation and vital capacity; hearing 20/20 bilateral; a stable equilibrium; a sound cardio-vascular system, nervous and organic; a well-formed, well-adjusted, and coordinated physique; height, minimum 64 inches, maximum 74 inches; and integrated and stable central nervous system, combined with a temperamental constitution suitable for military flying.

It is only natural that in training of this nature involving, as it will, hazards to the individual, to other students, and to property and equipment, a number of aviation cadets will, especially in the early stages of training, be found unsuited to become military pilots, and they will be dropped. It is reasonable to anticipate that many will fail from one cause or another since the qualifications of an Army pilot are indeed very high.

During the first part of his training following the completion of the course at the Air Corps Training Center, emphasis will be placed on the graduate's flying training in a tactical squadron equipped with modern aircraft. He will go with his squadron on maneuvers in various parts of the United States, or he may receive this training in the Panama Canal, Hawaiian, Philippine, or Puerto Rican Departments, during which time he will have the opportunity to familiarize himself with Army stations outside the continental limits of the United States.

The Air Corps Reserve officer, during the period of training with tactical units of the Air Corps will have the opportunity to observe all the various phases of aviation and, in addition, to build up his flying experience toward the objective of every Air Corps Reserve officer—a total of 1,200 hours' flying time. This accomplished, he will be eligible to secure a rating from the Civil Aeronautics Authority as an air-line transport pilot.

In addition to intensive flying training, the Air Corps Reserve officer, during his tour of extended active duty, will receive instruction in air navigation, engineering, radio, and armament, and will have ample opportunity to specialize in one or more of these subjects.

After completion of extended active duty, the Reserve officer will be free to return to his normal civilian pursuits, retaining his commission in the Reserve Corps so long as he is qualified to do so. With the inevitable expansion of aviation, many positions will be available to graduates of the Air Corps in the various classes of civilian flying and with commercial companies. While in an inactive status, Reserve officers will be assigned to Reserve units in their localities, and will be eligible for assignment to active-duty training for 2 weeks each year, if they so desire.

The expansion of the Air Corps requires a number of additional Regular Army Air Corps officers, and under existing law a limited number of vacancies in the Regular Army Air Corps are available each year. Aviation cadets who possess the necessary qualifications and meet the requirements for a commission in the Regular Army Air Corps are eligible to compete in the examinations held from time to time when vacancies are available and have some chance of receiving a commission in the Regular Army and thus continuing their flying career.

There was not one vote against S. 4365 when it passed the Senate. Every Senator understood the necessity for it, and every Senator favored its wholesome and constructive provisions. The Air Corps is keen for it because it provides the trained pilots so desperately required in a good, modern, and sensible national defense. I congratulate the Senate upon its foresight and wisdom in enacting this measure. I feel very certain of the wholehearted enthusiasm with which it will be received by the youth of the country and by the public generally.

I have noted with great satisfaction that the New York Daily News, one of the world's most powerful newspapers, has been advocating for several months the military training of aviators and skilled mechanics.

Early in the next session I shall introduce and push a companion bill to provide for 100,000 mechanic sergeants along the general lines of this measure. Well-paid, skilled, and thoroughly trained career men are what we must have to operate our implements of war. It takes a long time to develop such men, and we should be at it without further delay. Drumbeats and marching soldiers stir men's souls, but if every male citizen of the United States were armed with a bayonet mounted on a Springfield rifle we still would have no defense worthy of the name. Insofar as manpower is concerned, lack of proficient pilots and skilled mechanics are the bottle necks and the weaknesses in our defenses.

When the November election is out of the way and the present period of war hysteria has passed and men return to straight thinking again, Congress will get down to business and begin training men on a large scale to perform the technical work required in our national defense. In that day the obnoxious peacetime compulsory conscription bill will be repealed and our defenses will become real and not imaginary.

ADDRESS BY HON. HENRY A. WALLACE AT PORTLAND, OREG.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I hold in my hand a copy of the Oregon Journal of Wednesday, October 2, 1940. The headline reads:

Wallace says East foots bill.

With the following subhead:

Oregon money "free"—nominee says industries only one needing to worry about spending.

I mention that, Mr. President—and I shall take only a moment of the Senates' time—to indicate that Mr. Wallace has sounded the "hymn of hate." If there is anything we need in this country today, in the tragic time through which we are passing, it is a united America, a united Nation. The fair and able majority leader and the able Acting President pro tempore of the Senate at the moment know full well that we should have no North, no South, no East, and no West, but should have a united Nation, a united America.

Here is a man, the Vice Presidential candidate on the New Deal Democratic ticket, who is going forth today preaching the "hymn of hate" and advocating sectional division in the country. I say it should be condemned, and I am very sorry that he has fallen to this level. I ask, as part of my remarks, in order to save time of the Senate, that the complete article be inserted in the RECORD.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article referred to is as follows:

[From the Oregon Journal of October 2, 1940]

OREGON MONEY "FREE"—NOMINEE SAYS INDUSTRIES ONLY ONES NEEDING TO WORRY ABOUT SPENDING

(By Ralph Watson)

Henry A. Wallace, Democratic Vice Presidential nominee and formerly Secretary of Agriculture, reached Portland late Tuesday afternoon for a formal campaign speech in the auditorium Tuesday night.

Wallace does not see any reason why anyone in Oregon, except the person who might have a large income from industrial operation, should have any worry about the national debt or the amount of money that the Roosevelt administration has spent during the last 7 years. It will not come back upon the farmer or the lands of the Willamette Valley, or of the State, he told an audience of around 1,000 gathered to hear a rear-platform address at Eugene, Tuesday afternoon.

Wallace recalled that approximately half a billion dollars of Federal money had been spent in Oregon during the last years of the Roosevelt era through W. P. A., farm payments, crop loans, and other Federal agencies. Then he assured his audience that this sum would lay no burden on the land of Oregonians.

LANDS UNTOUCHED

"It is not Democratic money we are spending," Wallace told his audience, "nor is it Republican money. It is the people's money. We collect it and we spend it. We collect it from the incomes of the big industrialists in the East as they earn it, and we distribute it, and then we collect it again and distribute it again. It will not mean an added dollar of taxes laid on your lands or your people here in the Willamette Valley unless," he qualified, "there are some industrialists here whose incomes would contribute."

Wallace spoke to between 200 and 300 people at Klamath Falls early in the morning. He was greeted by around 1,000 at Eugene, while at Salem between 1,500 and 2,000 citizens were gathered at the station to greet him, headed by the Salem High School band and a flock of banners. In the crowd were about half a hundred Portland Democrats who had motored to Salem and some of whom rode the train back to Portland, where he was received at the union station by a crowd of 1,000 persons.

DASHES FOR TRAIN

At Salem, Wallace stepped down from the train halfway up front from his rear car and when half through his address the train started and a wild dash ensued to get on board again. The train slowed down after a few feet and Wallace attempted to conclude his address but had lost his microphone, so waved his adieus as he rode slowly past.

At Salem, however, he said he would like to change the name of the Willamette Valley to Friendly Valley. He had been given a kindly welcome on his journey, he said, and he was not surprised, because it was the home of his good friend, "CHARLEY MAC, best loved of all in the United States Senate."

He had been pleased to work with MCNARY in the past, he said. Together they had secured relief for the hop men, for flax, but they had discovered that the "all-powerful eastern wing of the Republican Party would not aid us."

Salem was the city of churches and as such wanted peace above everything else.

WALLACE PAYS COMPLIMENT TO MCNARY IN ADDRESS

KLAMATH FALLS, October 1.—Carefully polite references to his Republican Vice-Presidential opponent, Senator CHARLES L. MCNARY, of Oregon, marked the first public remarks in this State made by Democratic Vice-Presidential Nominee Henry A. Wallace, in a rear-platform appearance at the Southern Pacific depot here this morning.

A crowd of about 300 persons was on hand to greet the former Secretary of Agriculture as his north-bound train pulled into the station at 6:40 a. m. The local people cheered and applauded as Wallace, looking fresh and rested, came on the rear platform of his special car, a wine-colored Pullman named Leif Ericson.

Introduced by Democratic National Committeeman Howard Latourette, the candidate addressed the group briefly in a conversational tone.

He remarked upon the early hour and the size of the crowd welcoming him into Oregon. He asked for the hands of Democrats present and when nearly all hands went up he said it was going to be necessary to do a "little work" on Republicans in this campaign.

Republicans, he said, are not a bad lot, and he recalled that he himself had once been a member of the G. O. P.

"My father," he said, "was a Republican Secretary of Agriculture and worked on farm problems with the senior Senator from this State, as I have."

He added that he would except from his favorable comment on Republicans those who are "hooked up" with big financial interests of the East. "But I want to be fair," he hastened to add, "and state that your senior Senator has no such connections."

Wallace said there was no time for political discussion and he would prefer to spend the time shaking hands with the early risers who turned out to see him. He got down from the rear platform and shook hands with many.

NATIONAL ECONOMIC AND DEFENSE PROBLEMS

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to address the Senate briefly.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Senator will proceed.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, the serious problems confronting our country and threatening to undermine American democracy are not of recent origin. They have developed through a long period of years. In 1929 they were brought forcefully to the attention of our people by the catastrophic collapse of our economic system. That the evil economic and social conditions which brought about this collapse had been growing over a long period of our history was well known to every thoughtful person in the country.

Woodrow Wilson, in his first inaugural speech on March 3, 1913, pointed in clear and vigorous terms to the necessity of a program for the correction of these evils infesting our economy. At that time he said:

> We shall deal with our economic system as it is and as it may be modified, not as it might be if we had a clean sheet of paper to write upon; and step by step we shall make it what it should be.

And he concluded:

> Justice, and only justice, shall always be our motto.

That program of economic reform announced by Woodrow Wilson was, as we all know, interrupted by the first World War. Following that war and the wild inflation of the twenties, which ignored all protests and warnings, we were suddenly shocked by the virtual collapse of our entire American system of economy, creating widespread bankruptcy and destitution throughout the country. For 3 years thereafter a reactionary government, then in power, failed to meet the situation. It declined to intervene for the relief of the people, and permitted still further dangerous conditions to develop and continue unabated until our democratic system itself was actually endangered.

On March 4, 1933, when President Roosevelt was called to assume direction of our Government, we were in the depths of the most serious depression our country had ever experienced. Fifteen million jobless men challenged his wisdom, his courage, and his conscience. They were the victims of all these evils which had grown up in our economic system over the years. They were, of course, in nowise responsible for the position in which they found themselves. They were without work and without means of livelihood. The whole country was experiencing a panic. Industry offered no solution, and, indeed, undertook to wash its hands of the resulting dangers, taking the easy position that it was an inevitable and incurable weakness of our economic system which could not be avoided; that it would have to run its course until the downward spiral was exhausted, leaving in its wake millions of wrecked lives and broken fortunes.

This, as I say, was the situation which confronted Franklin D. Roosevelt when he took over the reins of government on March 4, 1933. He found our economic system in exactly this state of chaos. In truth, the country was dangerously close to a state of revolution, with farmers of the Nation opposing the processes of courts and threatening the lives of mortgage holders and judicial officers who sought enforcement of foreclosure decrees. He found our system of banking in a critical condition. Banks were failing by the thousands in every section of the country, with new runs commencing daily. Six thousand and thirty-five had already suspended operations, and 3,413 failed to reopen following the emergency banking holiday proclaimed by the President in an effort to save the Nation from complete financial collapse.

The desperate conditions which threatened our country 7 years ago have been vividly described by Turner Catledge in the New York Times, America's leading conservative newspaper. He said:

> Few people who live in Washington will ever forget the New Deal's natal day. That day dawned a dark one in every respect. The great depression hung over the country like a darkening cloud. Banks were closing literally by the hundreds. Life savings in banks and in securities were being blown away like so much dust. Homes and farms were going on the auction block in ever-increasing numbers. Citizens were beginning to grow desperate. Word reached Washington that morning of hungry people raiding a food store in a community of the Southwest. In another State irate citizens had forcibly stopped a foreclosure sale, and in another had actually dragged a judge from the bench and threatened to tar and feather him for decreeing the forfeit of a farmer's mortgage.

We all know the story of the intervening period, a courageous struggle by a courageous government to salvage a nation. For 7 trying years President Roosevelt has been meeting and overcoming these threatening social and economic problems. At the outset he quickly restored the confidence of the people.

As BRUCE BARTON, the Republican candidate for the United States Senate from New York, truthfully acknowledged in a statement he published in Collier's, November 5, 1938—

> Franklin Roosevelt was pretty much all right in 1932, and there was certainly nothing the matter with him on March 4, 1933. Terrified and desperate people bent their ears to the radio to hear his vibrant voice proclaiming, "The only thing we have to fear is fear itself." I remember—> how the members of our entire office staff quit work to listen to that speech and were thrilled to the fingertips. The Almighty had raised up for America again a man in her hour of need.

Almost overnight conditions began to improve as a result of his resolute and constructive leadership. To the task of providing for the millions of destitute unemployed of the country he immediately applied himself. Within 1 month after his inauguration he asked Congress for an appropriation of $3,300,000,000 to carry out his inauguration pledge to the American people that no one in the Nation should be allowed to starve.

I take particular interest in this phase of the accomplishments of the New Deal administration. I have supported legislation for all these relief activities because I firmly believed that in time of peace or in time of war the greatest responsibility of government is to the people of the Nation. I have little patience with those who follow a different philosophy. I shall not undertake to debate such an issue.

At times I am disappointed and saddened by the course of the present campaign. President Roosevelt and his administration are receiving some of their severest criticism solely because of the humane and enlightened attitude which has been taken toward the problems of the bankrupt farmers and destitute workers of the country. When we realize how absolutely essential the relief policies of this administration have been, I am at a complete loss to understand the reasoning of the opposition. Because of the humane program of the President, initiated by the Congress and carried out by the various agencies of the Government, we have been called radicals, dreamers, Utopians, and sometimes railed at as Socialists and Communists bent on the destruction of the Nation.

Throughout my service in the Congress I have taken a serious attitude toward these economic and social problems. My own position has always been one of deep concern in the economic problems of the Nation.

Before taking my seat in the United States Senate, I had enjoyed a broad experience in life. I had been a lawyer in my home town of Butte, Mont. I also had been interested in business and in mining, and had served as a director of banks. Prior to these experiences I had worked as a miner in the deep copper mines of the Butte mining camp. I there became familiar with the lives of the workers of my State. I knew their problems, their fears, their hopes, and their disappointments. I had been through several depressions, and had witnessed the unequal burdens borne by the workers. I was familiar with the privation, destitution, and want always associated with industrial shut-downs. As a property owner and investor, I also had my share of contacts and experiences with the national stock markets and financial institutions of New York—on some occasions much to my regret and discouragement.

Probably because I had such a varied experience in life—close contacts with highly organized labor, industry, agriculture, and Government—because I had lived for 40 years in a western mining and agricultural State, my experience equipped me and enabled me to see and understand how vital it is to the Nation to protect and encourage the great mass of Americans who make up our country, who determine its purchasing power, and who make possible the successful operation of our economic system.

As a consequence of my experience in life, I am unable to see anything in the present administration which has been harmful either to the people, or to the economic machine, or to its owners. I feel that the policies of our present administration have been designed to preserve our American system of free enterprise. In supporting this administration, I feel that I have been able to serve my own people and the people of the Nation with a clear eye, uncontrolled and uninfluenced by political or economic ties which bind or blur the judgment.

I think it is absolutely manifest that every important New Deal program created by this administration to meet the emergency has operated to the benefit and advantage of American industry and business. Admitting that some mistakes may have been made, I believe the statement I have made can be verified by every fair-minded businessman and every independent economist and student of our Government in the country. I think it must be conceded that the New Deal saved our capitalistic economy, reinforced our wavering democratic system, and restored the confidence of the people. The best economic writers in the country take this view.

The Fortune magazine—the rich man's national periodical—in September 1938 said:

> There can be no argument with Government spending for relief from the point of view of necessity; starvation and misery in the midst of what is still the most bountiful economy on earth simply cannot be tolerated.

Many nationally known editors and economists have pointed out that the various New Deal agencies, such as Public Works Administration, Work Projects Administration, Rural Electrification Administration, Reconstruction Finance Corporation, United States Housing Authority, Home Owners' Loan Corporation, Federal Housing Administration, and perhaps other agencies which I do not at the moment recall, were all, in fact, subsidies for big business. It was through the operation of these New Deal agencies that business was revived and our economic system saved from bankruptcy.

The records of the Internal Revenue Bureau show that all the big basic corporations of the United States greatly enhanced their profits under the New Deal. In fact, a great many of them made more profits in 1937 than they had made in 1929.

In the battle against the depression, the administration did not overlook the people. It rescued the farmers and workers of the Nation from destitution and want. It stabilized agriculture, and put idle men to work. We showed them that we had a democracy in this country that works.

As I talk here today, I want the people of the country to understand me. I want to try to give them a deeper understanding of a government in Washington responsive to the people. I want particularly to show that the unfair attacks made upon President Roosevelt's work-relief program in themselves explain what is operating in the minds of these critics. Obviously, only the programs which have taken the people into consideration are the ones drawing the heaviest attacks from the opposition. We hear little, if any, criticism of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, because it bailed out the railroads, corporations, and business interests. Attacks leveled at the Federal Deposit Insurance System at its inception have wholly ceased. Although originally opposed by big finance, it is now realized that the banks of the Nation have been strengthened, and that we have today in the United States the safest and soundest system of banking in the world.

We also hear very little adverse comment on the operations of the Public Works Administration, because this relief program was aimed at stimulating and maintaining the steel, cement, copper, lumber, building trades, and other types of heavy industry. The Public Works Administration started the wheels of industry revolving, and enabled those industries to get back to the 1929 scale of profits and production. It was in reality a subsidy for big business, and therefore is not criticized. The same thing is true of the United States Housing Authority and Federal Housing Administration. They have all materially aided industry, and therefore they are not being attacked in this campaign. We all recall, however, the great hue and cry of the last Presidential campaign over Social Security, and the bitter attacks on the Triple A programs of the Department of Agriculture, designed to relieve the distress of the American farmers. We also recall the bitter assaults on the relief agencies designed to relieve unemployment and destitution among the masses.

All this propaganda against the administration has again been revived, with more bitterness than ever. They wish to undo only what this administration has done for the people. This is all because in the past years of our history, under conservative or so-called reactionary administrations, all the advantages in legislation and governmental administration, both State and Nation, have been accorded to the big financial and industrial interests of the country, the theory being that with Government aid to those on the top of the economic pyramid sufficient of the surplus prosperity may trickle down through the strata of economic life to satisfy the masses at the bottom. This administration has reversed that philosophy. Of course our opponents do not like it. After years and years of broken Republican pledges and promises to the farmers, small-business men, and laborers of the Nation, there has finally been installed in Washington an administration which actually carries out its promises, and directly provides for the welfare of the people as a whole.

So the very fact that these New Deal programs are under attack today from the reactionary elements in the country should prove to the people that those now engaged in a desperate attempt to regain control of our National Government are not in sympathy with any program for the practical benefit of the people. It requires taxes to provide such programs; and while those to whom I refer are not opposed to subsidies to big business, they are opposed to national spending to aid the people, even though in the long run it eventually benefits the economic system as a whole. They want our National Government to be again dedicated to the interests of the big financial and industrial groups of the country.

The struggle is between Main Street and Wall Street. Make no mistake about this, because this struggle over property rights and human rights has been with us since time began, and will continue as long as we adhere to a system of capitalistic enterprise.

It so happens that the people are in the driver's seat at the moment. They must be retained there if we are to bring about in this country the necessary reforms and readjustments which Woodrow Wilson planned at the commencement of his administration, and which Franklin D. Roosevelt is now seeking to accomplish for the American people.

Today we are engaged in a great national effort to prepare this Nation for total defense against any nation or group of nations which may have designs upon our way of life. We in America, I am sure, are satisfied to go about our American way of living without infringing on the rights of other nations. We will fight for that right just as our forefathers fought for the right to establish this great democratic power.

So in this picture of our everyday fight for life and the gigantic task of national defense we are now undertaking, I want the people of the country to understand the great part our Federal relief agencies have played in strengthening our internal affairs and preparing for national defense and our right to live as a free, democratic nation.

No government can successfully prosecute a war without the support of a united people. That is a lesson which the French nation learned too late. Pertinax, the great French journalist, recently said:

> The lesson to be drawn from the dreadful sequence of events in France is that no nation can attune itself to the exacting demands of totalitarian war waged against dictatorships unless it succeeds in keeping clear from all internal disturbances.

Further, he said:

> The French people had been deeply divided ever since 1934, but when war was declared we believed that some kind of national unanimity had come into its own to face the German danger. We thought that the "seamless robe" had been effectively patched up. Alas, we were mistaken. The reconciliation of all Frenchmen was merely on the surface. Deeper, the old feelings still ran vigorously.

It is here that Franklin D. Roosevelt is entitled to the eternal gratitude and loyalty of the American people. He has given our Nation a humane, liberal government; a government that recognizes human rights as well as property rights; a government seeking to correct the injustices and inequalities which have resulted from an unbalanced industrial system. The American farmer and laborer know that through the New Deal Roosevelt has sought to overcome the dangerous economic conditions of the country, where, in the midst of plenty, we find nearly a third of our population in want. In other words, the present administration has sought to raise the purchasing power of the farmer and offset the disadvantage he has suffered through a tariff system designed to subsidize industry.

While his predecessor, President Hoover, had tried to solve our problems by further subsidizing big business through enormous loans, higher tariffs, and other devices, President Roosevelt tackled the problem from the other end. He went directly to the people and told them at the outset of his administration that no man in the country would be allowed to starve, and that he would seek to bring about a more balanced economy in the country. He set up a gigantic work and relief program, and through it and other agencies he quickly pumped into the hands of the people a purchasing power which effectively turned the tide and saved the Nation from collapse. He set up a social-security program to protect the health and the morale of the people; a home-loan program to save American homes; a national-youth program to salvage American youth; and numerous other devices to relieve the distress and panic of the people. He has completely restored the confidence of the people, and has given us a united country.

To go into the accomplishment record of our principal relief agency, the Work Projects Administration, is an exciting experience, particularly in the sense of how it has improved the well-being and morale of the American people, and how greatly it has contributed toward making this a strong, united, and virile nation. Nevertheless, our opponents viciously attack this relief program. They have constantly insinuated that the projects constructed are worthless, that the relief workers are lazy and thriftless, and that the entire program should be substituted by a policy of doles or direct relief administered by the States, with national aid. They would propose to have the unemployed remain in idleness and merely feed them. These relief workers, of course, are American citizens. They are the victims of a depression for which they are in nowise responsible. I do not think the American people will accept the philosophy expressed by the opponents of the Work Projects Administration. I am confident that W. P. A. will be retained as the permanent American way of meeting the problem of unemployment and relief.

Furthermore, the program of the Work Projects Administration has created valuable assets for the Nation. Work Projects Administration workers have constructed, reconstructed, and extensively improved 550 landing fields, more than a thousand airport buildings, and nearly two and a half million feet of runways. In fact, more than 85 percent of all airport and landing-field construction in the United States during the past 5 years has been done through Work Projects Administration projects.

Let us take a look at what Work Projects Administration workers have done in the field of facilities for automobile transportation, a major part of national defense. They have constructed or improved a total of over 470,000 miles—miles—of roads and streets in the last 4½ years. In addition, they have also built over 57,000 new bridges and viaducts and rebuilt or improved over 37,000 others.

In the field of public buildings I will select two items which are definitely in the field of national defense. Work Projects Administration workers have constructed 127 new hospitals and reconstructed 1,500 others. Work Projects Administration workers have built 216 new armories and reconstructed or improved 370 others. This has involved no neglect of America's spiritual defense, to maintain which the Work Projects Administration has built or improved over 30,000 schools and nearly a thousand libraries.

The Work Projects Administration has been doing work for the Army and Navy for the past 5 years. It has worked on barracks, rifle ranges, air-training fields, and navy-yard facilities. It has done altogether nearly half a billion dollars' worth of work on projects useful to our national defense. The work of the Work Projects Administration on defense projects is now being greatly expanded. Work Projects Administration work will be found going on at nearly every Army post, naval station, camp, arsenal, and military and naval air base in the Nation.

General Marshall, Chief of Staff of the United States Army, has said:

> In the great task of preparing for national defense, the Work Projects Administration has proved itself to be an invaluable aid.

We are now realizing that the health work done in our communities by the Work Projects Administration is of importance to national defense. Dr. Thomas Parran, Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service, says:

> America has moved forward in improving the people's health. The cooperation of the Work Projects Administration during recent years has helped greatly. But extra effort is needed to protect the health of the people during our urgent defense preparations; defense, vigorous manpower, is a vital factor in national defense. In this effort—the Work Projects Administration will play an important part.

Says Dr. Parran—

Dr. Parran further said:

> W. P. A. construction workers are improving the living quarters at our military camps; eliminating mosquito-breeding swamps; modernizing the sewerage and sanitary facilities both at military and naval reservations and for our cities and towns. The work being done to improve community health is, I know, of great importance to the Nation.

Donald M. Nelson, coordinator of national defense purchases, has this to say about the Work Projects Administration:

Both as a businessman and as an official of the National Defense Commission, I have come to appreciate the enormous contribution the Work Projects Administration is making to the welfare of the Nation. The work program has indeed been a good business proposition, paying dividends both in national recovery and in social betterment. I have also noted the valuable services that the army of Work Projects Administration workers has been able to perform in disaster emergencies—floods, hurricanes, droughts—when help is needed and needed quickly. Today, too, in our great emergency of national defense, the Work Projects Administration is repeating its record for quick emergency services. Work Projects Administration workers can be quickly turned to national defense work.

Charles E. Taussig, a progressive businessman and economist, has this to say:

The Work Projects Administration has been of great value in relieving unemployment and preventing needless suffering. It has been a boon to American business by helping to sustain general purchasing power, and maintaining the skills and morale of the unemployed. It has enriched our communities with every kind of needed public improvements. And now the Work Projects Administration is proving an important instrument of national defense.

In truth, there is scarcely a town in America which is not worth more physically because of the Work Projects Administration program of the New Deal. The Nation as a whole is a better nation, richer, stronger, and is today the idol of her citizens. Every community in the country has made more advancement in improving its economic and social conditions, and its educational facilities, than it could have accomplished in 50 years under the old regime.

In those fields where the works program has operated and which have become the targets of those who heckle and shout, we are again a richer nation, a happier nation, and a more cultured nation. I refer to the art programs and other "white collar" projects.

Jo Davidson, the famous sculptor, had the following to say when he returned to this country after a long absence:

Upon my return to America after several years abroad, I find, to my amazement and pleasure, that the face of the country is changed. The cities, the small towns, and the rural areas are cleaner and more beautiful. Sculpture and painting, for the first time commensurate with the vastness of our country, beautifies our public buildings. These projects—theater, music, painting, writing—small as they are in the whole program, are weaving together the various threads of our American culture for the first time in a definite program.

Is this a contribution to the welfare of our Nation, I am asked. I answer: A more basic contribution than all the airplanes and ships and armies that can ever be created. For the people who have benefited by these programs are being taught by their experiences to love this Nation of ours, and be willing to fight for it and defend it to the end.

Ned Bruce, who was directing the art program for the people of America, once said to President Roosevelt:

These pictures make me feel very comfortable about America. I do not believe that one of the artists who painted them likes either Hitler or Mussolini. I have a feeling they all know the Twenty-third Psalm. There has been—no sign of defeatism or social unrest among any of them. They have spread out before us a panorama of America, triumphant, clear-eyed, and unafraid, and I like to think that as time goes on we will continue to develop through our post offices little cultural centers where we are raising the taste of our country and helping to develop our native art.

He went on to say—

The opposition, however, call all this art program "boondoggling." Yet it is clear to me and, I am sure, clear to you that all these programs combined under the New Deal are the things that breed loyalty and devotion to our country. A look around the world convinces us all of that premise. In Britain, where the people of the Nation repeatedly warned their leaders and masters against policies of greed, exploitation, and neglect of the masses, they are now suffering. And it is the plain people over there they must depend upon to bravely defend their Nation. In France, now fallen, discord developed over the same time-old struggle of man against property, and ended in chaos and loss of freedom because the ruling classes neglected and refused to heed the warnings of the times. In this example we see a lesson. It was a case of disunion and lack of loyalty amongst the people.

Work for the people, good housing, education, culture, vacations, health, and contentment are the first prerequisites of a strong nation. I often wonder if it ever occurred to the opposition who criticize this Government that people fighting and striving for a living might not get tired and just sit back and watch. And that is as grave a danger as revolution. When men are worn and weary of an endless struggle in which the odds are lengthened and the handicaps increased, there is danger—and great danger—to a nation.

The most terrifying question today, to me, is, What would be our present situation if there had been no New Deal? A people desperate, disillusioned, and in dire need, would have been the answer to Adolf Hitler's hopes. Instead of that, we find here a rejuvenated America. New homes, new farms, new industries, new opportunities being opened up. Safe banks, jobs for those in need, and food for those unable to work. Aid for the blind and the dependent. Salvation for the aged and pensions for workers who have contributed to industry their producing years. This is the story of the New Deal. We find the colleges filled with ambitious youth pursuing their course in life and devoted to a Nation which makes these things possible. It may not be perfect, but we want economic and social advancement—not the retrogression our Republican opponents are advocating.

I fail to see any justification in the assertions of the minority candidate for the Presidency that President Roosevelt's administration in Washington is one of defeatism and despair for America. It has been one of action, courage, and confidence in the future. Mr. Willkie asserts further that the new dealers preach a story of a nation which has reached its peak and must now level off and share the wealth that is here, neglecting the new avenues of production and prosperity. That is simply a libel against a progressive government of the people.

The record of the New Deal is not that sort of record. Our production indices in 1937 equalled those of 1929, and would have far exceeded that mark if we had had complete cooperation. Greed and avarice inspired a rapid rise in prices on behalf of industry during our fight for recovery, and finally the upward movement collapsed. This failure to continue the improved conditions in 1937 was directly caused by the fictitious price manipulations and the enormous profits exacted by industry at a time when we were seeking to spread employment. Industry had simply failed at that time to cooperate in the program. But it learned a lesson. Production today has again passed the peak of 1929, and is bound upward. Will we witness another attempt to jack up prices and destroy returning prosperity? There is a real danger, but let us hope we may find judgment and restraint in the seats of the mighty.

No; there is no truth in these attacks by Mr. Willkie. This administration has always stood for increased production and increased prosperity. But you cannot have increased production if prices go too high and people cannot afford to buy. While high prices provide more profits, they reduce production and cause unemployment. That is what happened in 1937.

It has been my good fortune to have been a member of the special committee of the United States Senate which in 1938 studied the causes of unemployment and relief. We brought before that committee some of the big industrialists, bankers, businessmen, and economists of the Nation. It was demonstrated at those hearings that these accusations, such as Mr. Willkie has made against the administration, are without any basis of fact.

There is another point I should like to touch on before I close. Mr. Willkie, the Republican candidate for the Presidency, in a frenzied effort to win votes, recently made a glaring misstatement in my home town of Butte, Mont., which I wish to consider. He flatly accused President Roosevelt of causing the recession of 1937–38. I will quote his exact language as it appears in the Montana Standard, an Anaconda Copper Co. paper which purports to be a Democratic organ, but whose policy is controlled and directed from the Wall Street office of the company, and is advocating the election of Wendell Willkie in this campaign. Mr. Willkie in his Butte speech, said:

Many of you will remember in April 1937 that the President stated the price of commodities was too high. Bringing that point directly home to Butte, you also will remember that copper was selling at 17 cents a pound at the time and that following that statement by the President it immediately fell.

There is a direct relationship between industry and the individual and when copper fell as a result of the President's mere statement it affected the wages of every man in Butte, Mont.

The very fact that the President had enough power in his hands so that his mere statement could affect the price of copper points to the danger of centralized government.

Of course, the Republican candidate, Mr. Willkie, was very much at home with the copper interests of Montana, who have been bitter critics of the New Deal and the President. I should point out here, however, that the Anaconda Copper Co. is one of the greatest beneficiaries in the country of the New Deal program. That company was in a desperate plight when Roosevelt took over the reins of government. Its stock was selling at $3 a share, having fallen from $180. In Chicago the stock was being given away, by an enterprising merchant, with a suit of clothes to every customer. Following the New Deal, however, it was completely rehabilitated.

I am told that emissaries from the "sixth floor" headquarters in Butte met the candidate down the road and carefully prompted him in this futile attempt to deceive and befuddle the miners of Butte. But, let me say, Mr. Willkie made a grave mistake when he assumed that the miners of Montana are not familiar with the subject of commodity prices and their effect on our economy. I know miners in my home city who are better acquainted with economic realities than Mr. Willkie ostensibly appears to be, judging from his statement. I note that he slurred over this matter, seemingly in a great hurry to get over with it. Whether he was abashed by the political duplicity involved, which he had been inveigled into, or acted with entire innocence in repeating this misstatement, I am not prepared to say. Obviously, if he knew what he was talking about, he was simply engaging in an attempted deception. Under the circumstances, I must allow him the benefit of the doubt and assume that he was innocently repeating a misstatement he was furnished with.

We all know that the manipulation of commodity prices is one of the serious evils of our American economy. At the present moment the danger of a rapid price rise is seriously bothering the Government. I have adverted to this subject earlier in my remarks. It has always been difficult to restrain the natural greed for profits. In 1937, while the Government was spending billions of dollars to stimulate industry and restore employment, the big-business corporations of the country found the demand for commodities increasing rapidly. Prosperity was returning. The country was witnessing a come-back, and all that was necessary for complete recovery was honest cooperation of industry with the Government on the pump-priming experiment. It was obviously the duty of industry to maintain good wages, reasonable prices, and permit the money the Government was spending to remain in circulation. In this way we would witness increased production and increased employment. The improved industrial activity was due to Government spending, and it was unfair and noncooperative for industry to raise its prices and seek to profit out of such a program. But that is exactly what was happening.

The President, as Mr. Willkie stated, did warn industry on this matter in April 1937. He had repeatedly requested industry to hold down prices while we were fighting for recovery, but industry had gotten the start of him, and there was a rapid rise in prices in all commodities. Living costs went up and soon there was a runaway inflation on foot, which ended, as all such movements do, in collapse. Nearly all the basic corporations in the country made more profits during that brief economic spell in 1937 than they did at any time since 1929, the banner year of American prosperity. Many corporations made more profits than they did in 1929, but when the collapse came they made no effort to stem the tide or provide for the resulting unemployment. They hoarded these enormous profits, which were skimmed out of Government spending, closed down their plants and forced their workers to again join the ranks of the unemployed. Meanwhile, Wall Street rejoiced over the profits filched out of the New Deal. They had skimmed the cream off of the Government spending. By their greed they had started the whole process of inflation and brought on a serious recession with mounting unemployment throughout the country.

The President was dead right in pointing to the high price of copper in 1937, and the corporations were dead wrong in shoving prices up so high as to unbalance the essential economic equilibrium. It is clear to any intelligent person that the statement of Mr. Willkie to the effect that Roosevelt caused the recession is absolutely untrue and is a palpable effort to deceive the public. Mr. Roosevelt was attempting to stop the dangerous price advance and to induce the corporations of the country to cooperate with the Government in its carefully planned program for the stimulation of industry and reemployment of men. The miners of Butte understand this perfectly. They prefer steady, reasonable copper prices, with the mines steadily operating, providing steady employment. They are always the victims of booms and depressions. During booms they never get their fair share of the excess profits. When the depression comes they are out in the cold and get no sympathy from the profiteers. The economist of the International Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers, Mr. Ben Riskin, and his staff have made a study of the recession of 1937, and he places the full blame just where the President placed it—on the Anaconda Copper Co. and other industrial organizations of the Nation who failed to cooperate with the Government.

I also wish to show that Mr. Willkie's statement was deceptive from another standpoint. He said that—

Copper was selling at 17 cents a pound at the time.

I use his exact language. He intended to leave the inference that the miners' wages were fixed upon the basis of 17-cent copper in April. That was not true at all. The price of electrolytic copper in April, according to the Department of Commerce quotations, was 0.1512—just a little above 15 cents a pound. There was a temporary flurry in the copper market in London for a few days caused by the commencement of the British armament program, and copper prices reached a temporary or momentary peak in the daily quotations in London of 17 cents. New York, being a free market, followed the English quotations; but very few sales, if any, were made at that price, and American producers realized nothing in the way of sales of copper under such quotations. Naturally, the temporary quotation had no effect whatever on wages.

Mr. Willkie is a candidate for the Presidency of the United States, and is supposed to be informed on industrial economics. Through his Butte statement he lost his reputation with the Butte miners. He proved himself not to be entitled to their confidence or support.

I am sure that the people of the country will agree that President Roosevelt is interested only in protecting and reinforcing our system of free competitive enterprise. That has been the whole theory of the New Deal. We certainly must acknowledge that his policies have constituted a sort of economic vein or artery through which new lifeblood has flowed into every phase of our national life. The very fact that all the opposition comes from a small group of well-to-do irreconcilable industrialists who spend their time in baseless abuse of the Government and organized labor is added proof that the New Deal is rejuvenating and reuniting this Nation.

The Senator from Kentucky, ALBEN W. BARKLEY, speaking in the United States Senate on the seventh anniversary of the New Deal, after reviewing the great record made by the administration in the field of human affairs, said:

And I would lose faith in America and American democracy if I did not believe that fundamentally we are all Americans first before we are partisans. But I am equally convinced—that when the impartial historian shall write the history of these 7 years he will say that never since the days of Lincoln has any man faced such tremendous problems, which might have bid fair to uproot and destroy the very foundations of our faith in democracy, and never has any man since Lincoln undertaken more unselfishly and more wisely to meet those problems and to master them.

He went on—

Mr. President, I have no fear of the future as long as there remains a Government in Washington which understands and reckons with the problems of all the people, but I do have real fear of an administration dedicated to the policies pursued in the past and which left this Nation confused and divided. We have no assurance of any kind that the Republican Party can design any other kind of government than the one it has known and the one which is demanded by the powerful interests controlling its councils. The times are dangerous. The spokesmen of the Republican Party are giving lip service at the moment to the problems of the Nation as a whole, but their voting record in Congress and their behavior before many committees in Congress leads me to believe they are determined that the program of economic and social reform which the New Deal has given to the people will not be carried on. I say this deliberately. We must not take a chance with a party that gave us Harding and Hoover, depression and despair.

I am sure that when the smoke clears away after next November 5 this Nation will be united behind President Roosevelt. We will be united, strong, and powerful economically and able to defend our country against all the world. We will prove ourselves worthy of the trust placed in our hands more than 150 years ago when our forefathers shed their blood to the end that this Nation, under freedom, could become a reality.

PROPOSED RECESS ARRANGEMENT

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon on Friday next.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I desire to make a statement.

Mr. BARKLEY. I did not know the Senator was on his feet. I withhold the motion.

Mr. BYRD. I merely wish to say that, so far as the Senator from Virginia is concerned, he recognizes no agreement, expressed or implied, with respect to legislation which may be considered between now and November 18. As the first Senator who objected to the proposal which the Senator from Virginia understood was made, that the distinguished leader of the Senate [Mr. BARKLEY] would be the sole arbiter and the sole judge of the legislation to be considered between now and November 18, I wish to say to the Senator from Kentucky that my objection was in no wise because of any lack of confidence in him. I have a high respect and admiration for him. But I did not think that the Senate of the United States should confer a responsibility of this character, at a time of acute emergency such as that which confronts this country, upon any one Senator.

I make this statement because in my judgment no agreement does exist, in view of the remarks and statements which have been made on the floor of the Senate, and I, as an individual Senator, do not recognize any gentlemen's agreement which some other Senators may later state was undertaken today in the debate in the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it had not been my purpose to make any further statement about this situation, but in view of the statement of the Senator from Virginia and the statement of the Senator from Oregon, who is not now on the floor, I wish to say that it is my purpose to carry out the program which was discussed earlier in this session, and Senators are free to govern themselves accordingly. I intend to move a recess until Friday, and then until Monday, and then every three days to move a recess from Monday until Thursday and from Thursday until the following Monday.

I think the remarks of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] absolve me from any agreement or any obligation in any way which had been previously entered into as a result of the colloquy between the Senator from Vermont and myself with respect to any consultation in regard to whether Senators shall be called back to Washington or not. Any Senator is free to ignore any such arrangement if he sees fit to do so, and there is no way in which any Senator can be bound by any such arrangement. But I wish to say to Senators who desire to go to their homes or elsewhere out of Washington that they are at liberty to do so if they so wish and feel that it is their duty to do so.

Whether any quorum calls will be had in the meantime I do not know, and I wish to reiterate that I do not know. I wish also to reiterate that I did not seek the responsibility of determining whether the Senate should be recalled. I only made that suggestion in response to the remarks of the Senator from Vermont, who wanted some assurance that if any exigency arose which might demand the presence of the Senate, someone would take the responsibility of notifying Senators to return.

I do not desire to inject any political note into this matter, but in view of the interjection of the Senator from Oregon, which seems to throw out the window the understanding we had as a result of the discussions between the Senator from Vermont and myself——

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I do not think the Senator from Kentucky knows that I went to the telephone, on learning that the Senator from Oregon was here, and asked him if he would not come over and read the colloquy, and take charge.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator responded promptly to that telephone call, and came over and read the colloquy and took charge. But I intend to follow the program which we discussed, unless some emergency or exigency shall arise to make it impossible to do so.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. In view of the statement of the Senator and the colloquy which has taken place, is there objection to any Senator or group of Senators at any time during the recesses, coming in and organizing a quorum and proceeding to the business of the Senate?

Mr. BARKLEY. I have heard no objection to it, if a group of Senators feel that there is an emergency. How could we control that, anyway?

Mr. WALSH. I had assumed that from the colloquy which took place.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wish to say also—and I absolve the Senator from Vermont and other Senators on the Republican side from any responsibility in this connection—that many of the Senators on the other side have been coming to me for weeks wanting to know and urging me to tell whether we were going to adjourn, or, if we could not adjourn, whether we could not recess, and, if we could not recess, whether we could not enter into the very arrangement into which we have entered.

Not a day has passed within the last 3 weeks that I have not been importuned by Senators on both sides of the aisle on the subject, in spite of the fact that some 2 or 3 months ago the Republican Senators caucused on whether there should be an adjournment. We have all realized for some time that there would be no adjournment, and that situation is not before us at this time.

I said awhile ago that there was undoubtedly some politics in this matter, and I think there is. But if the opposing party in this particular situation has no issue to present to the American people more important than whether we shall take a series of 3-day recesses, it is in a desperate situation for an issue. I absolve the Senator from Vermont and most of the other Republican Senators of any responsibility for the suggestion of any politics in connection with this matter.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. WILEY. I am sorry that the majority leader made that statement about politics. It seemed to me earlier today that there was not much indication of it.

Mr. BARKLEY. No, not on the surface, but under cover, under the skin, and not very deep under the skin, politics entered into this whole situation.

Mr. WILEY. Of course, some people can see what they want to see, but still be mistaken. What I have in mind, Mr. President, is simply this: The newspapers this morning, and announcers over the radio, indicated that a very serious situation exists in the East, and it is becoming more serious. I was very much impressed by the colloquy which took place on the floor earlier, and I thought it indicated a rather wholesome respect on the part of Senators for each other's views.

Mr. BARKLEY. It did, up to a certain point.

Mr. WILEY. I think that even beyond the point the Senator suggests there should have been respect for the minority leader's views in this matter. He is seriously concerned, as the Senator from Kentucky is, with the welfare of the Nation, and it seemed to me there is a meeting place. Apparently there is no real business at this time before the Senate which we think we have to consider. But it seems to me that if the colloquy developed an additional understanding we could have gone to town, and that was that the majority leader or the minority leader might have been authorized to take the initiative to call the Senate here if either one or both deemed it advisable to do so. If that were done we could have had an understanding as to recesses of 3 days at a time.

I am one of those who feel that we shall be properly guarded here and guided if we recess for 3 days at a time. I felt that the remarks made by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] and by the minority leader [Mr. MCNARY] earlier today developed a basis on which we could have an understanding, and all else that was needed was the other factor, that either the majority leader or the minority leader might summon us back.

When it comes to the question of playing politics, however, I feel that there have been plenty of examples of politics in the last month on both sides, and we have used this forum almost to the disgrace of the Senate in the matter of politics.

I feel that the situation in the East is such that we will be protecting the interests of the country if we provide an arrangement such as has been suggested by me, giving the minority leader and the majority leader the right to call the Senate back in session.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I do not think it is necessary to prolong the discussion any longer. It is the only time since I have been in the United States Senate that I have heard the suggestion made that the minority leader of any party, Democratic or Republican, should have the sole right to determine whether the Senate should reassemble. I made the proposal that before I took upon myself any such responsibility I would consult with the minority leader and with his assistant, but the proposal that the minority leader alone shall determine whether we shall reassemble and send out instructions to Senators is unheard of.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I think that I perhaps began the discussion of this proposition. If it is intended to infer from that that I was playing any politics——

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from California was not in my mind when I made that suggestion. I exonerate him entirely from any connection with it.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I am very glad to hear that, because I was going to say——

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator's discussion arose very largely, I think, over some remarks made by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. That was a different discussion.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I was simply going to remark that in June we took only a brief vacation; we had a certain sort of recess; and we did it upon the theory that an emergency confronted us. I insisted earlier today, when first I rose, that the emergency at the present time was infinitely greater than that which existed in June, and that it lent itself to our refusal to take an adjournment or a recess at this particular time. I was going to remark that if that be politics——

Mr. BARKLEY. I have already absolved the Senator from California of playing politics in any thought I had. But we know—we might as well be frank—that in this whole discussion at both ends of the Capitol the question of whether it was good politics or bad politics for Members of the Senate or of the House to go home, was uppermost in the minds of most Members.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I did not know that.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; that is true.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I was not aware that anyone either on that side or this side, would put it upon the ground that it was of value or not of value to Members to leave the Senate at this time.

Mr. BARKLEY. I doubt if the Senator from California is as naive as he now appears to be.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Oh, I am quite naive when it comes to dealing with the Senator from Kentucky [laughter] and I confess myself wholly at a disadvantage also.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I absolve the Senator from California from any such disadvantage in dealing with me. This is the day of absolution.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I rose simply to say, with some bit of indignation, that there was no thought of politics on my part. There has been in the Chamber no thought of politics in anything I have ever said.

Mr. BARKLEY. Even if the Senator were inclined to have politics in his mind—which I do not even suggest, but even if he were inclined to—there would be no necessity for it, because he has all the nominations that are possible in California [laughter], so he does not have to consider the question of politics.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Oh, yes; but I am interested in something else besides my own contest.

Mr. BARKLEY. I realize that, and it is too bad that all other human beings are not equally disinterested.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 9, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we would ask with the Apostle: "Lord to whom shall we go?" Thou hast the words of eternal life. Thou art the light that strikes its pathway of gold through the ages and art still the light of the world. Heavenly Father, the human intellect seems to be roving, like a flashlight through the night, feeling darkness everywhere. We pray for a light to guide us through the darkness, shedding its glow across a trackless desert; we beseech Thee for the mighty guiding beacon of the Christ in whom the heart and the mind of the Infinite One are revealed, who has no horizon and sees all things as they are. Do Thou endow us with the power and influence of His life—nobility of soul, purity of heart, a spirit overflowing with love, ceaseless activity in doing good, a conscience void of offense before God and man and the peace of mind that passeth all understanding, and Thine shall be the praise and glory forever. In our dear Redeemer's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. McDOWELL. Mr. Speaker, my home town of Wilkinsburg, in the last 150 years, has turned out a great many men of whom we are very proud, but Wilkinsburg has never been any prouder of any of them than it is at this minute of my old friend and neighbor, "Deacon Will" McKechnie, of the Cincinnati Reds, who lives up in my hills, world champion baseball manager and world champion all-round American citizen.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes tomorrow, after the disposition of the business on the Speaker's desk and following the legislative program of the day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to revise and extend my own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I have been seeing red for some time and I want all of you to see red. The danger signal of a defunct Treasury. I see red in this Government's statement that is being published every day in black by the white-faced Mr. Morgenthau. The great red deficit we are having in our daily black statements is appalling to the American people and we are not going to do anything but see red if we continue breaking down our financial structure. Then the whole Nation will be black. The reason we see red is because we have in the White House a green man in business experience who is trying to handle the affairs of this Government, and because of the fact that he has brought every New Deal Member into submission in voting for all the great expenditures of funds, and it is about time we changed the color from red to some other color if we want to keep this country of ours in a sound position where it can financially take care of national defense, of national welfare, and the happiness and contentment of the American people.

Our appropriations and contract authorizations have amounted to over $23,626,330,154 at this session, and where are you going to get the money to balance our Budget when our income will only be about $7,500,000,000, or we will be so far in the red in July 1940 and July 1941 that our very financial structure will crumble. It will be as a building builded on sand. If the winds of war materialize as we are preparing for them our house will fall. Our happiness will be gone, our Nation will be lost in poverty and trouble and what will our people then think? It is time we Americans wake up. Stop the dictatorship movement. Stop the third-term movement. Stop the war movement. It can be done on November 5 if the Americans elect Wendell Willkie as President—a man of ability, an honest American citizen whose word is good and who will respect his oath and obligation by preserving our Constitution, by enforcing our laws and by giving a sound, sensible business administration of Government affairs.

VOLUNTARY ENLISTMENTS, KOSSE, TEX.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, during recent months the subject of voluntary enlistment in the Army has been frequently discussed in the House, by the press, and throughout the country generally.

The town of Kosse, Limestone County, Tex., in the district which I have the honor to represent, has made a record of which I am proud. Over 50 young men living in that town and community have, within recent months, voluntarily enlisted in the Army and Navy of the United States for the defense of their country.

According to the preliminary estimate of the 1940 census, the population of Kosse is 879. I doubt if any other town that size in the United States can match that record of patriotism in enlistments. [Applause.]

I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a news item containing the names of these patriotic young men.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

CONGRESS SHOULD NOT ADJOURN

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one-half minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. HULL addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include an article by Tino Santella.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

CHICKAMAUGA AND CHATTANOOGA NATIONAL MILITARY PARKS

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 8512) to provide for the acquisition of additional lands for the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Parks, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, and agree to the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 2, line 8, after "appropriated", insert "a sum not to exceed $125,000."

Page 2, lines 9 and 10, strike out "such sums as the Congress may from time to time determine."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I make a parliamentary inquiry? If we object to this unanimous-consent request, will this prohibit going ahead with the expending of this money for this particular park at this time?

The SPEAKER. That is hardly a parliamentary inquiry. The gentleman knows if money is not appropriated it cannot be spent.

Mr. RICH. Then let me ask the gentleman a question. Is the spending of this money for this Chickamauga Park necessary, in the gentleman's judgment, for national defense, or for the promotion of the welfare of the American people to the extent that it is absolutely necessary at this time?

Mr. HILL. I will answer that indirectly by saying that we passed the bill without any limitation. The Senate put on a limitation, and it seems to me we ought to agree to that limitation, because it is better than it was when it passed here.

Mr. RICH. We certainly must have been asleep at the switch when we let a bill like that go through the House.

Mr. HILL. I may say it is strange if the gentleman from Pennsylvania was asleep at the switch, because he is always awake.

Mr. TARVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. TARVER. The bill was introduced by myself. It is to provide additional land for a national park that is within my district, within which there is a reservation known as Fort Oglethorpe. There is necessity for additional acreage for military purposes in that locality. While the bill carries no appropriation whatever, and is simply an authorization, it is one which is connected with national-defense considerations. The effect of the amendment to which concurrence is being asked would simply be to modify the provision in the bill already agreed to by the House, which leaves the amount which may be appropriated unlimited, by placing what the Senate believes to be a reasonable limit.

Mr. RICH. Even though this bill does not carry an appropriation, it is the intention of the gentleman to ask for the money from the Appropriation Committee?

Mr. TARVER. Oh, to be sure. I have tried to explain to the gentleman why, in my judgment, the bill is essential to the national defense.

Mr. RICH. There is nobody I would rather favor than the gentleman from Georgia, but I cannot permit this unanimous-consent request to go through now.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I object.

ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS IN VETERANS' LAWS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 8930) to amend section 202 (3), World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended, to provide more adequate and uniform administrative provisions in veterans' laws, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, and agree to the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 2, line 12, strike out "or" where it appears the first time.

Page 2, lines 12 and 13, strike out "compensation" and insert "compensation, a veteran discharged from the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard for disability incurred in line of duty, or a veteran of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard in receipt of pension for service-connected disability."

" 'III. "SEC. 12. Where any veteran suffers or has suffered an injury, or an aggravation of any existing injury, as the result of having submitted to an examination under authority of any of the laws granting monetary or other benefits to World War veterans, and not the result of his misconduct, and such injury or aggravation results in additional disability to or the death of such veteran, the veteran or his dependents shall be entitled to the same benefits as are provided for those who suffer an injury or an aggravation of any existing injury as a result of training, hospitalization, or medical or surgical treatment under the provisions of section 31 of Public Law No. 141, Seventy-third Congress, March 28, 1934. No benefits under this section shall be awarded unless application be made therefor within 2 years after such injury or aggravation was suffered, or such death occurred, or after the date of enactment of this act, whichever is the later date."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. GOSSETT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman withhold that for a moment?

Mr. GOSSETT. I will withhold it for the time being.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like very much to have that brought up later in the day. I have not seen the amendments, and other members of the committee have not seen them. We are very much in favor of this bill, but we want to be sure that the bill is not hurt by the Senate amendments. We had hoped that the Senate would add as amendments the bills that the House passed some time ago.

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, was this long epistle just read by the Clerk the Senate amendments?

Mr. RANKIN. Those were the amendments which the Clerk was reading.

Mr. MICHENER. It certainly is a complicated amendment.

Mr. RANKIN. I will say to the gentleman from Michigan that this is largely an administrative bill and was prepared and introduced at the request of the Veterans' Administration in order to iron out certain difficulties in administering veterans' loans. These amendments were put on in the Senate. The Veterans' Administration informed me that the amendments are satisfactory. Some of the veterans' organizations have got in touch with me already and have expressed their satisfaction.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. If the minority members of the committee who have studied it are favorable to this highly technical bill, no one else would be hardly safe in interposing an objection. The amendments, however, are so lengthy and apparently so far reaching that the committee should at least be very careful before it asks this House to pass these amendments under unanimous consent. The mere fact the Senate has put on these amendments certainly would be no reason why per se that they should be passed.

Mr. RANKIN. If I would agree to delay the procedure for a few hours, I hope the gentleman from Michigan will kindly read these amendments.

Mr. MICHENER. No; I shall not have time, but the members of the committee charged with the task certainly will.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, we are all very much interested in the veterans and want to be sure that what the Senate did to the bill has not injured the bill in any way.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I will withhold my request for the time being in order to allow the Members to study the Senate amendments.

VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—META DE RENE M'LOSKEY

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States which was read and together with the accompanying papers referred to the Committee on War Claims and ordered printed.

To the House of Representatives:

I am returning herewith, without approval, H. R. 554, entitled "An act for the relief of Meta De Rene McLoskey."

This bill authorizes and directs the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to pay to Meta De Rene McLoskey, mother of Arthur Lee McLoskey, formerly a member of Company I, Forty-seventh Regiment United States Infantry, who disappeared on May 7, 1918, all such installments of money which she would be entitled to receive as beneficiary of policy T–2024764. Such installments would amount to $13,800.

Arthur Lee McLoskey entered the Army March 29, 1918, and on April 2, 1918, he made application for $10,000 of war-risk term insurance naming Meta De Rene McLosky, as mother, as beneficiary. He was recorded as a deserter May 7, 1918, from Camp Mills, Long Island, N. Y. It is alleged that he has not been heard from since that date.

At the time of the soldier's disappearance there was sufficient pay due him, together with a 31-day-grace period, to have taken care of his insurance until July 31, 1918. The bill appears to be based upon the theory that, since a presumption of death attaches when there is an unexplained absence of 7 years, the death of the policyholder may be presumed to have occurred before July 31, 1918.

Under many authorities there is no presumption as to the time of death. In those cases and jurisdictions which allow any presumption as to the time of death, since the missing person is presumed to be alive during the 7-year period, death is presumed not to have occurred prior to the expiration of the period. While evidence to the contrary is admissible, no facts are available in this case to justify a finding that death occurred prior to July 31, 1918, and thus overcome the presumption.

Meta De Rene McLoskey brought suit in the United States District Court of the District of Indiana to recover war-risk insurance applied for by Arthur Lee McLoskey on the theory that his death was to be presumed from absence. This suit was dismissed by the plaintiff on June 1, 1926, after a hearing on the merits.

The Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, in recommending that the bill be not approved, advises me that its approval might be used as a precedent for many other cases where veterans have disappeared at a time when their insurance was in force and they have not since been heard from.

The provisions of this bill are identical with H. R. 4443, Seventy-fifth Congress, from which I withheld approval for the reasons indicated in my memorandum of disapproval dated June 23, 1938. No new evidence or information has been presented that would justify my approval of the present bill.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, October 9, 1940.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal.

FRAME FOR PAINTING OF THE SIGNING OF THE CONSTITUTION

Mr. SECREST. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 301 to authorize the acquisition of a suitable frame for the painting of the Signing of the Constitution to be used in mounting said painting in the Capitol Building.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, how much money does this joint resolution authorize?

Mr. SECREST. It authorizes the Architect of the Capitol to secure a frame not to exceed $1,500.

Mr. WOLCOTT. A frame for the picture?

Mr. SECREST. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Architect of the Capitol be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be constructed or to purchase, at a price not exceeding $1,500, a suitable frame for the painting of the scene at the Signing of the Constitution by Howard Chandler Christy, now on view in the Capitol Building. Such frame shall be subject to the approval of the Joint Committee on the Library, and, when so approved, shall be used for mounting the said painting in the Capitol Building as required by Public Resolution No. 11, Seventy-sixth Congress, approved April 20, 1939.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "purchase", insert "without reference to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 41, sec. 5)."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERSONAL PRIVILEGE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, the question here raised is based on two statements. The first is a statement not made on the floor of the House but contained in the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] and found on pages 12563 and 12564 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD under date of September 24, 1940. The statement as printed in the RECORD is as follows:

Although the gentleman from Michigan has not a single word of complaint against the high-salaried Republican labor-hating officials of the great corporations, he complains—

I shall be pleased to send my memoranda to the Speaker's desk to let the Speaker look it over without my reading it. I send it to the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman from Illinois ask and receive permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I understand he did, but he also inserted in the RECORD a statement in which he said I had made certain statements, apparently made on the floor of the House, but which I did not make. There are two branches to this. There is a newspaper clipping on which the question is also raised.

Mr. Speaker, in view of the absence of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] I ask unanimous consent that the material I sent to the Clerk's desk may be inserted in the RECORD and that we wait until he does arrive, at which time we can call it up.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN]?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT TO SECTION 4551 OF REVISED STATUTES AS AMENDED

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 9982) to amend section 4551 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, and for other purposes, with Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 3, line 1, after "them." insert: "This subsection shall not apply to any ferry or any tug used in connection with a ferry operation, if such ferry or tug is employed exclusively in trade on the Great Lakes, lakes (other than the Great Lakes), bays, sounds, bayous, canals, and harbors, and is not engaged on an international voyage."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND]?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has the gentleman taken up this amendment with the committee?

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I have taken this matter up with the gentleman from Maine [Mr. OLIVER], the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BRADLEY], and the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN], members of the committee, and they all state that the amendment should be adopted.

Mr. MICHENER. In reality the amendment is a limitation rather than an extension of the powers granted in the bill passed the other day?

Mr. BLAND. That is true.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND]?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT TO HOME OWNERS' LOAN ACT OF 1933, AS AMENDED

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Banking and Currency, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 9930) to amend the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, as amended.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE]?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT], the ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, is present. Has the gentleman conferred with him?

Mr. SPENCE. I have conferred with him; yes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, as I understand this bill and as I understood it when it was reported by the committee, it is to equalize a situation that exists with respect to tax exemption on Government-owned and controlled property here in the District of Columbia. In some manner the Home Loan Bank Building is not exempt, while the other buildings are and this is to equalize that situation. That is the reason it was unanimously reported by the committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE]?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the ninth sentence of subsection (c) of section 4 of Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, as amended, is hereby amended by striking the period at the end thereof and adding a colon and the following: "Provided, That any building now or hereafter owned by the Corporation in the District of Columbia and used principally as an office building of the Corporation, together with the land upon which the same stands, and all appurtenances, buildings, and land used principally in connection therewith, shall be exempt from any and all taxation heretofore or hereafter imposed."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION TO CUSTODIAL EMPLOYEES OF CERTAIN BENEFITS

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 892) to extend to custodial service employees employed by the Post Office Department certain benefits applicable to postal employees, with Senate amendments thereto and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments as follows:

Line 9, after "reached", insert ": Provided, That no individual employee shall receive an increase in excess of $60 per year."
Line 14, strike out "1939" and insert "1941."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON]?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this the same bill that the gentleman called up the other day to which the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] objected?

Mr. MASON. It is, and while the gentleman from New York still thinks it is a bad bill, he has stated he would not object. This is the bill that the Post Office Committee reported unanimously. It passed the House without any objection. It was amended in the Senate in just two particulars, one that the $100 maximum increase provided for in the bill shall be reduced to a $60 maximum, and the other changing the date from 1939 to 1941.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman has talked with the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] since he objected?

Mr. MASON. I have.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. TABER understands that the bill is to be brought up?

Mr. MASON. Yes; and he has consented to it.

Mr. ROMJUE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. ROMJUE. The judgment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] is that the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] probably was not thoroughly familiar with the facts in this case?

Mr. MASON. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON]?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDING SECTION 204 OF THE TRANSPORTATION ACT OF 1920

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 10098) to amend section 204 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to further amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce', approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes", approved February 28, 1920.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 204 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to further amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes," approved February 28, 1920, as amended by the act approved March 4, 1927 (44 Stat. L. 1446), be amended and reenacted by adding thereto the following new paragraphs (i), (j), and (k), as follows:

"(i) That the term 'deficit in its railway operating income,' as that term is used in paragraph (a), shall be construed to mean a deficiency or decrease in the carrier's railway operating income for that portion (as a whole) of the period of Federal control during which it operated its own railroad as compared with its average railway operating income for the corresponding portion of the test period, as held in Construction of the Word 'Deficit' (66 I. C. C. 765, 774)."

"(j) That the Commission is hereby authorized and directed to reopen all claims heretofore filed by carriers in compliance with its orders or regulations issued under this section and to ascertain and certify to the Secretary of the Treasury such amounts, if any, as may be payable to any such carriers under said section 204 as hereby amended: Provided, That the aggregate of the railway operating income of any carrier during that part of the period of Federal control during which such carrier was not operated by the Director General of Railroads plus the amount certified by the Commission under this act shall not for said period be at a rate in excess of 5¾ percent per annum of the value of the carrier's property determined by the Commission under section 19a of the Interstate Commerce Act.

"(k) This act shall take effect as of March 1, 1920, but shall not be construed as extending the time for filing claims as limited by paragraph (h) of section 204, as amended by the act of March 4, 1927."

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PATRICK] is recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. WOLVERTON] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield, so that I may propound a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. PATRICK. I yield.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, according to the rules, certain days are designated on which motions to suspend the rules are in order. I surely am not opposed to this bill, but can the Chair inform the House if by any action of the House that rule has been suspended to authorize the Speaker to recognize Members to move to suspend the rules today?

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent was granted on yesterday that the Chair may on today recognize Members to move to suspend the rules.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, this is a measure on which we had pretty detailed hearings before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. The bill passed the subcommittee and the committee unanimously. This is an equitable matter that arose in 1920 and right thereafter. The purpose of the bill is simply to define the term "deficit in railway operating income" as used in the Transportation Act of 1920, and this bill is really an amendment to the Transportation Act of 1920.

When the railroads were turned back after a period of 26 months it was found that a number of short-line railroads, a few more than a hundred, had sustained a considerable loss. I shall not attempt to go into the devious causes for this, but there were a number of combined causes that brought the railroads severe losses. In writing the Transportation Act of 1920 the term "deficit in railway-operating income" became the point of decision as to whether recovery would or would not be had. Originally the Interstate Commerce Commission ruled that that would be an operating red ink deficit, and it became a technical matter as to when there was a deficit. Then they went into construction of the word "deficit," and this is reported in Sixty-sixth Interstate Commerce Commission Reports, and it was held that the word "deficit" should be construed as meaning a decrease in net railway operating income from that period. Then they receded from that interpretation, but 72 of the railroads got in under the previous interpretation and received payment of their claims.

Forty-six railroads did not get in in time and, as a result, unless they had an actual below-the-line red ink loss they got nothing. The claims they had that lapped over came to $5,417,000. The bill as now written limits the rate of return to 5¾ percent, which limits it to $1,869,353 for the whole amount involved for the 46 railways.

There perhaps are a few other points which might be mentioned, but that covers it briefly, enough to give a working idea of what is before us.

This situation has been going on all these years. Most of the railroads were in litigation on the matter. They found that all statutes of limitation had wound up, and the only door left to these short-line railways to recover what is obviously a just claim was to get legislation; therefore this amendment is now before you.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATRICK. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. This bill does not affect present-day rates?

Mr. PATRICK. No.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Neither does it affect the working conditions of the employees of the railroads?

Mr. PATRICK. No; it does not do anything except pay this equitable claim that unquestionably should have been paid.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATRICK. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. If this bill passes, it means that $1,869,353 will be paid out of the Treasury?

Mr. PATRICK. That is right.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will interest be allowed?

Mr. PATRICK. No.

Mr. COCHRAN. This is simply opening up the old valuation cases that have already been decided?

Mr. PATRICK. No, they have all been decided except these. Everything has been decided, sealed, signed, and delivered, except these. There were 72 railroads that got in before the Interstate Commerce Commission dropped back to the original construction of the term "deficit."

Mr. COCHRAN. Were there any decisions of any courts not favorable to the lines you seek to reimburse here?

Mr. PATRICK. The only decisions I recall that came up in our hearings were where the courts held to the ruling of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. COCHRAN. The committee report contains a letter from the chairman of the legislative committee of the Interstate Commerce Commission, Mr. Eastman, which is in small type and covers practically 2 pages. Of course, we have not had time to read it, but I notice that the following sentence appears:

> For the reasons above indicated the legislative committee disapproves H. R. 10098 and recommends that it do not pass.

What are the reasons given in that letter, does the gentleman know? Of course, he must have read the letter.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Eastman appeared before our committee and gave us more information on this subject than any man who appeared before us. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SOUTH], who was chairman of the committee, can throw more light on it than I can, and it may be that he would like to do so.

Mr. SOUTH rose.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Eastman says in his letter that the legislative committee of the Interstate Commerce Commission recommends that the bill do not pass.

Mr. PATRICK. I will yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SOUTH].

Mr. COCHRAN. Of course, there being nearly two pages of small type no one other than the committee has had an opportunity to read it, because this bill came up hurriedly.

Mr. PATRICK. He certainly did not oppose the bill.

Mr. SOUTH. I think the gentleman from Missouri will find this to be true. The bill to which Mr. Eastman's letter refers has been changed and the matter that the House is now asked to pass upon involves a great deal less money; it has certain limitations that the original bill did not have and, therefore, the objections that Mr. Eastman raised to the original bill probably would not apply to the pending bill.

Mr. COCHRAN. I have the bill in my hand that Mr. Eastman refers to, H. R. 10098, and it is beyond me to see anything in the three pages of this bill to show that there is one amendment of any kind.

Mr. SOUTH. I will say to the gentleman that it has been amended just as I have told him.

Mr. COCHRAN. I have the bill right here and there is no amendment indicated.

Mr. SOUTH. Just a minute now—the bill as originally introduced provided for several million dollars.

Mr. PATRICK. Five million four hundred seventeen thousand four hundred and eighty dollars.

Mr. SOUTH. It provided further that certain roads that had already earned 15 percent might recover further. The pending bill is less than $2,000,000 and fixes a definite maximum of 5¾ percent.

Mr. PATRICK. And that brings it to $1,869,353.

Mr. COCHRAN. The number of the pending bill is 10098.

Mr. SOUTH. I care nothing about the number.

Mr. COCHRAN. And Mr. Eastman speaks of the pending bill as 10098.

Mr. SOUTH. What is the date of Mr. Eastman's communication?

Mr. COCHRAN. It is dated June 24, 1940, and this bill was introduced June 17, 1940, and reported by the committee on August 22, 1940, without an amendment of any kind.

Mr. SOUTH. I believe the changes I am referring to have been made since that time.

Mr. COCHRAN. I may say to the gentleman from Texas that I have the bill as reported by the committee without any change whatever.

Mr. SOUTH. What is the date of it?

Mr. COCHRAN. It was reported on August 22, 1940, without one change or amendment of any kind.

Mr. SOUTH. What is the date of Mr. Eastman's letter? It is before that, is it not?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Eastman's letter was written 7 days after the bill, which I hold in my hand and which we are considering, was introduced in the House.

Mr. SOUTH. Check that again—I think the gentleman may be mistaken about that.

Mr. COCHRAN. The letter is dated June 24, 1940. I read from the report. The gentleman from California [Mr. LEA] introduced the bill 7 days before that, and Mr. Eastman writes the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA] in response to Mr. LEA's letter of June 18, a day following the date when the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA] introduced the bill, in reference to the bill, H. R. 10098, and he offers objections to this measure in that letter and in the concluding paragraph states, "for the reasons above indicated the legislative committee disapproves H. R. 10098 and recommends that it do not pass," and nobody can find in this bill one amendment of any kind or any kind of a change that has been made since the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA] introduced the bill on June 17.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATRICK. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. LEA. I think there is a misapprehension about the situation. The Interstate Commerce Commission rendered two decisions, in fact, three decisions. In 1922 the Commission rendered an exhaustive decision in which they approved of exactly what is in this bill as we now have it; that is, in the main part of the bill, and they held that the roads were entitled to be paid in proportion to what they earned during the test period. In 1924, they reviewed that decision and again reached the same conclusion. In 1925, after they had settled for 72 claims, some more claims were presented, which involved excessive amounts, and in that decision they held that a road was not entitled to recover unless it was in the red during the Federal control period. So, the Eastman statement conforms to the last decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission, but years before that the Commission recommended that the proper way to take care of this problem and settle all doubt about the law was for Congress to clarify the decisions, and that is what we are trying to do here.

Mr. COCHRAN. But let us take the last four paragraphs of Mr. Eastman's letter:

> It should be borne in mind that these claimants were not under Federal control during the period for which this compensation is sought. They were managing their own properties and their claims are based on the allegation that the control of the other railroads by the Government had an unfavorable effect on them.
> The payments authorized by section 204 may be regarded as a gratuity, and there is good reason to believe that Congress intended to limit them to compensation for actual loss. In any event, as above stated, there was no intention on the part of Congress in 1920 to provide any given rate of return on their investment.
> In conclusion, a few practical aspects of the matter should be mentioned. Quite a number of these railroad companies have abandoned their lines and gone out of business. In such instances the records would be hard to check. Furthermore, the Commission's staff of employees which handled these claims has long since been disbanded, and some of those employees are no longer in the service of the Commission. It would be difficult under present conditions to rebuild the organization necessary to a reconsideration of these claims.

Then in the final paragraph he says:

> For the reasons above indicated the legislative committee disapproves H. R. 10098 and recommends that it do not pass.

Mr. PATRICK. We can only say that Mr. Eastman appeared before the committee and testified, and it was largely the testimony that he gave which brought the whole matter to a final conclusion.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to reserve the balance of my time and hear from the minority leader of our committee, who has 20 minutes.

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to correct an injustice which has resulted to certain short-line railroads as a result of the definition which has been given to the word "deficit" by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

In 1920 legislation was enacted to enable the Interstate Commerce Commission to make adjustments with the railroads of the country growing out of the Federal control of railroads during the World War. All of these adjustments with large class I railroads have been made and settled. Adjustments have also been made with most of the short lines. However, there are approximately 42 such railroads which have not as yet had any adjustment or settlement.

The difficulty with respect to these latter railroads grows out of the fact that the Interstate Commerce Commission has reversed the ruling which was the basis for the adjustments already made. The short-line railroads which would benefit by the passage of this bill are those which had filed claims, within the time required by the act, but, which had not been adjusted prior to the time when the Interstate Commerce Commission reversed itself.

It would seem fair and just that the claims of these railroads, which through no fault of their own have not been adjusted, should be adjusted on the basis of the same interpretation of the law by the Interstate Commerce Commission as originally prevailed, and, on the basis of which other adjustments of similar character were made.

If adjustments were to be made on the exact basis as previously prevailed it would require the expenditure of approximately $5,000,000. However, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has reported the bill now under consideration which limits the recovery of losses to a 5¾-percent basis. This method of compensation of losses decreases the amount payable to an aggregate of approximately $1,800,000.

While I am inclined to the belief that these short-line railroads, still unpaid, have much justification for the claim that they should be paid upon the same basis as the others already settled with, yet, I understand that they are willing to accept payment, on the basis provided for in this bill, as full settlement. Justice and fair dealing require that some settlement be made of this long drawn-out controversy, and I recommend the passage of this bill to accomplish the purpose.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman says the Interstate Commerce Commission reversed itself. Did it not reverse itself only insofar as the definition of the word "deficit" was concerned?

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. That is true, and that is what made the difficulty in the case and necessitates this legislation. Under the construction that the Interstate Commerce Commission now gives to the word "deficit," it precludes the payment of the claims which this bill seeks to adjust and settle. Previously the Commission defined "deficit," in a manner that has enabled all class I railroads and 70 or more short line railroads to receive payment of their claims. Then the Commission at a later date reversed its previous decision. This had the effect of preventing the short line roads, whose claims had not been adjusted, from receiving compensation on the same basis as other railroads, large and small, whose claims had been adjusted and settled before the Commission reversed itself.

Mr. COCHRAN. One more short question, please. The gentleman says this is a unanimous report from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce?

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. That is correct.

Mr. COCHRAN. This unanimous report comes in face of the adverse report of the legislative committee of the Interstate Commerce Commission upon this very bill. Is that not correct?

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. The recommendation for favorable consideration of this bill is opposite to the recommendation of the legislative committee of the Commission. Our committee cannot see justice in a position that enables the Interstate Commerce Commission to pay claims of all the large roads and most of the small roads and then reverse itself and thereby preclude other short lines, with similar claims and whose claims had not been heard, from receiving any compensation for losses sustained. Cases that are similar in character should have similarity of treatment. It is a question of equity. I assume the Interstate Commerce Commission has not recommended the passage of this bill because it wishes to stand on the reasoning contained in the opinion which reversed its first decision. The House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce feels that the interpretation that made possible payment to others should apply to all, and that all should be treated alike, and that there should be no different treatment as between them.

Mr. COCHRAN. As a matter of fact, the big roads were under control of the Government, and it is a further fact that these very roads to which you want the taxpayers of the United States now to contribute over $1,800,000 were never under control of the Government. Is that not true?

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. That is not the situation.

Mr. COCHRAN. That is what the report from the Interstate Commerce Commission says.

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. That is not exactly the situation. The hearings developed that, notwithstanding the fact that some short lines may not have been under direct control of the Government, yet nevertheless they were tied in with roads that were under Federal control, and this produced conditions that caused short lines a loss of revenue, which they are entitled to be paid for, the same as the other roads which have had their claims adjusted and settled.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman admit that this is purely a gratuity and not even a moral obligation on the part of the Government?

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. My opinion is just the opposite. I am of the opinion that it is not only a moral obligation but that it also has a legal status, based upon the interpretation given to the word "deficit" by the Interstate Commerce Commission when it originally decided the cases where payments have already been made. The cases to which this bill applies are no different in principle from those already settled.

This is not a gratuity, unless the payment of a claim rightly due is to be considered a gratuity.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman's opinion, then, is in direct contrast to that of the representatives of the legislative committee of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. I am of the opinion that equity and justice should prevail to all alike. If the recommendation of the Interstate Commerce Commission should prevail, it would have the effect of denying the right of settlement to numerous short lines of claims that are just and should be paid.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. I yield.

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 7 additional minutes.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Is it not true that although these short lines were not under the control of the Government during the World War, yet they were participants in the rates in effect at that time with the results they should be accorded the same treatment as accorded other roads taken over by the Government during the World War?

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. The gentleman is correct. He has stated the situation as it actually was in many of the cases where loss was sustained.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. I yield.

Mr. KEAN. Why did they wait 15 years to attend to this?

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. It has not been a case of waiting 15 years before they presented their claims. There has been an effort all through the years to obtain relief from the I. C. C. This relief has not been obtained, and it has been determined that the only certain way of doing justice to the companies which have been precluded from obtaining adjustment of their claims because of a reversal of the opinion originally rendered by the Interstate Commerce Commission, is to bring before Congress legislation to enable these lines to be paid on the basis of the opinion as originally rendered by the Interstate Commerce Commission. That is all this bill seeks to do.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. I yield.

Mr. PATRICK. As I remember the testimony it was to the effect that each of these railroads here involved was itself then pursuing a claim of some nature or was depending upon another similarly situated claim. The railroads had nothing to do with the claims which were pending. The Interstate Commerce Commission decided 72 cases and then changed their opinion. Forty-six companies were left out, although they were in the same class with the others. That is the reason this legislation is introduced to relieve them.

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. The statement that has been made by the gentleman from Alabama is a correct review of the situation. I wish to say in addition to what my friend has just said that the door is not opened by this bill for new claims to be filed. The claims are specifically held to those claims which were filed within the time fixed by the provisions of the original bill. The claims to be adjusted under the terms of this bill are only those which had not been acted upon by the Commission before it reversed itself.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. What method is provided for the ascertainment of the amount due to the railroads under these claims?

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. The method of ascertaining the amount to be paid has been determined by the Commission. It was applied with respect to the many railroad companies, both large and small, whose claims have already been adjusted, settled, and paid. It is merely the application of the same principles that have already been applied by the Commission in previous cases, before the Commission reversed itself, except that this bill limits the recovery to a 5¾-percent basis.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. So the Government will have its rights protected by an ascertainment of the amount. This is not just the arbitrary payment of a certain amount.

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. The gentleman is correct. The amount payable to any short-line railroad coming within the provisions of this bill will be ascertained upon the facts as they apply to each individual case. It is not an arbitrary amount to be paid.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. I yield.

Mr. LEA. I call attention to the fact that the act of 1920 directed the Interstate Commerce Commission to assemble all the information so they would be in position to certify to the Treasury the exact amount to which each road was entitled. That was done. What is proposed here is to put these railroads on the same general basis of compensation, based on the same type of computation as applied to railroads to which several hundreds of millions of dollars were paid.

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. The chairman of the committee has correctly stated the situation with respect to the matter.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. I yield.

Mr. KEAN. What is the reason for limiting it to 5¾ percent? Did not the other railroads get more than the 5¾ percent? It seems to me the railroads either ought to get what they are entitled to or else nothing; it is one or the other.

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. I am of the same opinion as the gentleman from New Jersey so far as he has stated that all should be treated alike. I think as a matter of principle they should all be paid on the same basis. I assume, however, they are willing to take less than was received by the others in an effort to get some settlement of a debt the payment of which has been too long delayed. Evidently they are discouraged and would rather take a small amount and have something than to continue trying for the full amount, that they are really entitled to, and possibly get nothing. It is a case where payment of a just claim has been too long delayed and the claimants are glad to get almost anything in settlement.

Mr. KEAN. In the hope of getting the bill through.

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. I think it is unfortunate that it has to be dealt with in that way.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, a brief review of the facts concerning this question will justify the bill presented to the House today.

The Federal Government took over the railroads into Federal control on the 1st of January 1918, and released them 26 months later.

Congress passed an act providing for the compensation of the owners of the roads for the period of Federal control under a plan which, roughly speaking, provided that the carriers would be given an income equal to the average they had received for a 3-year test period covering a specified time before Government control.

Within 6 months from the beginning of Federal control the Director General of Railroads made an order for the release of the short lines from Federal control. Congress then passed a resolution which would have prevented release of any short line without its consent. This clearly indicated the purpose of Congress to treat the short lines the same as other roads.

The President vetoed the resolution, properly enough, because it took in lines not directly affected by Federal control.

When the Transportation Act of 1920 was passed it provided for including the short lines in competition with, or connected with, roads under Federal control. Section 204 was enacted for this purpose. It made section 209 and section 1 of the Federal Control Act, in part, applicable in determining the compensation to be provided for the short lines.

Though these provisions are not free from doubt, it seems fairly clear that Congress intended to give the short lines a compensation generally comparable to that already afforded the class I roads. These three sections must be read together. Parts of section 204 have little pertinent meaning except on the general theory that the short lines were to be compensated on a comparable basis to their earnings during the test period.

The short lines covered by this bill helped to carry their part of the transportation burdens of the war, proportionately, as the standard lines. That they had burdens and handicaps due to the Federal control has been generally conceded. This is attested from the decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission of February 1, 1922.

The interpretation of the present law, as construed by the Interstate Commerce Commission in that decision, is embodied in the exact language of subsection (i) of this bill. Following that decision, the Interstate Commerce Commission made settlements with 72 roads, to which $2,836,000 was paid on the basis defined in this bill so far as subsection (i) is concerned. Broadly speaking, that meant that the short-line railroads of the class mentioned in this bill were paid a compensation for the period of Federal control—an amount equivalent to their operating income during the test period. That they were paid that amount notwithstanding the earnings of the road in the test period may have been excessively above a fair return.

This decision of the Commission was reviewed and reconfirmed in 1924. In 1925, without any further hearing, the Commission reversed its decision of 1922. It denied settlement to 46 or more roads who had claims of over $4,500,000 on the ground that only roads which operated in the red during the Federal-control period were entitled to compensation.

The decision of 1922 was to the direct contrary. That decision declared, in substance, that to deny a road compensation because it had a meager return during Federal control, notwithstanding a much more favorable return during the test period, would result in unfair discriminations against the roads of small returns during Federal control.

In the decision of 1925 the Commission expressed the decided view that roads which had large earnings in the Federal-control period should not be given increased amounts because of greater operating income during the test period.

These two decisions are, of course, conflicting. Together they indicate two possible interpretations of the existing law. They indicate that either of the interpretations leads to an unjust, if not an absurd result. The interpretation which would hold that a road must be in the "red" under the control period before it can receive a compensation comparable to the test period would have the effect of denying any return to the road which made a mere nominal return in the control period. For instance, a road which in 20 months made a profit of $10 on a $5,000,000 investment would be entitled to no return, while the same road in the "red" to the extent of $10 during the Federal control would be entitled to a return equal to its operating income of the test period regardless of how large that income might have been. On the other hand, it would be unjust, if not absurd, to hold that a road which made 12 percent in the test period should be entitled to 12 percent during the period of Federal control. In fixing railroad rates on a plane basis some individual road may make much more than a fair rate. When the Government takes over that road it should not be entitled, in my judgment, to more than a fair return.

In the decision of 1925 it was pointed out that one of the roads that had applied for compensation had an operating income of about 18 percent during the test period, which was greater than its income during the control period. It sought to equal its 18-percent return made during the test period. Rightfully enough, the Commission found fault with the charge against the Government for that amount.

So it clearly appears that either of the two interpretations lead to unjust and undesirable results. In one instance, the injustice is against the claimant who had a reduced and meager return during the Federal-control period. In the other case the injustice is against the Government in compelling it to pay excessive amounts to equalize the operating income with excessive returns received during the test period.

Some years ago the Commission very properly recommended to Congress that the proper remedy for the situation was legislation which would clarify and correct the language of existing law. That is what should have been done years ago. That is what is done by this bill.

The bill before us provides, in substance, that these claimants shall be entitled to an income equaling only that received by them during their test period. It is further provided in section (j) that the compensation thus paid shall not, with the operating income received during the period of Federal control, exceed 5¾ percent per annum.

In other words, the road will not be paid an income exceeding that it received during its test period. In any event, it will not be paid an amount more than is sufficient to make its net operating income 5¾ percent per annum.

The practical effect of these provisions on the claims affected by this bill is that the claims for over $5,400,000 will be reduced to $1,869,000. This reduction is made by excluding applicants from participation whose operating income during the Federal-control period exceeded 5¾ percent per annum. In other words, this bill reduces the claims by almost two-thirds of their original amount. It gives a fair compensation to the roads which had favorable returns during the test period and meager returns during the control period; it eliminates compensation to roads which had excessive earnings during the control period, regardless of their larger earnings during the test period.

CRITICISMS BY THE COMMISSION

Objection is made that the Interstate Commerce Commission, consistent with its last decision, did not approve the passage of this bill. The Interstate Commerce Commission is composed of men of fine ability and purpose, but they are only agents of Congress in deciding questions like this. Their recommendations are not better than their reasons. The Interstate Commerce Commission performs its correct function when it advises Congress, and it does not, and does not desire to, dominate congressional action.

The recommendation of the Interstate Commerce Commission is discounted by its own record in this case. Its last decision was based on technical grounds. Its first decision attempted to carry out what was manifestly the purpose of Congress.

As to the merits of the existing law the Commission directed only two substantial criticisms. In the first decision, it was pointed out that to deny roads any compensation because they made a meager return during the period of Federal control would result in "unjust discriminations." In other words, there would be an absurdity in denying a road any compensation comparable to the test period because it made a very meager return in the Federal-controlled period. In the final decision, the Commission justly criticized the law because it would require excessive compensation to roads which made excessive returns during the test period. The bill before us positively corrects each of these substantive criticisms of the Commission. To the roads of meager returns, we give a modest return but not exceeding their test period operating income.

As to the roads which had excessive earnings, we eliminate them from any compensation whatsoever by providing nothing for the road which had an operating income exceeding 5¾ percent during Federal control, regardless of how much larger its returns may have been during the test period. In other words, here we have a bill that meets every substantive criticism of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The additional reasons suggested in the report of the legislative committee of the Commission can hardly be regarded as persuasive. Twenty years ago Congress determined specifically in section 204 to compensate roads of the general class included in this bill. That is not a question now. Seventy-two roads of this class were compensated by the action of the Commission itself. After such a settlement, the Commission is not in a tenable position to recommend against this much more modest basis of compensation to the roads which have not received any compensation. These roads were under the same type of management as the roads which have been compensated.

As pointed out in the earlier decision of the Commission itself, they suffered the unfavorable burdens of Federal control. There is just as much reason to compensate the roads provided for in this bill as to compensate any other road affected by section 204.

This bill, as it is drawn, gives no compensation above the test period operating income; it limits and reduces the amount now provided by section 204 so far as the prosperous roads are concerned.

The Commission was directed to assemble all the information necessary to make these adjustments in the act of 1920 and those records are doubtless available for use at the present time.

The Commission, in its two decisions, attempted to reach conclusions to avoid the absurdities in the present law which are cured by this bill. The Commission recommended legislation for this purpose several years ago. The whole record of the Commission would be better justified by supporting this bill than by any adverse reasons now advanced.

In my judgment, the bill is a just compromise of the complicated uncertainties of the present act. It does justice for the roads and justice for the Government.

Technical analysis can unquestionably create doubts as to the interpretation of this law. It seems to me, looking at the substantive case, the original intent of Congress is fairly clear. Former Congressman Esch, who was chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and had charge of this legislation in the House when it was enacted, was a member of the Commission when the decision of 1922 was made. Mr. Esch said, "It seems clear that the purpose and the intent of Congress was to reimburse carriers for losses sustained because of Federal control."

I submit this is a just bill which should be enacted.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself one-half minute.

I may say that representatives of the railroad company stated to me—I do not know who else was present—that they decided they would rather take a small loaf than to get no bread at all.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SOUTH] chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Speaker, I was in error in assuming that the letter from Mr. Eastman had been written before this particular bill had been drafted. I was not in error, however, in saying that the bill as originally introduced and when first considered by our committee provided for some $5,000,000 as against less than $2,000,000 here, and also provided that certain roads which had earned 14 or 15 percent would be entitled to more money; that is, they would be entitled to their earnings during the so-called test period.

So far as I know, I have no railroad in my district that would be benefited by the passage of this bill. So far as I know, there is no railroad in my State that would benefit under its provisions.

The chairman of our committee the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA] wrote Commissioner Eastman and asked him if the Commission would be in any way embarrassed by this legislation which, as already stated, means a different interpretation of the term "deficit."

Mr. Eastman replied, as follows:

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION,
Washington, April 29, 1940.

Hon. CLARENCE F. LEA,
Chairman, Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CHAIRMAN LEA: In accordance with your request, I have examined H. R. 4103 for the purpose of considering whether the definition of the term "deficit in railway operating income" which it establishes for the purposes of section 204 (a) of the Transportation Act, 1920, would cause any embarrassment with respect to the future use of that term in our connections. While this question is not free from doubt, my best judgment is that such embarrassment would not be likely to arise. I suggest, however, that the provision in question, on page 2 of H. R. 4103, might well be rephrased to read as follows:

"(i) That the term 'deficit in its railway operating income,' as that term is used in paragraph (a), shall be construed to mean a deficiency or decrease in the carrier's railway operating income for that portion (as a whole) of the period of Federal control during which it operated its own railroad as compared with its average railway-operating income for the corresponding portion of the test period, as held in Construction of the word 'deficit' (66 I. C. C. 765, 774)."

Very sincerely yours,

JOSEPH B. EASTMAN.

The exact language which he recommended was substituted. The term "deficit" was first interpreted by the I. C. C. in a manner that would permit recovery by these roads. It was later interpreted by the Commission in a way that precluded recovery. This bill, it seem to me, is a fair compromise. These short lines were not under Government supervision in the true sense of the word, neither were they entirely free from the effect of Government supervision. Anyone who has studied the question, I think, will admit that. This bill has been pending in the courts and before the Congress for a great many years. The committee that conducted the hearings, and later the full committee that heard the report, reached a unanimous decision that this bill would be a pretty fair compromise. The roads are entitled to something. Under this bill no road will receive in excess of 5¾ percent, whereas some of the roads that have heretofore recovered received several times that amount. As I say, it is almost immaterial to me, and certainly from a personal standpoint it is entirely immaterial, but I believe this bill is a fair compromise and I think it ought to pass.

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CURTIS].

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CURTIS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House suspend the rules and pass the bill?

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COCHRAN) there were—ayes 77, noes 4.

So, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ACQUISITION OF ADDITIONAL LANDS FOR CHICKAMAUGA AND CHATTANOOGA NATIONAL MILITARY PARK

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 8512) to provide for the acquisition of additional lands for the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 2, line 8, after "appropriated", insert "a sum not to exceed $125,000."

Page 2, lines 9 and 10, strike out "such sums as the Congress may from time to time determine."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER]?

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this the bill that was objected to yesterday?

Mr. TARVER. Yes; it was objected to yesterday by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], who is present now and, I understand, does not propose to further urge his objection.

Mr. REED of New York. Has he withdrawn his objection?

Mr. TARVER. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill was called up and was objected to previously?

Mr. TARVER. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL] has talked to me about this, and I yield to him for any statement he desires to make.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, as I understand the bill as it passed the House, it contained an authorization without limitation?

Mr. TARVER. That is right.

Mr. ENGEL. And as amended by the Senate, the authorization is limited to $125,000?

Mr. TARVER. That is correct.

Mr. ENGEL. Should the House not adopt the Senate amendment, and should the Senate recede, which, of course, might happen, then the bill would stand as the House passed it without any limitation whatever?

Mr. TARVER. The authorization would be unlimited, and there should be a limitation.

Mr. ARENDS. Did the gentleman who objected a while ago withdraw his objection?

Mr. TARVER. I have not conferred with that gentleman, but the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL] has. I understand there was some misunderstanding about the matter and that there is no objection now.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER]?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT TO AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT OF 1938

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 4374) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That paragraph (15) of subsection (b) of section 301 of subtitle A of title III of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, is amended by striking out the words—

"Fire-cured and dark air-cured tobacco, comprising types 21, 22, 23, 24, 35, 36, and 37;" and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"Fire-cured tobacco, comprising types 21, 22, 23, and 24;

"Dark air-cured tobacco, comprising types 35 and 36;

"Virginia sun-cured tobacco, comprising types 37;"

SEC. 2. That section 312 of subtitle B of title III of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, is amended by striking out subsections (b), (d), (e), and (f) of such section, by striking out all of the second sentence in subsection (c) of such section, and by changing the subsection designation "(c)" therein to "(b)."

SEC. 3. The last sentence of section 301 (a) (1) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"The base period in case of all agricultural commodities except tobacco shall be the period August 1909 to July 1914. In the case of all kinds of tobacco except burley and flue-cured such base period shall be the period August 1919 to July 1929, and, in the case of burley and flue-cured tobacco, shall be the period August 1934 to July 1939; except that the August 1919–July 1929 base period shall be used in allocating any funds appropriated prior to September 1, 1940."

SEC. 4. That section 301 (b) (15) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, is amended by striking out the period at the end of the last sentence thereof and adding a colon and the following: "Provided, That any one or more of the types comprising any such kind of tobacco shall be treated as a 'kind of tobacco' for the purposes of this act if the Secretary finds there is a difference in supply and demand conditions as among such types of tobacco which results in a difference in the adjustments needed in the marketings thereof in order to maintain supplies in line with demand."

SEC. 5. That section 312 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, is amended by striking out subsection (b) thereof.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I demand a second, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLANNAGAN] is recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDRESEN] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 7 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, the tobacco representatives in the House, as I understand, are unanimously in favor of this piece of legislation. It has been considered and passed by the Senate. The same bill has been considered by the House Committee on Agriculture and unanimously reported to the House.

In presenting the merits of this bill, I desire to preface my remarks by calling attention to the fact that the tobacco growers of America during the depression have never called upon the Federal Government to contribute one penny in the way of parity or benefit payments. The tobacco program has been self-sustaining, and it is the only farm program that has been self-sustaining. We have appropriated millions of dollars to take care of the wheat growers and the corn growers but not one penny to take care of the tobacco growers of America, and this in spite of the fact that the tobacco growers of this country contribute to the Federal Treasury more than half a billion dollars in the way of taxes each year.

Now, we are faced with a rather serious situation due to the European conflict. A great part of some of our types of tobacco is exported. We find that some of the types that have been heretofore grouped together are demanding that they be given the right to hold a separate referendum, due to the fact that the export trade has reduced the probable amount of tobacco that can be sold in a particular type more than it has that of another type heretofore grouped with it. We are only asking that the tobacco growers of each particular type be permitted to pass upon whether or not they desire to establish quotas, and if so, at what poundage the quota shall be fixed. No one can object to that amendment. It is only fair and right to bring this question back to the growers of the particular type to be affected and let them pass upon what they think would be a fair quota. As I have stated, I understand, there is no objection to that provision of the bill.

When we originally passed the A. A. A. Act back in 1933 we found it impossible to find a base period that would give the tobacco growers in the flue-cured and burley types parity. We figured out at that time the best period we could. The general provision in the original A. A. A. Act was from 1909 to 1914. At that time the tobacco base period was fixed from 1919 to 1929, in order to bring the price nearer to parity. Since that time we have made a marked success, in my opinion, of the tobacco program.

However, due to the European conflict and the further fact that the cost of producing burley and flue-cured tobacco has greatly increased by reason of the fact that a greater percentage of the crop goes into cigarettes, and it takes more labor, time, and effort to produce a leaf that will go into the cigarette trade—we find that the base period from 1919 to 1929 is now manifestly unfair.

Let me give you a few figures showing just how the cigarette industry has developed in the last few years. In this country the percentage of flue-cured tobacco consumed in the form of cigarettes increased from 19 percent in the years 1909 to 1913, to 70 percent in the 10 years 1920 to 1929, and to 79 percent during the years 1935 to 1939. Practically the same increase has taken place in burley. In order to produce a cigarette tobacco, we have to space the plants closer together in order to produce a thinner leaf. This involves a good deal more work. Moreover, the tobacco is lighter, and you get less poundage per acre.

We find today that under the base period from 1919 to 1929, originally established in the A. A. A. legislation, the parity price is away below the cost price. We are only asking that we be given a more favorable period, the period from 1934 to 1939, so we will be able to participate in some of the benefit payments if our tobacco prices tumble. It is estimated by the Department of Agriculture that not more than 1 or 2 percent of the funds available for this purpose will ever be used for tobacco. We do believe, in justice to the tobacco growers, that we are entitled to this piece of legislation at this time because we are confronted with an emergency. I believe this House should show the tobacco growers every consideration in view of the fact that we contribute to the Federal Government over $500,000,000 each year and have never received one penny in return in the way of benefit or parity payments. [Applause.]

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, this bill establishes a bad precedent. It establishes the precedent of setting up special and preferential treatment for one commodity, without having committee hearings on the proposition, and without giving an opportunity to the House to amend the bill after consideration. In bringing this bill up under suspension the bill is not open to amendment. All we can do is to point out the effects of this bill.

I am interested in the bill not because I am particularly interested in tobacco but because I am interested in what this bill does to the Agricultural Adjustment Act. The effect of this bill is to set up separate classifications for types of tobaccos, and the effect also is to transfer to tobacco about $2,500,000 that would otherwise be available for the payment of benefits to other commodities which have not enjoyed parity prices.

In the consideration of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, and in the consideration of some amendments to it, we of the Northwestern States have brought out the injustice of classifying all wheats simply as wheat and of not setting up separate classifications for the types or kinds of wheat which are grown. Anyone at all familiar with the wheat market knows that wheat is not just simply wheat, but that there are different prices for different types or different grades of wheat, and that the demand of the millers is for the hard spring wheats. They command the better prices, and yet the production of wheat that is responsible for the so-called surplus are the soft wheats. The hard wheats do not create the surplus. More than that, the history of the acreage planted to wheat over a period of 10 years shows conclusively that the increase in wheat acreage has not been due to the hard wheats, but due to the expansion in the production of the soft wheats.

The result is that when you set up a limitation on the production of wheats and apply it equally to all types of wheat, the penalty falls disproportionately upon those acres devoted to the production of hard wheat. When the Agricultural Adjustment Act was originally adopted, the act of 1938, the wheat acreage was set at 52,000,000 acres. A bill was brought before the House to fix it permanently at fifty-two million. I remember objecting to the bill at that time, and a compromise proposal was brought in to fix it for 1 year at 55,000,000 acres. Subsequently, we adopted an amendment to the act which raised the acreage to 62,000,000. That helped some, and yet that sixty-two million being distributed to all wheat without setting up the separate types of wheat left the restriction of acreage falling disproportionately heavy on the hard-wheat grower.

Now, about all we can do today is to vote against this bill as a protest against bringing in a bill without consideration by the House Committee on Agriculture, and as a protest against setting up a special or preferential type of treatment for one commodity by admitting tobacco to different types of classification without extending that same privilege of classification to another commodity, namely, wheat.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. COOLEY. Did not the gentleman just hear the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLANNAGAN] state that this bill was reported unanimously by the Committee on Agriculture of the House?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. If this bill were reported unanimously by the Committee on Agriculture of the House following a hearing, you would have a report here on the bill, and the only thing you have in the nature of a report is a report to the Senate committee embracing a letter from the Department on two sections of a five-section bill.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The gentleman does not mean to say that this bill came up and had the deliberate consideration of the Committee on Agriculture with an opportunity for Members to be heard upon the bill?

Mr. COOLEY. I mean to say exactly that. It was brought up in an open meeting, and it did not meet with any opposition. The report has been prepared and is now in the hands of the printer.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Which will do us no good here today. The gentleman who demanded a second on this bill is a member of the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. COOLEY. And that gentleman was not present at the meeting of the committee.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Then the bill was not reported unanimously.

Mr. COOLEY. Of course not, if you include the absent Members.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, at this point I would like to insert in the RECORD a copy of the letter from the Secretary of Agriculture to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture approving this piece of legislation and a letter from the president of the American Farm Bureau Federation approving this piece of legislation and a short, prepared statement showing just what the legislation will accomplish.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

SEPTEMBER 21, 1940.

Hon. MARVIN JONES,
Chairman, Committee on Agriculture, House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. JONES: This is in reply to your request of September 10 for a report on the bill H. R. 10317.

This bill would change the base period for burley and for flue-cured tobacco from the 10 years, August 1919–July 1929 to the 5 years, August 1934–July 1939, and would provide thereby for determination of parity prices for these kinds of tobacco on the basis of price relationships which have existed in recent years.

Over a period of about 30 years there has been an increasing demand for those grades of tobacco used in the manufacture of cigarettes, and this demand in turn has led to significant modifications of farming practices in order to produce a crop having a greater proportion of the cigarette grades of tobacco. The proposed change in the base period, which would mean an increase of about 20 percent in the parity price, would provide for establishing parity prices so as to reflect recent price relationships for burley and flue-cured types of tobacco which have accompanied changes in the grades of tobacco required by the industry. Moreover, it appears to be reasonable and desirable with these changed conditions to maintain farm prices for these types of tobacco at this level.

The changing conditions in the tobacco industry were recognized by Congress when the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933 was enacted. At that time Congress provided for the use of the more recent August 1919–July 1929 base period for tobacco rather than the 1909–1914 period, which was used for other commodities. The 1919–1929 period also was used for tobacco in the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938. Since the changes which originally led to the use of the 1919–1929 base period for tobacco have been continuing in recent years, it now appears to be appropriate to adopt a later base period in order to reflect more accurately present price relationships.

As indicated above, the changes in the industry which have tended to lead to different price relationships for burley and flue-cured tobacco are associated with the increased proportion of these types of tobacco used in the manufacture of cigarettes. In this country the percentage of flue-cured tobacco consumed in the form of cigarettes increased from 19.7 percent in the 5 years 1909–13, to 70 percent in the 10 years 1920–29, to 79.7 percent in the 5 years 1935–39, and to 81.1 percent in 1939. For burley tobacco the similar increases were from 1.5 percent in the 5 years 1909–13, to 40.1 percent in the 10 years 1920–29, to 57.4 percent in the 5 years 1935–39, and to 59.4 percent in 1939.

In order to produce a greater proportion of tobacco suitable for use in cigarettes farmers have changed their practices materially. These changes involve the closer spacing of tobacco in the field with the production of a larger number of lighter leaves of tobacco as contrasted with the production of a smaller number of larger, heavier leaves in the earlier years. A farmer has to handle each leaf of flue-cured tobacco separately four times before it is placed on the market, and in addition has to handle several leaves bunched together a number of other times. This means a material increase in the labor required to place a pound of tobacco on the market, and of necessity tends to limit the quantity of tobacco handled by the average farm family. In addition to this increased labor cost, farmers generally have been required to incur added expense in adopting practices to prevent or check diseases and insects which have affected tobacco more seriously in recent years.

In view of the foregoing discussion it seems clear that there is a problem which should be corrected, and this bill would be one way of making this correction. However, in view of the fact that the legislation would have the effect of causing between 2 and 3 percent of the funds already appropriated for parity payments at this session of Congress to be shifted to tobacco from other commodities, it is suggested, since such a shift was not contemplated when the funds were appropriated, that the committee may wish to provide that the 1919–29 base period be used in any calculations relating to appropriations made prior to the enactment of the bill. This could be accomplished by striking out the period at the end of the last sentence in section 1 of the bill and adding the following: "; except that the August 1919–July 1929 base period shall be used in allocating any funds appropriated prior to September 1, 1940."

As required by Budget Circular 344, this matter was referred to the Bureau of the Budget, and under date of September 19, 1940, the Director thereof advised this Department that there would be no objection to the submission of this report to the committee with the understanding that no commitment would thereby be made as to the relationship of this proposed legislation to the program of the President.

Sincerely yours,

CLAUDE R. WICKARD,
Secretary.

AMERICAN FARM BUREAU FEDERATION,
Washington, D. C., September 24, 1940.

Hon. JOHN W. FLANNAGAN, JR.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I am writing to convey to you our support of the Flannagan bill, H. R. 10317, which changes the base period of the parity goal for flue-cured and burley tobacco from 1919–29 to 1934–39. I understand the effect of this would be to increase the parity goal for flue-cured tobacco from about 18 cents per pound to 22.4 cents, and to increase the parity goal for burley tobacco from 17 cents to 21.8 cents.

This change in the parity goal is made necessary by reason of the very large shift in consumption from smoking and chewing grades of tobacco to cigarette tobacco that has taken place since 1921. As a result, farmers have shifted to the production of a thinner leafed tobacco which is more expensive to produce. This readjustment in the parity goal will help offset these increased production costs and will provide a more equitable parity goal for the producers of these types of tobacco.

The loss of our export markets for tobacco, due to the European war, has placed an added burden upon the tobacco growers, as they find it necessary to reduce their acreage to bring about a readjustment of supplies. It is therefore especially urgent that Congress provide this additional relief at an early date.

At the meeting in Chicago on September 9–10 of the board of directors of the American Farm Bureau Federation, which is composed of representatives from all sections of the Nation, this bill was unanimously endorsed. I am informed that this legislation also has the approval of the Department of Agriculture.

As there is no objection, so far as I know, to this legislation, we respectfully urge your help in getting this bill enacted before adjournment in order to assist the tobacco growers in coping with a very difficult situation.

Sincerely yours,

EDW. A. O'NEAL, President.

PROPOSED AMENDMENTS TO TOBACCO QUOTA PROVISIONS OF AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT OF 1938

1. Change of the base period for burley and flue-cured tobacco from August 1919–July 1929 to August 1934–July 1939, section 301 (a) (1).

Over a period of 30 years the proportion of burley and flue-cured tobacco used in cigarettes has been steadily increasing.

In order to produce from each crop a greater proportion of grades suitable for use in cigarettes, farmers have materially changed their practices. These changes require the handling of a larger number of lighter, smaller leaves of tobacco in order to place a pound of tobacco on the market, thus reducing the quantity of tobacco which the average farm family handles.

These changing conditions in the industry have been accompanied by changing price relationships, and it appears to be sound from an economic viewpoint to bring the base period more nearly up to date. This situation in the tobacco industry was recognized originally in the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933 when the 1919–29 base period was used for tobacco in lieu of the 1909–14 base period which was used for other commodities.

The change of the base period would mean about a 20-percent increase in the parity price for burley and flue-cured tobacco. The change should have the effect of strengthening market prices and make possible the more effective use of loans in maintaining market prices in temporary emergency situations.

The market situation for flue-cured and burley tobacco is different from that for most other commodities since farmers receive for their tobacco only about 10 percent of the price of cigarettes retailing at 15 cents.

To remove any question about the effect of the amendment upon the allocation of parity funds, the amendment provides that the change of base period shall not affect any funds already appropriated for the making of parity payments. The maximum shift over a period of years in parity payments to tobacco from other commodities likely would fall between 1 and 2 percent. In this connection it is noted that no parity payments have been made thus far on tobacco.

2. Separation of dark types of tobacco now grouped as one kind under the act (sec. 301 (b) (15)):

In 1938 demand conditions for the several fire-cured and dark air-cured tobacco types were relatively stable. Administratively under these conditions it appeared to be most practical to group all of the fire-cured and dark air-cured types together for the purposes of the marketing quota program, and this was done under the act.

Because of the war in Europe demand conditions for the fire-cured types of tobacco now are materially different from demand conditions for the dark air-cured types. A greater portion of fire-cured tobacco normally is exported to continental Europe than is the case for the air-cured types, and these exports have been almost completely stopped as a result of the war. Therefore, it appears essential now to separate the fire-cured and dark air-cured types of tobacco so that appropriate adjustments can be made in the marketings of the different types of tobacco in view of the variable demand conditions therefor.

3. Elimination of provision under which referenda on quotas may be held after crop is produced (sec. 312 (b)):

When the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 was enacted provision was made for referenda on marketing quotas with respect to any crop of tobacco after it had been produced. Administrative experience thus far indicates that this provision is not desirable. Further, the possibility of approval of marketing quotas for a 3-year period, as authorized by recent amendments to the act, makes it seem desirable to allow any particular crop of tobacco to move into market channels and to provide for adjustments which may be needed to eliminate any surplus in connection with the marketings of later crops of tobacco.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CARLSON].

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Speaker, I wanted a little time on this bill because I want information as to how it affects the entire farm program. I have been trying to get the information for the past few days, and would like to interrogate the gentleman from Virginia. I want to know the answer to two questions before I make up my mind on this bill. I want to know if it affects the entire acreage allotment of the Triple A of the United States, either in this year or in future years.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. It does not.

Mr. CARLSON. Does it affect the distribution of the funds this year or in future years?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. It does not affect the distribution of the funds for this year. It expressly provides to the contrary. If the tobacco price tumbles next year, we would participate, I hope, in the parity payments, something we have never done as yet; and it is estimated by the Secretary of Agriculture that it would probably take from 1 to 2 percent of the funds allocated for parity payments in the event we are unable to maintain parity prices under the program.

Mr. CARLSON. I wanted to be sure we did not affect the present set-up of the Triple A base in the United States. We have had one or two changes in the past, and I think we should not pass a bill today under suspension that would do that.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate very much the information that has just been given me by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLANNAGAN]. My sympathy is with the farmers generally and therefore I want to be fair in my consideration of this bill. I want it distinctly understood that it would not affect the base acreage as established by the Agricultural Adjustment Act. I have no objection to tobacco securing parity payments under this program. In fact, I believe we must give consideration to every farm commodity. It is true that tobacco has been in a more favorable position than other farm commodities, and as present indications point to a reduced income for future years I want to approach this matter with that in mind. While we are discussing this parity price of farm commodities, I think it well to consider the present farm prices in comparison with parity prices. Following is a table recently issued by the Department of Agriculture giving this information:

[1] Revised.
[2] Adjusted for seasonality.
[3] Prices not available.
Post-war base.

This bill, as I understand it, changes the base year for securing the parity base. Statements already made indicate that the years selected under the original A. A. A. were rather unfair to tobacco, therefore I think this provision might well be adopted. However, I do object to bringing this bill in under suspension of the rules with no copy of the bill under consideration available except the one at the Speaker's desk. I trust this will not happen again.

Mr. PACE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARLSON. I yield.

Mr. PACE. But it is time to guarantee the farmers of this Nation parity prices, is it not?

Mr. CARLSON. It has always been my contention that we will not have permanent prosperity in the United States until agriculture and industry are more nearly on a parity. This, of course, is the purpose of the A. A. A., but the preceding table shows how far we have failed in reaching this desired objective, despite several years of this program.

I have just received the following figures, which I believe are interesting:

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER].

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, this committee report states, "The proposed amendment is needed because the war in Europe has adversely affected the demand for the dark air-cured types of tobacco to a lesser extent than for the fire-cured type."

Mr. Speaker, we have this bill before us because our New Deal brethren repealed the arms embargo provision of our former neutrality act with the Baruch-Bloom fake neutrality act. As a result, foreign purchasers who formerly purchased about $89,000,000 worth of American tobacco annually, stopped purchasing that tobacco in order that they could use more of their money to purchase munitions, arms, implements of war, and war supplies. I was not a party to that double-cross and sell-out of our American tobacco farmers. I am glad that I was not. Our New Deal Democratic brethren are now asking for the enactment of this bill to cure a condition which is the result of the enactment of the Baruch-Bloom fake neutrality bill which brought about this condition——

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLOOM. I think it is about time that the Members of this House should be acquainted with the fact that they cannot use the names of any of the Members of the House, especially when they are using it in the manner the gentleman from Wisconsin is using my name.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I have not referred to the gentleman's name at all.

Mr. BLOOM. A point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am speaking to the Speaker and not to the gentleman who occupies the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin will proceed in order and the rules provide that Members must be referred to as "the gentleman from" a certain State.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I am proceeding in order, Mr. Speaker. I may be referring to some flower blooms or many Blooms whose names appear in the Washington and New York directories.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I am clearly proceeding in order under the rules of the House.

Mr. BLOOM. I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman's words be taken down.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the words objected to.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York.

Mr. BLOOM. Is it not according to the rules that the gentleman from Wisconsin should be made to take his seat while this matter is being considered?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin will take his seat.

The Clerk read as follows:

I may be referring to some flower blooms or many Blooms whose names appear in the Washington and New York directories.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin has heard the words read. Was he referring to the gentleman from New York as one of the Blooms?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. No; I was not. I may say to the Speaker that the gentleman from New York made the point of order that I was not within the rules of the House because I was discussing his name. I have not been discussing his name as a Member of the House. I have not identified his name and in explanation——

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman intend to refer to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. No; I intended only to indicate that I was not referring to a Member of this House.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker I would like to be heard. The gentleman from Wisconsin referred to the Bloom——

The SPEAKER. There is nothing to be heard on. If the gentleman from Wisconsin states that he did not intend in this statement to refer to the gentleman from New York, a Representative in the House, his words are not out of order.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the Speaker read the language again? I want to be absolutely correct.

The SPEAKER (reading):

I may be referring to some flower blooms or many Blooms whose names appear in the Washington and New York directories.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I will say positively that I did not directly or indirectly intend to refer to any Member of this House but merely mentioned the words I did mention in order to indicate to the House that I was proceeding under the rules of the House.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker may I be heard on the allegation?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has not answered the question. Did the gentleman intend to refer to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Oh, absolutely not; not in the words which the Speaker has mentioned.

The SPEAKER. These are the words that were taken down.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Yes; with reference to the words taken down, I was not, as the words indicate, referring to the gentleman from New York or to any other Member of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin will proceed in order.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I shall support and vote for this bill. One of the Members from my side stated that this bill should not be passed because it did not include another commodity. All I have to say about that is that is not the way to legislate. If this bill does not go the whole way in the proper direction but does go halfway, then let us take the half step. It is claimed that this bill must be enacted to protect many of our American tobacco farmers because foreign countries have stopped purchasing much of their tobacco. Therefore, let us take care of our American tobacco farmers. America first, last, and forever! [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CHAPMAN].

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill of vital interest to thousands of tobacco growers in this country. The membership of the House will recall that when the original Agricultural Adjustment Act was passed in 1933 it was found that because of different conditions existing in the production of tobacco as compared with other basic farm crops, it was necessary to establish a different base period for tobacco than was established for these other commodities. The period agreed upon for the other commodities was a prewar period of 5 years, but we set up a 10-year post-war base period for tobacco; otherwise the A. A. A. would have been inoperative on burley and flue-cured tobacco. The result has been that the growers of the burley and flue-cured types have never received one penny of parity payments, but the very existence of this base period has had a considerable effect on the market price of those types of tobacco. In our advocacy of this measure to determine still another base period for burley and flue-cured tobacco we are not expecting to receive parity payments. We hope there will be no need for parity payments. We do hope, however, for the effect which we believe this new base period will have on the market price of tobacco. It is expressly provided in this bill that no parity payments shall be made on tobacco out of any funds appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941.

There has been a vast change in conditions surrounding the production of these types of tobacco, in the purposes for which they are used, and in the tobacco industry generally, since the period 1909–14, the base period of other farm products. That was a period when a comparatively small proportion of these burley and flue-cured types of tobacco went into the manufacture of cigarettes. The cigarette as a great commercial product began to expand about 1910. At that time less than 2 percent of burley tobacco and less than 20 percent of flue-cured tobacco went into the manufacture of cigarettes. But now approximately 60 percent of the burley tobacco and more than 80 percent of the flue-cured tobacco goes into the manufacture of cigarettes. The production of cigarette tobacco requires a smaller, lighter, finer tobacco plant and more of them, than the production of tobacco used for other purposes. The result has been a tremendous increase in the cost of producing these types. In order to balance the whole situation, to bring the parity price of these two types of cigarette tobacco to what it should be, this legislation is necessary. These tobaccos are the foundation of the American cigarette. From them are blended billions of cigarettes, which pay more than a half billion dollars annually into the Federal Treasury. It is necessary to change the base period now to give us a parity price commensurate with the cost of production to thousands of American farmers. The same reasons that justified the Congress in 1933 in giving tobacco a base period different from that of other products now justify our appeal for still another base period, as provided in this bill.

We have no desire to discriminate against any other farm product. We are not here opposing any change in the classification for wheat as mentioned by the gentleman from Kansas. All we are asking is this change of base period as a measure of justice to growers of tobacco, a crop which extracts more fertility from the soil than any other farm product, and which requires the hardest kind of labor known to farm life. This is not a special concession we are asking; we are asking it simply in order to balance these types of tobacco with other farm products and bring them up to a proper parity price. [Applause.]

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MURRAY.]

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to my colleagues during this little guerilla warfare we have had here that we ought to act somewhere near our age and get the facts in connection with this proposition. I attended the committee meeting when this matter was brought up. Just so the Members understand what it is, may I say that this is part of the money that comes from parity payments. Now, I voted against parity payments and I probably will hear a lot about that during the next 3 or 4 weeks, but I voted against it because it did not include enough of the crops produced in this country. The question involved here today is altogether different. The tobacco farmers have not had any parity payments. I have in my pocket at the present time a table showing that Kentucky has only received $3 per farm per year for the 3 years that parity payments have been paid. That has been due to the fact that tobacco has been at a pretty fair price up until the last few months. To me this looks a good deal like we are having a little disturbance here over how to divide the spoils.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. The gentleman does not want to make the statement that tobacco growers have received one penny in parity payments?

Mr. MURRAY. No.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I understood the gentleman to say that they received $3 per farm.

Mr. MURRAY. I said that in fairness to the tobacco farmers it should be stated they have not had this money on account of the price of tobacco. It has not been necessary. The $3 per farm is from parity funds. The only thing we are discussing here today is whether you are going to take some of the money that has gone into cotton and pay it for tobacco. It might be well for the country to know that cotton has had 68 percent of the parity payments up to January 1, 1940, and they would have had all of it this year if the Members had not been a little careful.

Mr. COOLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. COOLEY. Does the gentleman know what percentage of parity payments wheat has received?

Mr. MURRAY. I cannot remember all of them.

Mr. COOLEY. Quite a large sum of money.

Mr. MURRAY. Oh, yes; and also corn.

Mr. PACE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. PACE. The gentleman's figures include the special price adjustment appropriation that was made in 1937. Otherwise cotton has not received anywhere near the major portion or over half of the money.

Mr. MURRAY. All I can do is take the figures I get from the Department of Agriculture and according to those figures cotton has received 68 percent of the money during all of that time.

Mr. PACE. In 1937 the Congress appropriated a special price adjustment for cotton, which was not at that time appropriated for any other commodity and the gentleman's figures have been raised on account of that special appropriation. Since that time the money has been fairly distributed among all commodities. I appreciate the gentleman's concern about dairying. I realize he has not been able to go along with parity payments because he wants the same treatment for the dairy producers of his district. I appreciate that position.

Mr. MURRAY. Let us get that straight. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HULL] has a dairy bill pending, H. R. 6500, by which he desires to get a little of this money for the dairy farmers, but we have not been able to get the bill voted on in the committee. I try not to make this a personal matter at this time. All we are doing today is to take some of the money that has been going to cotton, wheat, and corn, and giving it to the tobacco farmers who have not had the benefit of any parity payments up until the present time. That is all there is to this. It is simply a matter of dividing the spoils.

Mr. GEHRMANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. GEHRMANN. I was wondering what reason there was in the Agricultural Committee why the dairying industry, which is the largest of all, should not be included and should not receive some benefit if there are any benefits in parity payments. What were the reasons given?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE].

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I am well aware of the fact that we who represent agricultural districts must hold together to maintain the gains we have made in the last 7 or 8 years. Nevertheless, I regret that a bill of this importance should come up in this way. A bill of this kind should have had hearings. There should have been real discussion in the Agricultural Committee. I signed the round robin when it was presented asking that this bill should be considered in this manner. It did come before a formal meeting of the Agricultural Committee a few days ago and was approved without discussion.

I am going to vote for this bill because it has been amended so as not to affect the parity payments of 1941, which I think is fair. I hope we will never have to ask for parity payments again. I trust we may devise some method by which we can make various users of the commodities pay the necessary amounts to the people who produce the commodities so that there will be no necessity for further parity payments. However, if we do have to provide parity payments, tobacco should be in the position where it can get its share. It should not participate the same as corn, wheat, and cotton in 1941, because that appropriation has already been made. This bill has been amended, so the sponsor informs us, so that it will not cover that year. That is why it gets my vote.

I remember well when we first considered in the Agricultural Committee the difficulty of finding a base period for tobacco. If I recall correctly, I was the first one that suggested that we go outside the 1909–14 base.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a letter addressed to me by Secretary Wickard be inserted at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

The letter referred to follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, September 21, 1940.

Hon. WALTER M. PIERCE,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. PIERCE: This is in reply to your letter of September 13 requesting information as to the effect of the bill H. R. 10317 upon the distribution of parity payments for wheat, corn, cotton, rice, and tobacco.

The bill H. R. 10317 changes the base period only for flue-cured and burley tobacco and does not affect the base period for other kinds of tobacco. A copy of the report by the Department on the proposed legislation is attached for your convenience.

Thus far no parity payments have been made on tobacco, and it is my understanding that the farm leaders who have proposed the change in the base period for flue-cured and burley tobacco are interested mainly in the effect which the change may have in maintaining market prices at recent levels, and, in the event of any decline of market prices, in the possibility of using loans more effectively to maintain prices at reasonable levels. Their reasoning seems to be that the market situation is such that prices for the flue-cured and burley types of tobacco, which are used mainly in cigarettes, can readily be maintained in line with prices during the proposed base period. Actually, the market situation for these types of tobacco is different from that for most other commodities mainly because of the fact that the amount which the farmer receives for his tobacco (at prices prevailing in the proposed base period) represents only about 10 percent of the price of a package of cigarettes retailing at 15 cents.

Flue-cured tobacco growers recently approved marketing quotas for the next 3 years (1941 to 1943) and burley growers will vote on marketing quotas this fall for 3 years. With quotas in effect for 3 years, it seems that prices for tobacco should improve to such an extent that tobacco growers would share in any parity payments to a smaller extent in later years than in 1941.

In line with my understanding of the object of the proposed legislation, the enclosed report contains a suggestion that the bill be modified so as to provide for use of the base period of August 1919–July 1929 (as now fixed in the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended) in allocating any funds already appropriated for the making of parity payments for 1941. If this suggested change in the bill is adopted the legislation will have no effect upon the distribution of parity payments for 1941. Without the suggestion there would be a shift of 2 to 3 percent of the parity funds to tobacco from the other commodities, this shift being made pro rata from each of the other commodities. This shift for 1941 probably is near a maximum. For 1940, had the proposed legislation been in effect, the shift would have been about 1½ percent, and over a period of years any shift likely would not average above the figure of 1½ percent. The distribution of the parity-payment funds among commodities is based upon the extent to which the proceeds of production fall below the parity income, and, therefore, no parity payments would be made on burley or flue-cured tobacco in any year in which the price was sufficiently high to bring the proceeds of production up to the parity income.

Sincerely,

CLAUDE R. WICKARD, Secretary.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the remainder of my time.

Mr. Speaker, this bill as we have it before us, S. 4374, contains two sections. It seems to me the Clerk read five or six sections. I am just wondering why the additional sections of the bill read by the Clerk are kept from the Members of the House. We have not had an opportunity to study the bill that was read by the Clerk. There must be some reason why the Members are not being permitted to see the additional sections.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I hope the gentleman does not intimate that anyone is trying to keep from the Members of the House the provisions of the bill S. 4374. It is a public document.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I am simply showing that the Members of the House do not have the bill before them in printed form as read by the Clerk.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. It has been printed, however, and it is available.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I am sorry, I cannot yield to the gentleman. He can explain that in his own time. I have been trying to get a copy of the bill, which is up for consideration under suspension, to find out what it really means before I cast my vote either for or against it.

I want to be fair on this matter, but, as a matter of fact, tobacco has received closer to parity prices than any other farm commodity. Tobacco has had special treatment for the past 7 years, all through the farm legislation. The Representatives of the tobacco districts have written their own ticket and have always had preferential treatment to handle the problems concerning their industry. Now they come before us and want to change the base period, which, in my opinion, throws the entire A. A. A. program out of kilter, because the base period for virtually all the basic farm commodities is the 1909–14 period. In order to improve the situation for tobacco they are taking the 1934–39 period, where the prices are at parity or above parity, and changing its relationship to the general scheme of price levels and parity for other basic commodities.

No hearings were held on this bill before our Committee on Agriculture. It is true that the bill was brought before the committee and reported out without any discussion on the basis of a poll that was circulated by the author of the bill among the Members. I did not sign that poll that was taken of the members of the committee, because I do not believe a piece of important legislation should come out of the Committee on Agriculture without hearings and without due consideration.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I have just examined the copy of the bill which is at the Clerk's desk, and it carries five sections. This is the bill that was passed by the Senate. The only copies that are available at the desk for the Members are of the bill as it was originally introduced in the Senate, and it carries only two sections. There are three sections of the bill that have been inserted in addition to those that anyone is able to read unless he goes to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The gentleman is correct in substantiating what I have already said. This letter from the Secretary of Agriculture states that this bill has not been approved by the Bureau of the Budget. There is no report from the House Committee on Agriculture. We do not know if the administration favors this bill, for lack of approval by the Bureau of the Budget, and, therefore, we cannot help but assume that the President may veto the bill when it comes to him for consideration.

One reason given for the passage of this measure is the fact that the shipment of tobacco has been retarded in the world markets due to the war. I have just learned today from my good friend the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY] that England is again buying tobacco produced in this country.

Every farm commodity, wheat, cotton, and other basic commodities, and every surplus farm commodity, has slumped in the export market on account of the war in Europe. There are no shipments of wheat from the United States, very few shipments of cotton, and none of rice. The gentleman from North Carolina states that usual sales of tobacco are now being made to England.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? I have not made any such statement.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I am sorry if I misunderstood the gentleman.

It seems to me that we are giving such special treatment to this product that the legislation before us should go back to the Committee on Agriculture to have full and complete hearings where witnesses may come before our committee from the Department and give their testimony and be subject to cross-examination, so that we may get all the facts.

The Department now advises us that this will take around $2,500,000 out of the parity payment fund. This is not a very great deal, but you are taking it away from other basic commodities to give it to another, and that is hardly fair without its having had consideration before the proper legislative committee.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. PITTENGER. Does the gentleman know of any reason why we cannot have hearings not only on this matter but on other matters before the Committee on Agriculture in which the people of the country are interested? We have not recessed or adjourned yet.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. There are no doubt a good many bills on which we could hold hearings.

Mr. PITTENGER. I call the gentleman's attention to the Harrison-Colmer bill, in which a great many people are interested.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. This bill should be returned to the Committee on Agriculture. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of the time to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY].

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I know that the distinguished gentleman who has just preceded me did not intend to misquote me a moment ago when he said that I had stated to him that the British embargo had been lifted and that we were selling tobacco to the British Empire. I made no such statement.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I beg the gentleman's pardon if I misunderstood him. I understood the gentleman to tell me out here that we are now selling tobacco to the British Empire.

Mr. COOLEY. No; the gentleman thoroughly misunderstood me.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. COOLEY. What I said was that we had an arrangement with the British buyers under which they are buying tobacco on the market in the usual way under an option. The British companies are furnishing their redrying plants and storage facilities in this transaction and they are purchasing somewhere near their usual requirements, but all of the tobacco purchased by the British buyers last year is still stored in this country, and to that tremendous stock of tobacco is being added the tobacco they are purchasing this year.

The necessity for this bill is pointed out in letters from the Secretary of Agriculture, one of which was addressed to Senator SMITH on September 19, and the other addressed to the gentleman from Texas, Hon. MARVIN JONES, chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, on September 21, and I would like to read just a few excerpts from the letter of September 19th to Senator SMITH, in which the Secretary of Agriculture stated this:

> Because of emergency conditions which have arisen with respect to the fire-cured and dark-air-cured types of tobacco, as a result of the war in Europe, it appears urgent that this bill be enacted in time to make the amendment provided therein effective prior to the holding of a referendum on marketing quotas on these kinds of tobacco in October or November of this year.

This is from the Secretary's letter, and after discussing the bill further, the letter ends up with this statement:

> The Department urges immediate enactment of this bill for the reasons stated above.

I may say to the membership of the House that I am not particularly interested in that phase of the bill which deals with dark-air-cured and fire-cured tobacco, but I am tremendously interested in the second section of the bill which deals with parity payments.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I shall be glad to yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. This bill does not in any way affect the parity payments for 1941.

Mr. COOLEY. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I want the membership to thoroughly understand that.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. How about parity payments for 1942?

Mr. COOLEY. We do not have any parity payments for 1942.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. There will naturally be one in due course of time.

Mr. COOLEY. We hope that will not be necessary.

Now, with reference to parity payments, I hope the membership of the House knows this one thing, and clearly knows it, and that is that tobacco, one of the biggest industries in the country, has received not one red penny in parity payments. Now, you ask me why? It is because the tobacco farmer has been willing to take it on the chin, so to speak, and to curtail production and try to cope with the law of supply and demand, to such an extent that last year we produced 1,200,000,000 pounds of flue-cured tobacco and this year we have cut that production in half, and we will only produce 600,000,000 pounds, and, unfortunately, tobacco today is selling for slightly more than it sold for last year, and it is plain to see that the income of the tobacco farmer is substantially curtailed. Now, instead of having these tobacco buyers go along under the belief that parity for tobacco is 16 or 18 cents, we want them to know that under the calculations made by the experts in the Department, that the parity price for tobacco today should be 22 cents a pound, and that is all this bill, or the latter part of it, does. Its only effect in the current year will be entirely psychological. It cannot materially influence the price of tobacco, but we hope it will have a favorable influence upon the market for the remainder of the season.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Personally, I have no objection to the latter part of the measure. I have no objection to the extension of parity payments, and if the gentlemen would incorporate in their motion a motion to amend by striking out the first portion of the bill, I would not object.

Mr. COOLEY. On the question of parity payments, this does not mean we are going to take any money for parity payments. We hope we will be able to maintain prices so it will not be necessary for us to ask for anything for parity. We have not received one red copper in the past, and we hope we will not have to ask for one in the future.

With reference to the first part of the bill, I cannot for the life of me see how the gentleman from South Dakota or the gentleman from Minnesota or anyone else can object to the growers of fire-cured and dark-air-cured tobacco having this legislation when the Department of Agriculture states it is absolutely necessary and that it should be enacted immediately so it would be in effect before the referendum which is to be held in October or November.

I want to call your attention to the letter dated September 21, 1940, written by the Secretary of Agriculture to the Chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture, Mr. JONES of Texas, a copy of which was sent to Senator SMITH, chairman of the Senate Committee on Agriculture:

SEPTEMBER 21, 1940.

HON. MARVIN JONES,
Chairman, Committee on Agriculture, House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. JONES: This is in reply to your request of September 10 for a report on the bill H. R. 10317.

This bill would change the base period for burley and for flue-cured tobacco from the 10 years August 1919–July 1929 to the 5 years August 1934–July 1939, and would provide thereby for determination of parity prices for these kinds of tobacco on the basis of price relationships which have existed in recent years.

Over a period of about 30 years there has been an increasing demand for those grades of tobacco used in the manufacture of cigarettes and this demand in turn has led to significant modifications of farming practices in order to produce a crop having a greater proportion of the cigarette grades of tobacco. The proposed change in the base period, which would mean an increase of about 20 percent in the parity price, would provide for establishing parity prices so as to reflect recent price relationships for burley and flue-cured types of tobacco which have accompanied changes in the grades of tobacco required by the industry. Moreover, it appears to be reasonable and desirable with these changed conditions to maintain farm prices for these types of tobacco at this level.

The changing conditions in the tobacco industry were recognized by Congress when the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933 was enacted. At that time Congress provided for the use of the more recent August 1919–July 1929 base period for tobacco, rather than the 1909–1914 period which was used for other commodities. The 1919–1929 period also was used for tobacco in the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938. Since the changes which originally led to the use of the 1919–1929 base period for tobacco have been continuing in recent years, it now appears to be appropriate to adopt a later base period in order to reflect more accurately present price relationships.

As indicated above, the changes in the industry which have tended to lead to different price relationships for burley and flue-cured tobacco are associated with the increased proportion of these types of tobacco used in the manufacture of cigarettes. In this country the percentage of flue-cured tobacco consumed in the form of cigarettes increased from 19.7 percent in the 5 years 1909–13, to 70 percent in the 10 years 1920–29, to 79.7 percent in the 5 years 1935–39, and to 81.1 percent in 1939. For burley tobacco the similar increases were from 1.5 percent in the 5 years 1909–13, to 40.1 percent in the 10 years 1920–29, to 57.4 percent in the 5 years 1935–39, and to 59.4 percent in 1939.

In order to produce a greater proportion of tobacco suitable for use in cigarettes, farmers have changed their practices materially. These changes involve the closer spacing of tobacco in the field with the production of a larger number of lighter leaves of tobacco as contrasted with the production of a smaller number of larger, heavier leaves in the earlier years. A farmer has to handle each leaf of flue-cured tobacco separately four times before it is placed on the market, and in addition has to handle several leaves bunched together a number of other times. This means a material increase in the labor required to place a pound of tobacco on the market, and of necessity tends to limit the quantity of tobacco handled by the average farm family. In addition to this increased labor cost farmers generally have been required to incur added expense in adopting practices to prevent or check diseases and insects which have affected tobacco more seriously in recent years.

In view of the foregoing discussion it seems clear that there is a problem which should be corrected and this bill would be one way of making this correction. However, in view of the fact that the legislation would have the effect of causing between 2 and 3 percent of the funds already appropriated for parity payments at this session of Congress to be shifted to tobacco from other commodities, it is suggested, since such a shift was not contemplated when the funds were appropriated, that the committee may wish to provide that the 1919–29 base period be used in any calculations relating to appropriations made prior to the enactment of the bill. This could be accomplished by striking out the period at the end of the last sentence in section 1 of the bill and adding the following: "; except that the August 1919–July 1929 base period shall be used in allocating any funds appropriated prior to September 1, 1940."

As required by Budget Circular 344, this matter was referred to the Bureau of the Budget, and under date of September 19, 1940, the Director thereof advised this Department that there would be no objection to the submission of this report to the committee with the understanding that no commitment would thereby be made as to the relationship of this proposed legislation to the program of the President.

Sincerely yours,

CLAUDE R. WICKARD, Secretary.

This bill not only has the approval of the Department but of farmers and farm leaders generally and of every Member of the House representing districts in which tobacco is grown. I hope that you will vote for the bill. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. All time has expired.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLANNAGAN] to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The question was taken; and there were on a division (demanded by Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN)—ayes 74, noes 42.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is not a quorum present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 165, nays 107, not voting 157, as follows:

CONDITION OF FARMERS HAS IMPROVED UNDER THE ROOSEVELT ADMINISTRATION—FACTS AND FIGURES

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, knowing full well how difficult it is for a busy farmer to take time to analyze a series of tables and figures, how extremely hard it is to reach conclusions from a mass of figures and in order to impress the lessons they teach, I present herewith a condensed method of comparison which will, I hope, be valuable in discussing the position of American farmers. This method will be applied as a comparison of farm financial conditions today with those of the days before this administration assumed responsibility in March 1933. Previous to that time, Congress had passed various types of farm legislation; for instance, providing for tariffs on imported agricultural products and for the creation of a farm board which was expensive and useless. However, no basic agricultural legislation was really effective and helpful to the farmers until after March 1933. I now present a summary of the improvements which have resulted from this constructive farm legislation which launched a Nation-wide farm program and put farmers on the road to progress. These figures have all been carefully checked. These are facts.

CASH FARM INCOME

In 1932 the farmers had the lowest cash income of recent years. We all remember that. I am not going to quote those dismal figures; interested investigators can easily ascertain them from the statistical records. Since 1932 the cash farm income has risen 82 percent; that is, it has almost doubled. My farmer friends surely understand this from their own experiences and they know it applies in many localities, as well as in the national average.

In 1932 the cash farm income was one-third of parity. In 1939 it was more than three-fourths of parity with nonfarm income. Remember that parity is based on the farm income from 1909 to 1914, which is known as the base period. Parity prices mean that the farmer can buy, under his price level and proportionately to what he sells, the same amount of goods he was able to buy in the base period. By this simple comparison it is shown that in the years from 1909 to 1914 the farmer could purchase three times as much as he could in 1932, the last year of the Hoover administration. In 1939 parity had risen to over three-fourths of the proportionate figure that farmers received in the base period. Farm income is steadily advancing toward full parity.

FARM BUYING POWER

Farm buying power in 1932 was, of course, low, very low. That buying power increased 72 percent from 1932 to 1939, becoming approximately the same as in 1929. This increased purchasing power covers all materials bought by the farmers and includes interest and taxes.

AGRICULTURE'S SHARE OF NATIONAL INCOME

Politicians have talked long and loud about agriculture securing its share of the national income. Has this share improved under the Roosevelt administration? The answer is "Yes." In 1932 agriculture's share of the national income was 6 percent. In 1939 it had risen to 9 percent, or an increase of 50 percent. This represents a decided improvement, under a rapidly rising national income.

AVERAGE FARM PRICES

Average farm prices gained 43 percent between 1932 and 1939. What does this mean to the producers of American food? It means that more money is coming into the farmers' hands under the Roosevelt administration.

RURAL RETAIL SALES

In 1932 the farmers purchased only what they were forced to buy. They had no money nor credit to pay for many commodities that they needed. In 1939 the farmers purchased 102 percent more than they did in 1932. In other words, retail sales to farmers more than doubled in this period. Does this increased purchasing ability, gained under this administration, mean anything to the farmer? It surely does.

FARM FORECLOSURES

I shall never forget when, in the campaign of 1932, a visitor told me of attending a sale of a farmer's personal property in an eastern State. A mortgage, amounting to $2,200 was being foreclosed on his cattle, farm machinery, and horses. This entire property was bought by his daughter for $56, her savings from teaching school. A good horse sold for $1, good milk cows for 50 cents each. The mortgagee, when he saw the attending farmers were not bidding on that man's property, wanted to call off the sale, but the auctioneer was informed that he had to sell as he had advertised to do, and he proceeded. When that story was told to me, I said, "That is the break-down of the morale and standard of honesty in our country, and I fear trouble in the days that lie ahead." Before the campaign of 1932 was closed, I saw the same thing repeated in Oregon in one of the counties I now represent in Congress. Foreclosures and forced sales were going on everywhere in 1932. They decreased 69 percent from March 1933 to March 1939. Pitchfork government is over.

PROGRESSIVE FARM LEGISLATION

The last 7 years have seen a series of progressive farm legislative enactments, one following another through the Agricultural Committee, to the floor of the House, the Senate, the White House, and becoming a part of the law of the land. Here are a few of these achievements:

AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ADMINISTRATION, THE TRIPLE A

The original Triple A was hammered out in the Agricultural Committee room of the House in the spring of 1933. I took part in the process. I watched the benefits the farmers received from it, until, 2½ years later the Supreme Court of the United States decided that the law was unconstitutional. Six Justices voted "unconstitutional," and three "constitutional."

SOIL CONSERVATION ACT

Out of the dying embers of the old Triple A arose the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act of 1936. This act rewarded farmers financially for carrying out soil-building practices. Farmers were rewarded for turning acreage from soil-depleting to soil-conserving crops. It is estimated that there are about 6,500,000 farmers in the United States. More than 6,000,000 farmers are now carrying out the 1940 agricultural program, on 82 percent of the Nation's croplands.

PARITY INCOME

Farm income has been increased and brought closer to parity by reason of the Federal rental and benefit payments. These payments, through December 31, 1937, amounted to $1,465,921,786.02, including the programs from 1933 to 1936. This sum includes county association expenses. Such payments ceased when the act was declared unconstitutional.

We have been brought closer to parity by the partial parity program payments, which amounted to $359,260,966.75 for the 1937–40 programs. This also includes county association expenses, and 1937 cotton price adjustment payments.

Conservation payments, including the 1937 Sugar Act, for the programs of 1936 through June 30, 1940, have been $1,772,370,003.23.

Total of all benefit payments for agriculture since March 1933 have been $3,597,552,756.

The imposing totals are:

Rental and benefit payments	$1,465,921,786.02
Parity payments	359,260,966.75
Conservation payments	1,772,370,003.23
Total	3,597,552,756.00

A PROGRAM OF ABUNDANCE

This is not a program of scarcity. It is a program of abundance. The farmers have learned how to produce more on less acres. In 1939, the acres planted in soil-depleting crops were twenty-eight and one-half millions less than in the 5-year average before the Triple A. One of the greatest achievements of this program was that it taught the farmer how to produce more abundantly with less land under cultivation. Farmers were taught how to store up soil fertility, and to produce more efficiently.

Last, but not least, the farmers were kept from piling up price-reducing surpluses when no markets existed for such soil-depleting excess crops. Production has met all needs—domestic, export, and carry-over.

STABILITY

Through the Wallace ever normal granary program, our farmers have now been able to store wheat, cotton, corn, and other commodities, under loans. Loans have been made by the United States upon these staple commodities. The country is thus assured of steady supplies through lean years and fat years. The Government supports the price at stable levels. Farmers, rather than speculators, have been given the advantage of rising farm prices. Speculators have been relegated to the rear. I come from a wheat section. The wheat farmers of America have gained at least $80,000,000 annually in cash income because they have been able to hold wheat off the market long enough to profit from the price raise which occurs between the time of the harvest and the following spring. I feel particularly gratified over the loans on wheat, for this was my special contribution to the act.

DEMOCRACY

The organization of the groups that locally administer the Triple A is the finest illustration of practical democracy in operation of which I have knowledge. About 135,000 farmers, elected by their own neighbors, are carrying out this program. Politics do not enter into their calculations. They show what democracy can and must do if it is to maintain its place in world affairs, in spite of the rapid rise of totalitarian governments now so dominant in the world. Indeed, the wheat program is popular. Recent votes on the application of marketing quotas show, overwhelmingly, that the Triple A program is popular with the farmers of the Nation. As an example, on July 20, 1940, flue cured tobacco producers voted more than 86 percent for marketing quotas for the next 3 years. It is my opinion that if the wheat producers of the Pacific Northwest were called upon to vote, they would vote practically 100 percent for the present wheat program.

CERTIFICATE PLAN

Many of the farmers, chiefly in the wheat sections, will recall that I have a bill now pending in the Congress that would put into effect what is known as the certificate plan. Under this plan, those who use certain basic commodities, named in the bill, will be called upon to pay parity prices for the proportion of the commodity that is used in the United States. For instance, if wheat is selling on the market for 75 cents a bushel, and conservation and other payments amount to 15 cents a bushel, resulting in the farmer realizing 90 cents per bushel, then under the plan of my bill the consumer of the produced wheat will be called upon to pay the difference so as to give the farmer parity, which at this time is estimated to be about $1.12 per bushel. Under the certificate plan the farmer would receive 22 cents a bushel additional, less expense of operation. It would not cost the Government a single dollar, but would be a permanent method of procedure under an extended farm program, resulting in stable prices on the specified farm commodities.

The farmers of America know these things, and they are not going to be fooled by the flood of propaganda and false statistics now being fed to the American people in such abundance. The men who wear the overalls, the women who cook the food for the workingmen, can vividly recall the dark and dismal days of 1932, when no light broke through on the agricultural world. We who lived on farms can too well remember those gloomy days. No one claims we even now have a perfect set-up in America. Nor can we have an ideal government as long as the hand of special privilege controls in so many governmental activities, as it does in Washington today and always has controlled. Great advances have been made, as the above figures have shown. The American farmer knows full well that he is decidedly better off under the present administration, and I believe that on the 5th of November, he will show his approval by an overwhelming vote in favor of the continuation of the Roosevelt administration.

MRS. E. V. MAKI

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 1874) for the relief of Mrs. E. V. Maki, with a Senate amendment, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 1, line 7, strike out "$5,000" and insert "$2,500."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow I may have 10 minutes in which to address the House, after any other special orders and the work of the day are disposed of.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERSONAL PRIVILEGE

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] is recognized to present a question of personal privilege.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks and to include therein excerpts from certain letters.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, the question of personal privilege raised earlier today is based upon two statements.

I

The first is a statement not made on the floor of the House but is a statement contained in the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] and found on pages 12563 and 12564 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD under date of September 24, 1940. The statement, as printed in the RECORD, is as follows:

Although the gentleman from Michigan has not a single word of complaint against the high-salaried Republican labor-hating officials of the great corporations, he complains because organized labor is supporting Franklin Roosevelt for reelection, and because the salary of President Tobin of the teamsters union has been increased to $20,000 a year.

The words, of which complaint is here made and which were not uttered on the floor, are as follows:

He (the reference is to the Member from the Fourth District of Michigan) complains * * * because the salary of President Tobin of the teamsters union has been increased to $20,000 a year.

No such statement was made by me. What was said will be found on page 12562 of the RECORD under date of September 24, in the first paragraph at the top of the right-hand column, and these are the words:

A few days ago another union announced that it would contribute $20,000 to purchase radio time for Candidate Roosevelt's campaign speech.

The result of the insertion of the words of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] in the RECORD on page 12564 is to charge the Member from the Fourth District of Michigan with the making of a statement against the official of a labor union, which he never made.

II

Apparently based upon the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], there was published in Labor, a newspaper of wide circulation, in the issue of October 1, 1940, among other things, the following:

[From Labor, a national weekly newspaper, October 1, 1940]

HOFFMAN SOUNDLY SPANKED FOR BITTER ATTACK ON LABOR—SABATH TAKES MICHIGANDER "TO CLEANERS" FOR CHARGING UNIONS SABOTAGE DEFENSE PROGRAM AND SLANDERING F. D.

Scarcely a day passes that Congressman CLARE E. HOFFMAN (Republican, Michigan), does not rise in the House and make a bitter attack on organized labor. He reached the limit of vindictiveness this week and so exasperated Congressman ADOLPH J. SABATH (Democrat, Illinois) that he broke into the debate and took the Michigander to "the cleaners."

SABATH, who is "father" of the House and chairman of the powerful Rules Committee, resented HOFFMAN'S statement that organized labor, in insisting on the maintenance of wage and hour standards, is hindering the national-defense program, and that President Roosevelt, in demanding that labor's rights must be safeguarded, is guilty of something like treason and is giving aid and comfort to Hitler.

"Of course," SABATH said, "we know HOFFMAN is at all times opposed to organized labor. He will criticize unions in spite of the fact that the laboring people earn barely enough to exist on. Very few of them earn enough to justify the luxury of ever getting sick and laying off.

"While denouncing the workers, the gentleman from Michigan has only praise for industrialists who draw from $100,000 to $150,000 a year, and then up to $300,000 as bonuses. He is not interested in that. He berates laboring men who might get 75 cents an hour and belong to a union. That is against his convictions.

"The gentleman has no bone to pick with Ernest T. Weir, head of Weirton Steel, one of the worst enemies of organized labor in all the United States. Perhaps this is because Mr. Weir is treasurer of the Republican National Committee and is now working overtime collecting contributions from big business in the hope of getting his friend Willkie into the White House.

"The very corporations which the gentleman from Michigan upholds and whose officials are the most critical of the Roosevelt administration and of labor have made the most staggering profits in recent years.

"All honest, intelligent working men and women recognize the fact that Roosevelt has been the most consistent friend that labor ever had in the White House, and they will not forget the fact on election day.

"To charge labor with sabotage and the President with aiding Hitler is a vile slander."

A search of the RECORD and of the official transcript of the stenographer fails to show that the Member from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] made the statement: "To charge labor with sabotage and the President with aiding Hitler is a vile slander," on the floor of the House. Yet it appears as a quotation from his remarks in this newspaper publication.

As a matter of fact, the Member from Michigan did not charge labor with sabotage, but did charge certain so-called organizers, certain racketeers, with sabotage of the national-defense program, and did ask whether or not the President was not, by his acts of commission and omission, slowing up the national-defense program and so giving aid to Hitler.

The insertion in the RECORD, by way of a revision and extension, of the statement:

He complains * * * because the salary of President Tobin of the teamsters union has been increased to $20,000 a year—

Was the insertion of a statement attributed to the Member from Michigan, which he had not made.

The quotations from the newspaper falsely charge that the Member from Michigan charged organized labor with hindering the national-defense program by insisting on the maintenance of wage and hour standards, and the newspaper article and the purported quotation from the RECORD charged the Member from Michigan with having, on the floor of the House, uttered an untruth, and these statements, each in itself and taken together, reflect upon the character and the reputation, the ability, and the patriotism, of the Member from Michigan in his representative capacity and tend to impair the value of his service as a Representative.

The SPEAKER. The question of privilege rises on the language in the article appearing in the paper, Labor, whether it is the language of the gentleman from Illinois or the language of the paper:

To charge labor with sabotage and the President with aiding Hitler is a vile slander.

The gentleman from Michigan is recognized.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, on two occasions recently the gentleman from Illinois has taken occasion on the floor to charge, after remarks made by me, that I was against organized labor, and that statement was picked up by a C. I. O. newspaper, enlarged upon, and to it was added the statement just read by the Speaker. The gentleman from Illinois did not make the statement contained in the C. I. O. paper, Labor. The newspaper nevertheless carried it as a quotation made on the floor of the House. It is my purpose, however, to answer in that same connection the other statement which was made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] in substance and to the effect that I was against organized labor and had said or intimated at least that labor was holding up the defense program.

Several times on the floor I have spoken to the effect that our defense program was being delayed. Always have I been careful to show in that connection that it was not the workers themselves who were delaying our preparations for defense, that it was the organizers or racketeers who attempt to act for organized labor, who prey upon the worker. The subject of labor racketeers has been discussed several times by Westbrook Pegler in the newspapers of the country and his articles are commended to your attention.

The gentleman from Illinois, in replying to my argument, instead of answering my charge retaliates with a statement that I am defending the industrialists of the country. If you will go through the RECORD for the last 2 years you will see that I have not discussed the methods or procedure of American industrialists. Anyone desiring a prejudiced, biased view of American industry can get it by reading the reports of the Senate Civil Liberties Committee. Anyone desiring a fair and an unbiased view of the activities of American industrialists can easily get it by going into towns and cities where these industries exist and either view for himself conditions as they are or ascertain those conditions from residents of the various communities.

The gentleman from Illinois has no more ground for his charge that I am standing behind reprehensible practices on the part of manufacturers, if there be such, than I would have to charge that he is championing the cause of Scalise who has been sentenced to the penitentiary for a term of years and who got his money out of trafficking in or as a tribute from vice. As well might I say that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] defends and champions the cause of Bioff, who has also served time on a pandering charge, the labor organizer or union official who became wealthy from dues collected from scrubwomen. I say there is no more justification for the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] making the charge that I am defending these industrialists, who are guilty of violations of the law, than there would be for me to make the charge that he is defending Scalise and Bioff, convicted criminals, labor-union officials, and racketeers. I am not making any such charge against him because it would be absurd.

His charge that I am opposed to organized labor is equally absurd. The other day, when talking about the situation at Fort Custer, I made the following remarks. See page 12562 of the RECORD of September 24, 1940.

I do not believe that the rank and file of organized labor—honest, patriotic men and women as they are—nor will I believe until they so state themselves that either William Green, president of the A. F. of L., or John L. Lewis, head of the C. I. O., will go before the American people with the announced policy that only members of a labor organization shall be permitted to work at the lucrative jobs supplied by the national-defense program.

I am asking the presidents of those two great organizations whether they are back of the program which declares that, before an American citizen can work in an industry geared to national defense, on a project, for example, the building of cantonments for shelter for conscripted soldiers, that man must pay a fee fixed by some union official.

I ask these two great leaders: Would not such a policy substitute for our government of, by, and for the people, a government of, by, and for union officials?

I ask the president of the American Federation of Labor and the president of the Congress of Industrial Organizations: Are you or your organizations permitting men who are acting, or assuming to act, as representatives of your organizations to require the payment of fifty, one hundred, or more dollars, by a patriotic American who wants to assist, through his labor, in the national-defense program before he will be permitted to pick up his tools and go to work?

In common with most Members of this House, I came up—if I am up—the hard way. Most of us know what manual labor means. In my judgment, there is not a Member of the House whose sympathy is not with organized labor. Our condemnation of racketeers, wearing the false label of union organizers and union officials, should be equally unanimous. Unfortunately, we fail at times to recognize them and are led to give them support because of our lack of diligence in ascertaining their real purpose, becoming familiar with the methods which they follow.

The point which I desired to make the other day and which I reiterate now is that—

THE C. I. O. DEMANDS WORKERS PAY TRIBUTE FOR NATIONAL DEFENSE JOBS

On the 24th of September, on the floor of the House, I made the direct charge that our national-defense program was being hindered and delayed by the acts and the omissions of Candidate Roosevelt. On that occasion I challenged the Democratic Party to dispute my claim.

No one arose to defend the President or dispute the charges made, except the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], who confined his remarks to an attack upon industrialists and upon me. He in no way, nor, so far as I know, has anyone else on the floor of the House, disputed the facts which I narrated; nor has anyone disputed the conclusions drawn from those indisputable facts.

Proof that we cannot adequately prepare for defense so long as the President permits the Labor Department, the National Labor Relations Board, and officials of a certain union to openly defy the War and Navy Departments and sabotage industrial production is now available.

The Smith committee, investigating the activities of the N. L. R. B., produced evidence from the files of the Board itself showing conclusively that the Board had aided the C. I. O. in its organizing drive and in its attack on industry.

It appeared in at least one case, that of Inland Steel, that the Board's secretary was instrumental in instigating a strike.

The C. I. O. has insisted over a period of years that it was entitled to collect tribute from every man who worked in industry. The Nation now being engaged in a preparedness program, it still maintains that attitude. It now insists that, although young American manhood is drafted for military service—yes; to fight in South America if the President so wills—that members of its organization must have a monopoly of those jobs which would supply those young men, called in Government service, wearing the country's uniform, with guns, munitions—in fact, all of those things which go to prepare our Nation against invasion.

Let me repeat that statement: The C. I. O. now insists that no one can work on Government orders having to do with national defense unless that man joins and pays tribute to its officials.

Why have an army, why have a navy, why have a defense council, if the C. I. O., sitting at the source of the production of all those things which are absolutely necessary for national defense, can prevent this Nation's preparing for war?

Why appropriate billions of dollars to purchase munitions of war? Why should the Army or the Navy enter into contracts for the production of planes, artillery, ships, if outside the Government there sits a group of men who have, or who assume, the authority to say, as they have said, that that money shall only be spent, that those orders shall only be executed, if and when and in the manner that certain union officials determine?

In any other government on earth such acts would be characterized as treason and the perpetrators thrown into prison or executed. But here in America, because a President of the United States is a candidate for reelection and desires the vote of the members of this particular organization, they are permitted to get away with it.

Proof of this is found in the opinion of Attorney General Jackson, who has ruled, in effect, that if the Labor Board has found a company guilty of an unfair labor practice, that company can no longer work on Government orders, even though the production of the material called for by the order is absolutely essential to our national defense.

The viciousness, as well as the absurdity, of this ruling and proof that, if it stands and is complied with, Congress has wasted its time, the Army and the Navy are at the mercy of a small group which is more interested in promulgating the doctrines of Soviet Russia than it is in the preservation of our union, is found in two cases which I will cite.

In the Waumbec Mills, Inc., case, the Board held, and its decision was affirmed by the Circuit Court of Appeals of the First Circuit that, if a company refused, because they were members of a union, to employ two men who never had worked for it it was guilty of an unfair labor practice.

It has been the practice of the Board, and the courts have approved that practice, where there was conflicting testimony as to the reason for the discharge of an employee, to accept the version offered by the employee and the union; that is to say, if a man seeking a job or a man having a job testified, or if a union representative testified, that he was refused employment or was discharged from a job by the company because he belonged to a union, and if, on the other hand, the foreman or the company officials testified that he was discharged because of some other reason, almost without exception the Board has found, and because of the provisions of the law that finding has been upheld by the courts, that he was denied employment or discharged because of union activities.

The company in those cases was held to be guilty of an unfair labor practice.

The practical result is that, if an applicant for work, who never, under the common acceptation of that term, was an employee, is refused work or is discharged for any reason other than that he belongs to a union, if he can produce a witness or if he is willing to testify that the refusal to give him work or the discharge is because of union activities, the Board orders him reinstated and holds the company guilty of an unfair labor practice.

Under the opinion of Attorney General Jackson, after such a holding has been made and until it has been reversed by the courts, and that procedure may require months, the company cannot work on a Government contract.

Nor is the situation remedied, if it be held that the policy shall not be followed until the holding of the Board is affirmed by the court. The Wagner law carries its own penalty for a violation.

As well might it be said that a man should not be permitted nor required to serve in the Army if he had been convicted of drunkenness as to say that a company shall not be permitted nor required to work on a Government contract if it violated the N. L. R. A. or any other law.

The Board has reached the height of absurdity in a recent decision involving the Nevada Consolidated Copper Co. Let me quote from a press account of that decision, and I do that because the N. L. R. B. has advised me that it could not furnish me with a copy of the decision. The press report is as follows:

> Four union members who did not apply for work when employer's mine resumed operations were discriminatorily refused employment where such persons refused to apply upon being advised by other employees that it was useless for union men to apply for work. Such persons' names appeared on employer's blacklist of union members whom superintendent admittedly would not employ, and it is clear that such persons would have been refused employment even though they had applied.

The Board ordered that the company pay these men who had not even applied for jobs—which is one step further than the holding of the Board in the Waumbec Mills, Inc., case.

Now, if this holding of the Board in the Copper Co. case stands, then men who never applied for jobs, but whose names appeared on a list of union members, whom it was admitted the company would not employ, must be paid; must be offered employment. The result is that the company is deprived of its day in court, of its opportunity to show that the names were on the list for reasons other than they belonged to a union and the company, because of the listing of the names, is held to be guilty of an unfair labor practice and cannot be awarded a Government defense contract.

Let me put it this way: If John Smith is a member of a union and has also been convicted of damaging the company's property, inciting riots or destroying machinery necessary to the manufacture of munitions of war, the company may be ordered, merely because his name is on this list of men who will not be employed, to pay him back wages, offer him employment, and may be held guilty of an unfair labor practice.

If the ruling of Attorney General Jackson stands, that company, which never employed the man and which may know that he is the agent of a foreign government, may be required, because he belonged to the union, to pay him back pay, give him employment, even though he be a convicted criminal, and may be held guilty of an unfair labor practice and can no longer work on Government defense contracts.

All the Communists need to do to sabotage our whole national-defense program is to have active members of their organization join a union. If the company then lists their names with those whom it will not employ, it becomes, without a hearing, guilty of an unfair labor practice and it cannot be granted, by the Army or the Navy, a contract to produce munitions of war.

Another result of this absurd ruling of the Board is that all a Communist, a man who believes in the overthrow of this Government, needs to do to secure a place where he can effectively carry out his destructive work is to join a union. If he joins the union, then, although he may be a traitor to our country, a thief, a robber, a kidnaper, the Board can hold, even before he seeks employment, that the company who so lists his name among the names of those it will not employ is guilty of an unfair labor practice and cannot work on a Government contract.

I challenge the Democratic Party to take a definite stand as to whether it will continue, as a party, through its national administration, to protect the Communists who are sabotaging our national-defense program, or whether it will bring in legislation to outlaw such decisions, such activities.

Yesterday's press carries this headline, "Grace will confer or get no steel, union head says." It is over a Buffalo, N. Y., date line, and continues with the statement that Eugene C. Grace, Bethlehem Steel Corporation president, "is either going to sit down at a conference table with us or he will get no steel."

That statement is attributed to Smile Chatak, a representative of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee. The Bethlehem Steel Corporation, according to the press, has 12 plants; it employs some 70,000 workers and has defense orders of more than a billion dollars.

The apparent purpose of the activities of Sidney Hillman and the opinion of Attorney General Jackson is to aid the C. I. O. in its organizing drive; give it control of industries where production is essential to national defense and furnish the excuse for the administration, if it can win the election, to take over private industry.

Again, Congress having appropriated billions of dollars for national defense, the Army and the Navy having entered into contracts for the construction of camps to house the National Guard and conscripted men and for the production of munitions of war, does the administration and the party in power intend to continue the practice which now prevails of permitting a group of men who have been granted no authority by the people of the United States, who occupy no municipal, State, or Federal official positions, to paralyze all Government activities by determining who shall and who shall not carry out this Government program? By fixing the terms on which, and only under which, men can carry on the defense program ordered by the people's Government?

In days gone by, the Republican Party was charged with being subservient to "an invisible government." Today, although it is said that our Nation is in grave peril of invasion, although war stares us in the face, the administration and the party in power accepts the dictation of men who hold no commission from the people.

By privileged resolutions, I asked the Navy Department and the War Department to give me information as to whether there was any requirement in the contracts let by the Government which limited those who might be employed by the Government to certain organizations. The answer was that there was not.

But to my further inquiry as to whether contractors and subcontractors engaged on Government work limited employees to members of certain organizations, the answer was that neither the War Department nor the Navy Department had the information.

I have some information on that subject and I will give it to you first-hand from letters which I received, omitting, for obvious reasons, the names of the writers and such parts as would identify them. The original letters are on file in my office.

Like and more complete information can be obtained by a half day's investigation by the F. B. I. or any Government agency.

I quote excerpts from some of those letters:

UNITED STATES POST OFFICE,
———, MICH., October 1, 1940.

Hon. CLARE HOFFMAN,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Perhaps you have been acquainted with this situation prior to receipt of this notice, but anyway it has leaked out that the carpenters' union of Calhoun County has taken upon itself the dictatorship of handling the labor situation at Fort Custer.

It is reported in this city, this mentioned union is demanding a fee (so reported from $25 to $50) of every man attempting to go to work on that project.

Knowing your attitude toward situations of this nature, also knowing you are not afraid to voice your opinion, I am trying to horn in and advise you of the fact, if it is true; in my opinion it looks like the labor day we enjoyed in this city 3 years ago in June.

If it is not true, which I hope is the fact, the major portion of the sane public would appreciate being advised of the fact. I for one fail to see how this can be allowed by a Government who is attempting to get somewhere by allowing a disgraceful thing of this kind to go on.

Don't take me that I am opposed to organized labor if it is not in the anarchist class, which this has all the earmarks of, if it is so.

Perhaps you may have other correspondence pertaining to this matter, thinking you would appreciate being advised of this,

I am, respectfully,

———.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE HOFFMAN: Just a note, as I know you are a very busy man. I cut this [clipping enclosed] out of the Kalamazoo Gazette so you could see. This is the truth, as my husband has to pay the $1 per day besides the $45 to join the union; you notice the comment on the ones that complained were ones who joined the union just to get in on the big pay. Yes; my husband has been registered at Holland for 7 years, and this is the first job he has gotten * * * is pretty outspoken in his views. This was so good I could not resist sending. The next day after this came out his boss came to him and talked with him real friendly and said he would get his $17.50 he had paid in Holland transferred to Battle Creek so that he would not have to pay the full $45 there.

Thanking you for a bit of bother I have been, we are,

———.

The clipping enclosed with the foregoing letter was as follows:

PAY NO TRIBUTE FOR CUSTER JOBS, CARPENTERS REPLY TO REPRESENTATIVE HOFFMAN

Orlo Westgate, business agent of the Kalamazoo carpenters' union, said "It's not the truth," in reply to Representative CLARE E. HOFFMAN, Allegan Republican, who yesterday charged on the floor of the House of Representatives that laborers seeking work on national-defense projects are required to "pay tribute" for the jobs and join unions.

In his charges HOFFMAN laid the blame for the alleged condition directly upon President Roosevelt, whom he said influences the National Labor Relations Board. HOFFMAN likened this to giving aid and comfort to the enemy.

"Into my offices have come letters, and to me have been made statements by responsible men, that carpenters seeking jobs at Fort Custer, in Calhoun County, Mich., are required to pay a union membership fee of $55," HOFFMAN said.

"The membership fee in the adjoining county of Kalamazoo, according to this information, is $37.50. When a Kalamazoo County union man in good standing applies for a job in the adjoining county of Calhoun, at Battle Creek, the Calhoun County union officials insist that the difference between the $55 and $37.50 be paid to it," HOFFMAN charged.

"Here is an instance of a union man in good standing, with his membership card in order, if this information be true—and it comes from a reliable source—required to pay an additional $17.50 before he can go to work on a Government project. Is this union being exploited, and, if so, by whom?"

In reply to HOFFMAN, Orlo Westgate, business agent of the Kalamazoo carpenters' union, commented that "It's not the truth."

"The initiation fee for membership in the carpenters' union in Battle Creek is $45," Westgate said. "The initiation fee in Kalamazoo is $25.

"Under the carpenters' rule in the United States," Westgate said, "if a man joins the carpenters' union and wishes to transfer his membership from that local into a local where the initiation fee is higher, he must pay the difference unless he has been a member for 2 years. If his (membership) card is 2 years old, he can clear it in any place in North America. If his card is less than 2 years old he must pay the difference in the membership fees of the locals concerned.

"This carpenters' rule has been in effect for the last 8 or 10 years. For the last 30 years the transfer could be made after a card had been carried 1 year. At the time of the Century of Progress in Chicago this was changed to 2 years.

"To the best of my knowledge and belief," Westgate said, "Battle Creek is handling the entire job in very nice shape and very reasonably. They are not asking any more than has been asked for years and are just following the constitution of the carpenters' union.

"I think the men are getting a fair deal in every way to the best of my knowledge and belief."

Westgate said "about 25 carpenters" from Kalamazoo are working at Fort Custer. He estimated that "about four or five" of that number had not had a membership card for 2 years and were required to pay the difference in membership fees.

Westgate expressed the opinion that the complaints had come from men who "had never carried a card, and were not first-class carpenters and wanted to slide in on the big money."

In his charges on the floor of the House of Representatives, HOFFMAN said further:

"By a Member of this House I was informed yesterday that where men applied for work on a Massachusetts defense project, which needed men, they were told by the contractor that they could not be employed unless they joined the union. From the same source came the information that the union fee was $75 per man," he said.

HOFFMAN proposed resolutions, one of which would set up a five-man House committee to investigate the conditions he alleged to exist, and another of which would call upon the Secretaries of War and the Navy to report on this condition.

KALAMAZOO, MICH., September 29, 1940.

Representative HOFFMAN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have carefully read the article in paper, Pay No Tribute For Fort Custer Jobs. I would like to say, I wrote you 2 years ago about what I call racketeer or shake-down money for a job on P. W. A. projects. I still ask why taxpayers or any citizens were forced to pay to work on post offices, bridges, schools, or any other P. W. A. project?

The Fort Custer work is nothing different than P. W. A.

* * * * * * *

I understand there are signs up at Camp Custer instructing workers they would have to go to their local union to get jobs. This was also done on P. W. A. projects.

I also ask who is going to war for the country? Labor racketeers or honest citizens?

We, the people, pay taxes for protection. Does the Constitution of the United States read that we also have to pay some labor organization for the right to work?

Is that either a free country or living up to the Constitution of the United States? Why should workers have to pay for a job or pay $1 a day to work on a job in case the worker does not live in that location? Why are labor racketeers allowed to force the likes of this? I supposed Michigan had a law against coercion. Ask people to write you and tell what they know.

When a contractor or industry puts up a notice saying see your local union before you can go to work, is that nothing more than coercion by the contractor? Why are these contractors so interested in making workers pay a labor order for a job? I personally think these contractors get a cut out of it. Suppose the Federal Government investigate the income taxes on these people, also labor shake-downers. Who knows but the most of this money will be used for political purposes. Especial help keep the political party in power that allows them to practice such rotten stuff. It is sure a stinking affair. This is what a neighbor of mine done. He paid $28 back dues to a union with a promise he would be put to work at Fort Custer. When he went to Fort Custer he was told he would have to go to Battle Creek to get a permit to work on the job. When he went to Battle Creek he was told he would have to pay for it. They got his money, he did not get a job. After your article came out in the paper he went after them about it. He may be put to work this week. Well they got his money, they don't need him. We will see how long he lasts. They are after some other sucker's money.

How long since the Battle Creek labor shake-downers took over Fort Custer? I would like to make a few suggestions:

1. All Government workers be declared open-shop work; that is, either union or nonunion have equal right to it.

2. To forbid a contractor to use a labor union for an employment agency—that is coercion.

3. The Army service set up an application office on the project and see each worker get his rights and just reason for a discharge. The Army service agency should take no considerations whether a union or nonunion.

I am 100 percent back of you for the piece you had in the paper. I do not believe you know within 90 percent of the dirty work that is going on.

I do not see any constitutional form of government or sign of a free country under this administration. We are free for one thing, that is pay shake-down money. I wrote you about 2 years ago about this dirty work on P. W. A.

* * * * * * *

There is one thing I hope Mr. Willkie will be elected. I feel he will stop rotten work. I hope he will free work so everybody will have a free right to work.

Organized labor is not for the workers, they are for their own members only. They have a monopoly on jobs. As long as they have a monopoly on work their organization will be working overtime while others are out of work or living on Government expenses.

Overtime work should be stopped on defense work, let them put on workers and extra shift till the unemployed has been put to work. There is no need of overtime work at Fort Custer, there are plenty looking for work.

Yours truly,

——— ———.

BATTLE CREEK, MICH., September 25, 1940.

MR. CLARE HOFFMAN.

DEAR SIR: I was very much pleased to read in tonight's Battle Creek Enquirer and News that you had taken up the labor case at Fort Custer, and I sincerely hope you follow it through. Personally I am not working there nor do I expect to, but as an American-born citizen, a taxpayer in Battle Creek for 25 years, I am disgusted with the rotten way the labor situation is handled and the fact that the contracting firm is given additional contracts.

I have no criticism to make if a man wants to join any union of his own free will, but this idea of having to pay tribute to labor racketeers to work for the Government is absolutely rotten from start to finish.

Everyone is paying taxes, union and nonunion alike, and everyone should be allowed to work when jobs are available regardless of union, politics, or color, or, in other words, I think anyone has a right to work for one's self, which in fact is the case of a Government project.

From the pieces in our paper it seems to me the contracting firm has made it very plain that they are 100 percent in favor of the plan they are following so zealously in the labor line. I have talked this over with many of my neighbors, shopmates, and business acquaintances, and all heartily agree that it is time something should be done to stomp down on it, but about all admit what can you do about it when the present administration don't want to see such things and won't do anything about them, as is the case of Harry Bridges, so I sincerely hope your investigation really means something and more than that, and may I hope it gets results. While I am writing this of my own free will, may I ask that you keep my name out, but you are welcome to use the letter as you see fit. In the shop where I work I have been in and out of the union, and in fairness to the men, union and nonunion alike, they have used me fine, and I hope the remaining 10 years to pension time will be as congenial. There is a possible chance that if you used my name in public it might cause me to have more or less trouble in so many ways that radical union men can devise and use, and at my age jobs are not so plentiful as years ago, so I wouldn't want to lose the position I have held for over 24 years. So I am sure you will see why I request you to omit my name in connection with this letter. In closing I wish you all success and anything else you desire within reason.

Sincerely yours,

——— ———.

KALAMAZOO, MICH., September 26, 1940.

Representative in Congress CLARE E. HOFFMAN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Enclosed you will find clipping from the Kalamazoo Gazette of September 25. God give us more men like you, who dare to take issue with these racketeers.

I am business agent for the Building Trades Local No. 32, Christian Labor Association of America. I am sure you are acquainted with us. I have been instructed to give the following information to you.

Mr. Orlo Westgate denies these charges made by you on floor of the House—but labor does pay tribute. Common laborers, I understand, are required to pay an initiation fee of $25 * * * carpenters $45. There being a shortage of good carpenters the * * * has agreed to allow men, members of good standing in the Christian Labor Association to work at Fort Custer if they will buy a work permit from the Battle Creek carpenters' local at $1 per day. We are absolutely not in accord with this racket! We think that the project, being paid for by the taxpayers of this country * * * should hire all able-bodied, qualified, American citizens.

There must not be a monopoly of this work by any one organization. That the Battle Creek * * * union desires this policy to continue can readily be understood, especially now during their drive for $25,000 with which to buy a "temple for labor."

We would like to see the job at Fort Custer made an open job or that the * * * be forced to honor memberships in other unions. They are not the only people who have to eat.

In closing, the Christian Labor Association thanks you for the stand you have taken and for what you have done for us in the past, and hopes that you may succeed in your fight for justice.

Sincerely yours,

PETER SMIT,
Business Agent, Christian Labor Association.

VICKSBURG, MICH., September 25, 1940.

Hon. CLARE E. HOFFMAN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Have just finished reading in the Kalamazoo Gazette a denial of your charges of tribute being paid by workers at Fort Custer, by Orlo Westgate, business agent of the Kalamazoo Carpenters' Union. Your charges are absolutely correct except that the fee in Kalamazoo is $25 and in Battle Creek $45, and they have been collecting the difference of $20, unless one had carried a card 2 or more years.

A week ago, however, they quit taking men into the carpenters' union, and it is now necessary to pay tribute of $6.75 per week for a working permit in order to work there as a carpenter. This permit has to be renewed every Monday night. Common labor has to join the union for $25.

Respectfully yours,

——— ———.

BATTLE CREEK, MICH., September 26, 1940.

Representative HOFFMAN: I see our Enquirer News has your name in connection with wages at Fort Custer. Perhaps you should know.

Labor wages for directly under Captain Hayden, also Colonel Wilkinson, is 45 cents per hour. Carpenters, 62½ cents per hour; and these laborers and several carpenters are putting in sewers, manholes, and so forth, around and with the $1 per hour for 8 hours; $1.50 for the ninth hour. No extra time and one-half for the ones working direct for the United States.

Now, find an answer to this; we are not allowed to hire a man who is employed by W. P. A. Now, you may wonder how I know these facts. I've been at Fort Custer for some time as carpenter for Colonel Wilkinson and Major Hahn before.

I am supposed to be loaned to Captain Hayden—and there is any number of men required. I am supposed to sort out the ones we want, as I really know the ones who are O. K. My orders are to take no one off W. P. A. Only Thursday I required four carpenters, one knew he was to be laid off—I knew that—but I am not allowed to put him at work.

Respectfully,

———.

I ask the President of the United States, as I asked him once before a year or two ago, who is the boss in this country? Is it the Chief Executive or is it the head of some union who is interested in his own political advancement?

Congress, at the President's request, will, when it adjourns, have appropriated something like $15,000,000,000, most of it for national defense. At the President's request, the National Guard, hundreds of thousands of men, have been called from their homes and from their businesses to serve their country at any point in the Western Hemisphere to which the President's fancy may send them.

Millions of American citizens are being called upon to register and millions will be conscripted, drafted, into the Government service to repel, according to the President, threatened invasion.

Yet here in America, after all of these preparations for defense or for war have been made, an organization in which it is admitted Communists are active, is permitted, prior to the election, to defy the Army and the Navy, as it did once before at Detroit in the Bohn Aluminum & Brass Corporation strike, to hinder and delay our national-defense program.

The organization which does this is the same as that which, in a prior campaign, contributed more than a half million dollars to the President's campaign fund. It is an organization which is supporting him openly and actively.

The foregoing facts show, Candidate Roosevelt, that, while you have talked for national defense, called upon the Nation and the citizens of the Nation to make supreme sacrifices for national defense, you are, for the purpose of securing votes, permitting officials of this organization, the vast majority of whose members are loyal and patriotic, to interfere with and delay the program which you have called upon the Nation to complete.

I challenge the majority party, if they believe in national defense, if they believe in preparedness, to bring forth, before we adjourn, legislation which will remedy that situation and which will prevent that kind of sabotage. [Applause.]

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 8930) to amend section 202 (3), World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended, to provide more adequate and uniform administrative provisions in veterans' laws, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 2, line 12, strike out "or", where it appears the first time.

Page 2, lines 12 and 13, strike out "compensation" and insert "compensation, a veteran discharged from the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard for disability incurred in line of duty, or a veteran of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard in receipt of pension for service-connected disability."

Page 4, line 17, strike out all after "Provided," down to and including "met", in line 24, and insert "That where the death of a veteran occurred on or after March 20, 1933, and claim for burial allowance was not filed, or was filed after the expiration of the regulatory period, or was filed within the regulatory period and disallowed, the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is hereby authorized and directed to receive and adjudicate a claim filed within 2 years after the date of enactment of this act and to grant burial allowance under the provisions of laws and regulations governing such allowance as amended by this act."

"'III. "SEC. 12. No benefits under this section shall be awarded unless application be made therefor within 2 years after such injury or aggravation was suffered, or such death occurred, or after the date of enactment of this act, whichever is the later date."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, is this the same bill the gentleman called up earlier in the day?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; it is the same bill that was called up earlier in the day. I see that the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS], the ranking minority member of the committee, is present. We sent down to the Veterans' Administration and got a statement on these amendments, and I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that this statement be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

SENATE AMENDMENTS TO H. R. 8930, SEVENTY-SIXTH CONGRESS

1. Section 2 of H. R. 8930, which would amend the burial provisions of Veterans Regulation No. 9 (a), paragraph II, is amended to enlarge the scope of eligibility for the $100 burial allowance to include veterans discharged from the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard for disability incurred in line of duty or a veteran of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard in receipt of pension for a service-connected disability.

This amendment was found advisable because of the passage by both Houses of Congress of H. R. 7731 which granted such eligibility and which was approved by the President October 5, 1940, Public, No. 796, Seventy-sixth Congress. To omit this particular provision would in effect repeal Public, No. 796.

2. This amendment also appears in section 2 of the bill which would amend paragraph IV of Veterans Regulation No. 9 (a), as amended, to permit of the adjudication of a larger number of claims where the death of the veteran occurred on or after March 20, 1933. The prior language would not have permitted the payment of claims previously filed within the regulatory period and denied. The new language will permit the adjudication of claims under the amendatory provisions where the death of the veteran occurred on or after March 20, 1933, and claim for burial allowance was not filed, or was filed after the expiration of the regulatory period, or was filed within the regulatory period and disallowed, if claim is filed within 2 years after the date of enactment of the act.

3. This amendment would amend section 3 of H. R. 8930, which has to do with the probihition of collection of indebtedness due the United States by set-off or otherwise due of benefits payable under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration. The amendment would have the effect of clarifying the provisions in the particular section which provides that the exemption provided in the section shall be inapplicable to indebtedness existing against the particular insurance contract upon the maturity of which the claim is based. The amendment is for the purpose of removing any doubt as to the types of indebtedness relating to insurance.

4. This amendment substitutes a new section for section 8 of the bill. Section 8 provided for the effective dates of payments under section 7 of the bill.

This amendment would substitute a new section for section 8 which provides for the effective dates of payments of compensation provided in section 7 of the bill relating to service-connected misconduct cases. The Senate amendment is for the purpose of making the effective dates uniform with the present law and is liberalizing in its effect by permitting the payment from date of death if claim is filed within 1 year from date of death, except, of course, in no event shall compensation be therein authorized to be effective prior to the date of the enactment of the act.

5. This amendment would amend section 9 of the bill pertaining to payment of benefits in certain forfeiture cases to clarify the reference to the provisions of section 504 World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended. This is a clarifying amendment.

6. This amendment would add a new section to the bill to be known as section 10. It would amend Veterans Regulation No. 11 by adding a new paragraph III providing for the application of that regulation under any of the laws administered by the Veterans' Administration, and to provide that the Administrator may release information, statistics, or reports to individuals or organizations when in his judgment such release would serve a useful purpose. The first part of the new paragraph is to establish uniformity and remove administrative complications resulting from the present necessity of administering Veterans Regulation No. 11 and certain provisions of the pension laws concurrently as to the different groups. As to the proviso, the restrictions contained in existing regulation have precluded the Administrator from releasing information, statistics, or reports to individuals or organizations where it was apparent the release would serve a useful purpose. The provision is to provide a necessary discretion governing the release of information and to facilitate better administration.

7. This amendment would add a new section to the bill to be known as section 11. The purpose of this amendment is to establish uniformity with reference to finality of decisions of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs on questions of law and fact in existing law, the provision being similar to that contained in section 5, Public, No. 2, Seventy-third Congress.

8. This amendment would add a new section to the bill to be known as section 12. This section has to do with the payment of compensation to a veteran who suffers injury or aggravation of an existing injury as result of having submitted to an examination under authority of any laws granting monetary or other benefits to World War veterans, and such injury or aggravation results in additional disability to or the death of the veteran. Under the existing provisions of Public, No. 141, Seventy-third Congress, compensation is restricted to injuries or aggravation resulting from examinations under the War Risk Insurance Act or the World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended. The section would extend the right to benefits in connection with examinations under existing laws other than those heretofore specified.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object—and I shall not object—to the gentleman's original request, Mr. Speaker, I believe we are placed in a very uncomfortable and a very unfortunate position in the House because, as I understand, the Senate has begun 3-day recesses; there is no quorum present there, and no more work will be done for some time, so we must accept these amendments or get nothing. We were very much disappointed, and I know the House was, that the bills we passed in the House that added quite a good deal to the veterans' benefits were not placed in this bill as amendments in spite of the efforts of the distinguished gentleman from Connecticut, Senator DANAHER, and the distinguished gentleman from Louisiana, Senator ELLENDER. The veterans certainly are getting very little out of this Congress, with all the millions that have been spent. It is obvious that veterans' legislation is not regarded as "must" legislation by this administration. I know the chairman has worked tremendously hard, as has every other member of the World War Veterans' Committee, to help the veterans this year. The previous bill also passed the House, as you know, but the Senate has not passed it.

Mr. RANKIN. I will say in response to that statement that I was very much in hope the Senate would add, as an amendment, H. R. 9000, the widows and orphans bill, and I was also in hope they would add the bill introduced by the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] which we passed a few days ago, that would have protected service-connected cases of World War veterans and placed the burden of proof on the Government when they had made out a prima facie case, but, of course, we cannot govern the body at the other end of the Capitol. They have sent this bill back with amendments and after reading the amendments carefully I am of the opinion that they ought to be adopted; but in order to be on the safe side, I took this proposition up, as did the gentlewoman from Massachusetts, with the Veterans' Administration, and we have the assurance that these amendments will all be beneficial, and the majority of them will be for the benefit of the veterans, and the others, while not injuring the veterans, will assist the administration in administering the laws and regulations they now have.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. And, obviously, it is accept this or have no legislation.

Mr. RANKIN. If we do not accept it, we will not get any legislation at least until after the 18th of November. As I understand it, the Senate has agreed to take 3-day recesses from now until the 18th of November, which means there will be no legislation enacted during that time.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I understand there is no quorum there today, so if anyone wanted to object to any bill it would not go through. We all feel very bitterly disappointed about this, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. PITTENGER. I noticed in the reading of one of the amendments language to the effect that the decision of the Administrator of the Veterans' Bureau is final and that there can be no appeal. Is not that correct?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. PITTENGER. I do not like that sort of language. Why cannot we disagree to the amendment——

Mr. RANKIN. That does not change existing law.

Mr. PITTENGER. Well, it ought to; and why can we not disagree to the Senate amendments and have it go to conference.

Mr. RANKIN. No; it ought not to change existing law, because you have nobody to whom to appeal. You would have to go back and try the suit in the court. You do not appeal from the Veterans' Administration directly to the courts, at any rate.

Mr. PITTENGER. I am not sure that is a wise policy, but what is wrong with disagreeing to the Senate amendments and sending this to conference?

Mr. RANKIN. I will tell the gentleman exactly what is wrong with it. If the gentleman wants to kill the bill, that would be the way to do it.

Mr. PITTENGER. No; I do not want to kill the bill, neither do I want the Senate to legislate for the House.

Mr. RANKIN. The members of the Veterans' Committee have looked over that amendment and they find no objection to it.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, the House should not establish the precedent of passing legislation about which it knows little, because, perchance, the Senate has recessed. I believe, as a matter of fact, the Senate will be in session Monday. I presume they will recess from Thursday or Friday until Monday, but they have not precluded themselves from the right to do business on Monday.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield.

Mr. BULWINKLE. It is my understanding there is an agreement that nothing would be taken up that is controversial.

Mr. MICHENER. That is an agreement backstage, but I understand the record will show that if anyone wanted to be ugly enough to take up controversial business on Monday he could do so, but that is no excuse for passing important legislation in this way.

I shall not object if the committee states that this bill is proper legislation, but I shall object if the committee feels that this measure should have more consideration. The expediency of the hour is no excuse for placing doubtful laws on the statute books.

Mr. RANKIN. Let me say to the gentleman from Michigan that at any rate this is an administrative measure. It does not provide compensation for disabled veterans or for their dependents. To object to this request and send it to conference would make it doubtful whether we would get any conference, and I do not know how long it would stay in conference if we did. I am reasonably sure it would not get back here for sometime at least.

Mr. MICHENER. If the Veterans' Committee favors this amendment I shall not object, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I would like to state to the House that, regarding insurance cases, this does not do away with any rights in a court case on an insurance matter and so far as the Comptroller General is concerned he will not have the power to hurt the veteran as much as at present.

Mr. RANKIN. Not at all.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I cannot tell just how far the other provision goes, but I think it is either this or nothing. I am sure the Senate is not going to do any work during this recess, if I can trust the reports I have heard.

Mr. RANKIN. I have read carefully the other provision and I cannot see where the veterans would lose a single right under this amendment.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. But in the bill there are several provisions in the veterans' favor in compensation, such as a 10-dollar increase in compensation for the loss of an arm or a leg or both arms and both legs or both eyes. Section 8, for instance, gives additional rights to the veterans.

A question has been raised as to the effect of and the need of section 11 added to H. R. 8930 and I understand the Veterans' Administration took the point of view that primarily it provides that except in the event of a suit on an insurance contract under section 19 of the World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended, whether such suit be on a policy of war-risk term, United States Government life—converted, or National Service Life Insurance, the decisions of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs on any question of fact or law arising under the acts administered by the Veterans' Administration shall be final and conclusive and not subject to review by any other official or any court of the United States.

Fundamentally, with the exception noted, all of the benefits payable under acts administered by the Veterans' Administration constitute gratuities as to which it lies within the constitutional power of the Congress to prescribe whether the Government may be sued, and without which specific provision of law consent to be sued does not exist. This is entirely separate and apart from the former action known as mandamus, which action, under the present rules, pertaining to suits in the courts of the United States is preserved essentially although under another form. But this remedy which is very restricted in its nature and scope exists, if at all, in a given instance only to require that ministerial action be taken and may not and never could be availed of to control discretionary action. Therefore, the declaration in a statute that such discretionary decisions are final insofar as may concern court action does not affect any existing remedy. Such finality does, however, preclude review of the decision by any other Government official who otherwise might have the power or authority to make such review.

The Congress has seen fit to insert this provision in several of the more important and complete acts granting gratuities, including the World War Veterans' Act, section 5, the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, section 310, and Public, No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, section 5. Clearly such provisions would also be held to apply to amendments to such acts but the Congress has enacted a number of supplemental laws which are not directly amendatory to said primary enactments. It would be legislatively inapt to reenact all desirable general provisions in each of these supplemental or independent laws. To avoid this difficulty, general enactments have been placed in effect, such as Public, No. 262, Seventy-fourth Congress, providing uniform procedure relative to guardianship matters, embezzlements, and exemptions. Similarly, in this bill under consideration a like general provision is contained respecting apportionments of compensation or pension payable under any law administered by the Veterans' Administration. From this point of view it would seem that the amendment contained in section 11 is desirable for the purpose of uniformity and to make clear what is believed to be the intention of Congress that the various laws shall be uniformly administered in accordance with the liberal policies governing the Veterans' Administration. I believe that the Veterans' Administration should be more liberal and I should be much better satisfied if this bill with the Senate amendments could go to conference, but with the situation in the Senate as it is today, with so many Members away, I believe it would be impossible to secure any veterans' legislation. There are benefits amounting to $300,000 in this bill which I do not wish to see jeopardized. It is a tragedy that this bill comes to the House so late and that so little has been done for our disabled veterans.

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; they get some benefit out of it.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. In answer to the statement of our colleague the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PITTENGER], is it not a fact that the existing law with reference to compensation provides that the decision of the Administrator is final?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. And nothing is taken away from the veterans under the language of this bill. On the other hand, there are a number of benefits extended to the veterans under this bill, and if we do not accept the Senate amendments those veterans will be denied the additional benefits because we will not be able to get a conference report considered at least until after November 18.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman is entirely correct.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THE LATE HON. WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, at the time of the death of our beloved Speaker I had to leave town because of death in my own family.

I came here in the Sixty-sixth Congress. Speaker BANKHEAD came here in the Sixty-fifth Congress. We worked together for many years on legislation for the youth of our country and for the rehabilitation of the disabled in which I know he had a most sympathetic interest, and so did I. We were fast friends for 22 years. Not very long before he passed away I was in his office and I remember the one thing in particular he said, "I am so tired."

While this may be a little belated, I felt I would like to say something in the nature of a tribute to this great man. I know of no man in public life for whom I have had more profound respect and affection than I had for our beloved Speaker, Hon. WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD. I might liken him to one of the weavers described by Anson Chester in his beautiful poem. He told the story of those weavers who make those wonderful tapestries in Persia that often appear on the walls of museums and palaces in the capitals of various countries. He said they never see anything but a blueprint, because they work on a loom where they always work from the underside and they tie thousands of knots to the square inch and work from sunrise to sunset in the most awkward and painful positions. They would at times feel like rebelling against the work because they were unable to see the beauty of the top of the tapestry, but at the end, after 2 or 3 years, the master weaver would come, because the last knot had been tied; the tapestry would be lowered, and the weavers would gather around and see the product of their work. They would weep and leap with joy as they saw its perfection. That was their reward.

I can think of the interest and satisfaction of our tenderhearted Speaker as he here with his toil and ability wove the tapestry of life for the crippled and for the blind and for other afflicted groups.

I like to think of my friends with that faith inspired by the observation of some practical experiences in life. We go down to the dock to see some friend depart, and we watch the ship sail away. Beyond the horizon of the natural we cannot see. Faith only can take us beyond it. We watch that ship disappear—first the hull and gradually the last tip of the mast disappears, and we say, "Well, she has gone." But I like to think of another shore, where people are watching the horizon and first they see a speck. It is the top of the mast, then the whole mast, and then the hull. Friends cry out, "Here she comes." Our Speaker has arrived among his friends. He has left us, but he has left a great work. Perhaps the greatest work of all kind can be described in the words, "There is no act of man in this life which is not the beginning of a chain of circumstances so great as that no human providence can give us the prospect to the end." His influence will be immortal among the young of this country and will increase their respect for this great Republic for which he labored so arduously and so well.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHANNON] is recognized for 10 minutes.

THE VOICE OF THOMAS JEFFERSON ON WAR

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, we are told that great voices such as those of Patrick Henry, Demosthenes, Cicero, and others, are still floating around. Some day someone will harness them, the fugitive fermentation of the brain of man will produce a device to capture them; and immediately monopoly will take over the patent and use it as a profit-making something to plunder the public.

I today wish to quote from a man, a thinker, who was loath to speak, who seldom made a speech, but oh how he did write. He wrote beautiful things and left them for mankind. He was a superstatesman. He was the kind of man who tells you of something that is to happen in the years to come. Not only does he tell you of things that are to be but likewise you can go back to his writings and find them as fresh, as true, and as applicable to today as the day he penned them.

Mr. Speaker, I call to your attention four quotations from Thomas Jefferson to men of his period. Every one of these Jefferson quotations is as appropriate today as it was when written. They should be read by everyone, and everyone who is charged with any part in government should give heed. They should stop, look, and listen.

Is there a world revolution on? And if so, is not the paramount issue, so far as America is concerned, the preservation of the Republic and the welfare of the American boy first, last, and all the time?

War, one enough: I have seen enough of one war never to wish to see another.—To John Adams.

One war, such as that of our Revolution, is enough for one life.—To M. Correa.

The cannibals of Europe are going to eating one another again. A war between Russia and Turkey is like the battle of the kite and snake. Whichever destroys the other leaves a destroyer the less for the world. This pugnacious humor of mankind seems to be the law of his nature, one of the obstacles to too great multiplication provided in the mechanism of the universe. The cocks of the henyard kill one another up. Bears, bulls, rams do the same. And the horse, in his wild state, kills all the young males, until, worn down with age and war, some vigorous youth kills him and takes to himself the harem of females. I hope we shall prove how much happier for man the Quaker policy is, and that the life of the feeder is better than that of the fighter; and it is some consolation that the desolation by these maniacs of one part of the earth is the means of improving it in other parts. Let the latter be our office, and let us milk the cow, while the Russian holds her by the horns and the Turk by the tail.—To John Adams.

War, quixotic: War against Bedlam would be just as rational as against Europe, in its present condition of total demoralization. When peace becomes more losing than war, we may prefer the latter on principles of pecuniary calculation. But for us to attempt by war to reform all Europe, and bring them back to principles of morality and a respect for the equal rights of nations, would show us to be only maniacs of another character. We should, indeed, have the merit of the good intentions as well as of the folly of the hero of La Mancha.—To William Wirt.

[Applause.]

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, for some time we have been receiving propaganda from an organization known as the American Committee for Non-Participation in Japanese Aggression. Under date of September 25, 1940, I have a note from them, signed by the executive secretary, Mr. Henry B. Price, and I presume every other Member of the House has also received one, as a cover to a 16-page document entitled "Pacific Strategy: A Key to American Defense."

For the purpose of the RECORD I call attention to the fact that on the left side of the letterhead we find the name of Hon. Henry L. Stimson as the honorary chairman, and then that is crossed out by a line through his name and his title. I assume that his name was crossed out upon his accepting the Secretaryship of War in the Cabinet of the President. Under his name appear those of Henry I. Harriman, A. Lawrence Lowell, Robert E. Speer, William Allen White, and H. E. Yarnell as honorary chairmen.

I have read this document with a great deal of interest, but particularly the last sentence, which I read to you:

The United States can make no greater contribution toward a turning of the tide than by moving promptly, without further delay, to end Japanese military aggression and to restore peace in the Pacific—a peace which, it can be hoped, might serve in its principles as a forerunner and prototype for a more universal peace later.

I do not want to comment now on this article except to state that to me this last sentence can mean two things. The words "moving promptly, without further delay, to end Japanese military aggression" may mean that we move promptly with our Navy and ultimately with our Army. It may also mean that we simply take economic measures to prevent her further aggression. I do not know which of these two things this language may have intended, but at all events it would seem from the newpapers and the radio that the United States is in a most hostile position. We have seen this coming for a long time and some of us have wondered how it might be avoided and averted. I for one cherish a somewhat faded hope that it can yet be averted. As I said a moment ago, I am not going to comment extensively on this article except to say further that as this action will occur in the Pacific if it does occur, the defenses of the Pacific coast are not yet in order. They are in order in certain portions, but in the portion in which I live, southern California, the defenses are not yet in order. It has not been planned, as I understand it, that they will be in order for another 2 years. If the United States is to follow the words in this document and "move promptly without further delay," and if that language expresses the views of Hon. Henry L. Stimson, the Secretary of War, then I ask you, and the Secretary of War, Should not the completion of the defenses of the Pacific Coast be attended to with the greatest possible dispatch? [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] is recognized for 10 minutes.

ANTITRUST ENFORCEMENT IS OF PRIMARY IMPORTANCE TO TRUE NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include a patriotic poem written by one of my constituents.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, vigorous enforcement of our antitrust laws, far from being an obstacle to the attainment of adequate national defense, is one of the most necessary elements in achieving the balanced strength which we all desire for our country. The purpose of this short speech is to demonstrate the truth of that statement.

When, a few months ago, I offered an amendment to the Justice Department appropriation bill to increase by $500,000 the appropriation for the Antitrust Division I believed it was important to forward the work of that Division in breaking up artificial monopoly controls of production and of price. But, until I began to look carefully into some of the facts connected with vital industries, I had little realization at that time how basically necessary this work was going to turn out to be from the standpoint of achieving full production of specific defense materials.

Every American recognizes that the success of the defense program of our country depends upon two things: First, the effective cooperation of all elements in our society, industry, labor, and Government; second, the removal of obstacles to the free flow of production, particularly the production of such items as are vital to the national defense.

There have been disturbing reports in recent months that antitrust activity might be suspended in order to secure cooperation of certain powerful industrial groups in the national-defense effort. Indeed, at least one suit was delayed for a period of 2 months and then modified in certain respects before it was instituted, because of concern by some officials outside the Department of Justice that the suit as originally planned might interfere with the cooperation of industry.

Since one of the central aims and purposes of our whole defense effort is the protection of our system of free enterprise, it seems to me important to present to the House the other side of the picture with respect to the enforcement of the antitrust laws. I believe that the enforcement of the antitrust laws is more than ever important during a crisis like the present. Not only is the vigorous prosecution of antitrust suits and the breaking of monopolistic power over American industry important from the standpoint of the preservation of American institutions, the achievement of parity for agriculture, and the maintenance of opportunity for small business, but it is also important from the standpoint of obtaining a full volume of production of essential defense materials at a price which is fair and just to the Government of the United States and the American people.

In the stresses and excitement of the last few months I think that not enough attention has been paid to the revelations of some of the Department of Justice investigations of collusive arrangements, and artificial production and price restrictions, in respect to defense materials and vital consumers goods. These disclosures are, however, highly significant and indicate the need of constant governmental vigilance in the antitrust field if we are to carry through successfully our defense program on a reasonably economic and efficient basis, and if we are to accomplish the very difficult task of protecting our consumers from exploitation during the period of emergency.

Let me cite a few examples of what I mean. Military optical instruments such as range finders, height finders, torpedo directors, and high-quality glass lenses are absolutely essential to effective armament. The Department of Justice in a recent indictment, to which the defendants pleaded nolo contendere and paid fines, charged an American company with monopolistic practices in this industry, the effect of which was to restrict the source of supply for these very necessary instruments. In this indictment the Government alleged that our Army and Navy were charged arbitrary and unreasonable prices on account of the artificial restrictions on production imposed in violation of the antitrust laws. Whether or not the productive capacity which was lost to this country through the restrictive contracts and agreements of the company in question can be regained in time to offset the harm done is a question. But at least the elimination of these practices by consent decree entered into by the company will assure an open market in the future.

Tungsten carbide is a metal composition which forms a vital part of certain machine tools because of its hard cutting edge. It is also the keystone of the wire industry, and is gradually becoming more important in wear resistant parts of all kinds of machinery. Its importance in national defense is obvious. Production of tungsten carbide has been controlled in a monopolistic manner since 1928. Prior to that time it was selling as low as $48 a pound, but after the monopoly went into effect it began to sell at from $205 to $453 a pound. This exorbitant price was in effect until a few weeks ago when it was exposed in an indictment by the Department of Justice. Almost immediately price reductions were put in effect. Indeed, the price of certain machine tools has more than been cut in half since the indictment was returned, and announcements have already been made that further price reductions are in sight. I need hardly emphasize the great importance of this to the national-defense program.

It is well known that no material is more important to the production of airplanes than aluminum. It is a matter of common knowledge that one corporation controls the whole field of aluminum production in the United States. The Department of Justice charges in its pending suit against the Aluminum Co. of America that through a conspiracy and combination with all the aluminum producers in the world that company has effectively limited the production and sale of aluminum in the United States. It is further charged that the Aluminum Co. has maintained a policy of restricted production and high prices which can only be accomplished in the absence of competition. If this policy has resulted in a shortage of aluminum, the importance of which to the national defense certainly cannot be denied, it is something we surely should know about.

Magnesium is also of utmost importance in aircraft production. The Minerals Yearbook for 1939 discloses, page 705, that in the world output of 22,000 metric tons, Germany contributed 12,000 tons, and the United States only 2,410 tons, and that since 1927 only one company has been producing magnesium in the United States. It is certainly of interest to this Congress to have determined the reasons why this large difference between American and German manufacture of magnesium exists and why there is only one American producer. Magnesium in many cases can replace aluminum. In addition it is one-third lighter. We ought to know precisely why it is that the price of magnesium is sufficiently high so that it does not pay producers to replace aluminum with it. Specifically, magnesium sells for 27 cents a pound, while aluminum sells for 18 cents a pound, thus eliminating any advantage in lightness which characterizes magnesium. It is important to know whether these two metals are controlled by the same interests and whether competition between them has been eliminated so that the production of magnesium has been effectively restricted. Pending Department of Justice investigations, supplemented if need be by appropriate congressional investigations, should determine this fact.

I am glad that the Senate has created a committee to investigate the extent to which foreign corporations have exercised a control over American production in vital defense industries, because in at least three of the cases I have cited so far it appears that the monopolistic controls and practices existed not on a national but on an international scale and that powerful foreign interests have been in a position to influence if not to dictate the extent and conditions of American production. And in all three cases the foreign interests have been German.

Not only is it important that monopolies should be prevented from restricting production or artificially holding up the price of the materials essential for national defense, but particularly at a time like this is it important that no industrial combinations should be in a position to overcharge American consumers for important items of general consumption. Everyone knows that the success of this defense effort may depend in part upon the tightening of the belt of practically all groups in American society, but there is no justice in compelling consumers generally to face a situation in which they are able to afford at best a wholly inadequate diet because they are paying more than they should for other necessary goods of one kind or another. There is no reason why consumers should be made to sacrifice necessary food and clothing because they are being charged excessive and noncompetitive prices for gasoline and other petroleum products which are now necessities of life.

Free markets, free competition, and free opportunity for all business is as important or more important today than it ever was before.

It was found by the Supreme Court in the Madison oil case that the major oil companies that were defendants in that proceeding had unreasonably and arbitrarily eliminated price competition between them and fixed the prices of petroleum products at noncompetitive levels. The Court there held that the purpose of the defendants' agreements was to raise and maintain prices to jobbers and consumers. In the ethyl gasoline case the Supreme Court found that the defendants' licensing agreements covering a patented fluid compound going into most modern motor fuel were used to maintain prices to consumers. The Department of Justice in its suit against 22 major oil companies and their affiliates and subsidiaries, filed on September 30, 1940, charges various price-fixing practices and devices in the production and refining, transportation, and marketing of petroleum products which, if borne out by the evidence, certainly constitute a cause for major concern. These practices, if it is shown that they are taking place, are of the utmost importance not only to independent producers but also to consumers because of the many millions of dollars a year which they must spend for petroleum products, not only in the fuel that they must burn in their cars, but also in the heating of their homes and in many other incidental but important uses. If they are overcharged for gasoline and petroleum products they obviously have less money available for other necessary commodities; and we must remember that 19,000,000 families in this country have incomes of $1,500 a year or less.

Another monopolistic practice in the oil industry which no doubt will be thoroughly explored in the Government's suit and which also deserves the serious consideration of Congress is the control by the major oil companies of petroleum pipe lines. Surely it is to the advantage of the American people and our Government to have the means of transportation for petroleum on an open and equitable basis for the use of all producers and refiners on like terms, rather than to have such means of transportation controlled by a small number of major oil companies. It would seem to me that the national interest is obviously served better by a situation of untrammeled competition than by one in which the most important means of the transportation of oil are controlled by some of the principal shippers themselves.

I think it would also be greatly in the interest of national defense if the tin deposits of Bolivia were developed as fully as possible. I am not familiar with the reasons why these deposits have not been more fully developed, but it would seem to me that it would be important to try and find out. It has been rumored that one reason may be a centralization of control over these Bolivian deposits by some of the same interests, largely British, which are likewise interested in the tin deposits of the Far East. The Minerals Yearbook reports, page 683, that one of the strategic materials in which the United States is deficient is tin. The Bureau of Mines reports that "during the past 5 years 81 percent of the foreign purchases were obtained from Asia—69 percent from British Malaya— 18 percent from Europe, and 1 percent elsewhere." Thus, in 1937 we imported 66,709 tons from British Malaya and 112 tons from Bolivia, and in 1938 we imported 36,673 tons from British Malaya and only 25 tons from Bolivia. The reasons for this should be investigated.

I want to urge upon the Members of the House that we must not make the same mistake in this country which was made in many foreign countries of allowing free enterprise to disappear and centrally controlled private cartels to take its place. In Germany after the last war the Government permitted the self-regimentation of industries to proceed without restriction. Germany attempted in 1923 to enact by decree a regulation similar to our antitrust laws, but the tradition of free enterprise was too weak and the law was never enforced. Nineteen hundred and twenty-seven witnessed the last gasp of free enterprise in Germany, when a commission was appointed to study the monopoly problem. It produced nearly 40 volumes of reports, but there were no practical results. The cartelization had gone too far. German business regimentation drifted to its logical conclusion. The power of these cartels over the lives of the people became so great that political organization commensurate with the private economic power of these cartels was necessary. The disappearance of free enterprise in Germany certainly helped to pave the way for Hitler. Let us resolve to protect it here.

I am not suggesting that we will necessarily go along the same path in this country. The experience of one country is seldom duplicated in another, because of the many variations in the institutions and traditions of different countries. But I am saying that world-wide tendencies are the same and that, in general, where free competition disappears, political democracy goes with it. I therefore urge upon the House that in these trying times we do not overlook the urgent importance of enforcing the antitrust laws so that free enterprise may survive the present crisis and our economic system may emerge all the stronger, because our defense program and the consumers were amply protected against the dangers, restrictions, and privations resulting from private monopolistic control.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CONNERY). Under a previous special order of the House, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ANDERSON], is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, 2 days ago I charged on this floor that Harry Bridges, alien Communist, conspired to commit the crime of murder and plotted sabotage of one of our largest liners in the Panama Canal. At that time I stated sworn evidence on file with the United States Department of Justice more than amply proved these charges.

Alien Harry Bridges, public enemy No. 1, has issued a statement in which he does not deny the charges but says, "If the F. B. I. has it, its phony and they framed it." Such a cowardly utterance is typical of this Communist thug who seeks to Sovietize America and destroy the American merchant marine. He does not deny the charges but slanders the Department of Justice and centers his attack once more upon the United States Government.

The fact that Harry Bridges is an alien should be sufficient to cause his immediate deportation. But in addition he is a Communist, a conspirator to commit the crime of murder and a plotter of sabotage. I stated to the membership of this House that the Department of Justice was in possession of evidence proving these facts. Since Mr. Bridges denies his true character, the following transcript of the evidence from official file No. 65–4632 United States Department of Justice will perhaps refresh his memory. In that file is a sworn statement of one Walter Carney, former bodyguard for Harry Bridges and Joe Curran of the national maritime union. That statement is as follows:

I, Walter Carney, was instructed by Tommie Ray to get five other gorillas as bodyguards and to arm them at the arsenal on 13th Street. Bill Cunningham, John Marciano, and three others were armed with tommy guns and revolvers and met Harry Bridges at the Newark Airport and escorted him to the Victoria Hotel on 7th Avenue, New York City.

I, Walter Carney, was with Bridges every day and night for the length of his stay in the East. I went with Bridges to Roy Hudson's house in the village before Harry Bridges attended the International Longshoremen's Association conference on Fourteenth Street and Eighth Avenue in Joe Ryan's office where Joe Ryan, president of the I. L. A. and the executive board expelled Bridges from the International Local because of his communistic tactics and Communist Party policies.

On the return to the Victoria Hotel where Roy Hudson, George Mink, Curran, Tommie Ray, and the "Countess" and Hudson went over discussions of what happened at the meeting of Joe Ryan and Bridges, Bridges, Hudson, and Mink agreed that Joe Ryan must be eliminated from the picture in order that the waterfront section of the Communist Party could control the longshoremen. Hudson and Mink agreed to pay $5,000 to me, Walter Carney, to get somebody to do it. I, in turn, got Earl Ashton, Tommie Donohue, and three other members whose names I cannot recall at this time. A car was provided by Tommie Ray for the "goon squad." Pictures were taken of Joe Ryan's house where he resided on Twentieth Street, between Ninth and Tenth Avenues, on the uptown side. Pictures were taken of the Guardian Angel Church on Twentieth Street and Eleventh Avenue where Ryan had a habit of stopping every morning at 9 o'clock to enter the church and the office building on Fourteenth Street. The nineteenth floor of the building was "cased." Later, Earl Ashton and Tommie Donohue were caught after "sticking up" Joe Murphy an A. F. of L. seamen's organizer in the Plymouth Hotel and stealing his records and personal belongings. Upon asking payment for the return of the records Earl Ashton and Tommie Donohue were caught by the New York City police and were sentenced to the State prison. Frederick (Blackie) Meers, now an organizer of the national maritime union, and Tommie Ray, head of the waterfront section of the Communist Party, were paying these men out of the Communist Party funds and also union funds. To the best of my knowledge, Tommie Donohue is receiving between $5 and $10 a week since his incarceration in Sing Sing 3 years ago. This is being paid by the national maritime union.

The killing of Joe Ryan was not carried out because of the fact that Tommie Donohue and Earl Ashton were placed in prison.

For many years I served in the office of prosecuting attorney of the largest county in Missouri. In all my experience I have never observed a clearer, plainer, and more conclusive case of conspiracy to commit murder.

The second charge I made 2 days ago was that Harry Bridges was a coconspirator to sabotage a ship in the Panama Canal. Here is the transcript of the evidence on this point from the files of the United States Department of Justice.

In October 1936 Curran came to the west coast, to San Francisco, while I was on the steamship Pennsylvania in San Francisco, to see Harry Bridges and the Communist Party for action aboard the Pennsylvania. We went to the Lincoln Hotel on Market Street, where Curran was residing. Besides me, the following members of the union were also present:

Louis Gale, "Cokey" Louie, Mosher, Canaday, Red Szmerick, Eddie Gordon, Vandeross, and Lynn, who were the Communist Party faction members aboard the steamship Pennsylvania. At that conference in the Hotel Lincoln we were given orders to leave the steamship Pennsylvania in the middle of the Panama Canal near Culebra Cut; disconnecting steering gears; foul propellors with steel wire; set fire to the double bottoms; put powdered graphite into the lubricating system; and put out of commission the telegraph announcer that led to the bridge.

After the caucus in the Lincoln Hotel we left to go to 121 Haight Street, San Francisco, which is the Communist Party headquarters in San Francisco. There we met Harry Bridges; Schmidt, who was president of the I. L. A., San Francisco; and Jeffers, who was publicity man for the I. L. A.; Shoemaker; Hallings; and George Mink. All of these men are members of the Communist Party meeting at the Communist headquarters in San Francisco, where Curran outlined the strategy to the party assembled or what was to be done with the steamship Pennsylvania when the seamen's strike was called on the east coast. All agreed, and the ship's committee, through Barney Lynch—who has just been elected secretary-treasurer of the steward's department of the National Maritime Union—was to be notified by radio and cablegram in Panama, and who at that time was a member of the crew of the steamship Pennsylvania as a union delegate in the steward's department. On the overnight stay in Balboa, Panama, after the bananas were loaded through the cargo port, Roy Gale, Louie Canaday, Eddie Gordon—who is presently agent of the National Maritime Union in Habana, Cuba, and head of the Pan-American Conference of Seamen—were to use the extra length of cable for fouling the propellers, place two crowbars in the steering room aft to foul the steering engine. We did let fuel oil seep into the double bottoms from the fuel tanks that are located there. This fuel oil did flow into the bilges throughout the bowels of the ship and the oil was to be set afire. The valves were closed later as we proceeded out of the Panama Canal, as no word was received in Panama and as the strike was not called. In making transit through the Canal we did not take any action to sabotage the ship as orders were only to sabotage in case the strike was called. We did not get word that a strike was called until we reached Habana, Cuba.

The above quotation is from the official files of the United States Department of Justice containing a transcript of sworn testimony of Walter Carney, former bodyguard for Harry Bridges.

Mr. Speaker, what influence can this alien Communist, Harry Bridges, have in this Government of ours that enables him to go on unmolested with his plots and conspiracies to destroy this country and the ideals for which it stands? It is our duty to ascertain at once, without further delay, where and with whom this influence exists. How can we build our defense system when alien Communists imperil our vital defense links and sovietize the American merchant marine?

That Bridges is a Communist and that his Communist cohorts seek to hoist the red flag over every ship of our merchant marine and eventually over this very Capitol, is more than amply proved by the fact that many of the crack organizers and high officials of the National Maritime Union are honor graduates of the "red" Annapolis which is maintained and operated near West Point to train American seamen to sovietize American ships. One of the most effective organizers of the National Maritime Union is Hays Jones, noted Communist author, who has written the Mein Kampf or textbook for sovietizing the American merchant marine entitled "In a Soviet America, American Seamen and Longshoremen Under the Red Flag." I have here in my hand a photostatic copy of that book. The principles set forth in it are being effectively carried out throughout the American merchant marine this very day. I ask unanimous consent to conclude my remarks by inserting the text of that pamphlet at this point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ANDERSON]?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

SEAMEN AND LONGSHOREMEN UNDER THE "RED" FLAG

(By Hays Jones)

The seamen and longshoremen of capitalist America have reached the point where they have decided that the Government, the shipowners, and the reactionary labor leaders are not their salvation. The seamen's act has been torn to shreds by amendments and court decisions till the seamen are now reduced to serfdom. They live in miserable fo'c'sles, and work long hours of overtime without pay because "if you don't like it there's plenty on the beach that will." And the bread lines on the beach get longer week by week. The longshoremen, 85 percent unemployed, living on 1 or 2 days' work a month, or living on home relief, are affected by the same "if you don't like it there's plenty that do" and endure the worst sort of speed-up.

The seamen and longshoremen are turning directly to struggle for the things they want. The west-coast strike gave them a first taste of the victory they have power to win. The "dirtiest strike you ever saw," as one International Seamen's Union official called it, the east-coast strike that the I. S. U. officials sold out, at least brought recognition of the I. S. U. and precipitated the drive for one union of all seamen. In spite of its reactionary officials the seamen are going to make that union a weapon to fight the shipowners.

But more and more longshoremen and seamen, and other workers suffering the same desperate conditions ashore, are wondering whether capitalism can ever give them decent houses to live in and enough food to eat—or even jobs to do again. Their eyes turn to the growing achievements of the Soviet Union and they wonder what would Soviet America be like?

We can look at what the Soviet workers and farmers have done to old Russia, the most backward of the great nations. We can estimate from this what a Soviet system in this country, starting from the high level of American capitalism, with its millions of skilled workers and technicians, its huge industrial plant and its tremendous natural resources, could achieve for the American workers in general, and for the marine workers in particular.

Not only that, but we had better take a good look and decide what we want, or our rulers will decide what they want and we will be looking at the Soviet Union through the prison bars of a Fascist dictatorship. Scores of different Fascist groups are now bidding for the favor of the ruling class and getting ready to drive us into that prison.

CAPITALIST AMERICA TODAY

Our present rulers, the capitalists of America, have made such a howling success of building this country (with our labor) that they now have to tear down what we have built for them. They have made such a "success" of production that the means of production lie rusting and rotting all around us—and we go hungry.

They built so many ships in 1917–19 that hundreds of them never went to sea, and half of them are now tied up forever. The research laboratories, which were the "pride" of American capitalism, pant for funds to carry on their researches. The source of supplies is dried up. Capitalist America sees no sense in hunting new processes when it can't make profits on what it already knows.

They have built such a great corps of skilled workers that skilled workers by the million lose their skill in unemployment and misery, while the world goes hungry for the goods they should produce. Recently an American engineering society broadcast its alarm over the fact that the apprenticeship system had broken down, and that since 1929 practically no apprentices had been trained. Capitalism could not use them immediately and turned them loose to wander the road or live in city flophouses. Not only apprentices but hundreds of thousands of young men and women from colleges and universities found their skill useless, thanks to the great "success" of capitalism.

Capitalism has had to quit training workers for the mechanical industries. This is not true in the merchant marine. The Government and shipowners together have taken advantage of unwanted youth ashore to "train" as many youngsters as possible for this war industry. But the training they receive is pitiful. They learn to steer, after a fashion, how to scrub decks or wash paint, and how to swing a paintbrush passably, but they do not learn the finer points of seamanship.

They learn enough to be profitably exploited, and that's as far as capitalism cares to teach them. Each capitalist depends on the others to train his workers for him. We will have a shortage of skilled labor in all trades when the workers get tired of starving among idle plants and plowed-under crops and decide to go to work building a classless America.

MARINE INDUSTRY

Restoring what capitalism has destroyed or allowed to fall into decay will be a big job in the marine industry. Piers, docks, ships, and gear alike are slowly going to pot. The capitalist shipowners say they need 150,000 tons of new shipping yearly for replacement of the United States merchant marine. Yet for the last 3 years they have built hardly 15,000 tons a year—actually 10,000 tons in 1933; 24,000 in 1934. Other countries are doing little better.

A large part of America's tonnage is antiquated, jerry-built ships, slapped together in the last war; bad hull design, hasty workmanship, and low speeds that rule them out of present-day competition, even with the generous "subsidies" the Government gives them for carrying a few copies of the Saturday Evening Post to outlying ports. They will lie rotting in a hundred harbors around our coasts until war puts a premium on anything that has half a chance of floating a cargo of death across the seas.

Almost no vessels have been built in the last 20 years without Government loans, at ridiculously low interest rates (as low as 1 percent), and even then private companies hesitate to build ships. Those that have been built are all "naval auxiliaries" and would not have been built if the Government had not paid their owners to build and operate them, as a war measure. Today, the Navy Department is trying to get more ships—for private owners, but paid for with public money—to have more auxiliary ships for war "needs." Private initiative will never build the ships needed for peaceful transportation.

Soviet America would not allow its seamen to sail on the ships that private companies have built, without much remodeling. The pride of the American merchant marine, the luxury ships Manhattan and Washington, are not fit for seamen to live and work on. The luxury is all on A and B decks. The seamen live down on G deck, with salt spray whipping past eternally sealed portholes, and wet socks and shirts emitting an aura of stale sweat and weariness that the artificial ventilating system never quite dispels. Soviet American seamen will move up several decks to light and air.

These things we know because the Soviet Government bought many old ships from capitalist countries to replace the ships destroyed and stolen by white guards and foreign interventionists on their retreat before the "red" army and peasant partisans. The Soviet shipyards remodeled these ships as best they could. When possible, they put all quarters midships. When they couldn't they cut big skylights in the poop deck and enlarged crews' quarters at the expense of cargo space till they could house the crew two in a room, with decent messrooms, washrooms, and clubrooms for music, games, and reading.

ABOARD A SOVIET AMERICAN SHIP

The new vessels built by the Soviet Union offer us a sample of what a workers' government would do to American ships, and any seaman who sees the Soviet ships which enter American ports knows the immeasurable superiority of conditions aboard Soviet ships.

The Soviet American seaman would go aboard his ship with a light suitcase, carrying his shoregoing gear—shirts, razor, toothbrush, and such like trifles, and maybe a book or two. He would find his working gear aboard the ship, furnished by the company—the workers' government administration of water transport. He would not have to worry about buying a new set of oilskins or seaboots, dungarees, or a heavy coat to stand watch in. He would not have the experience, common to practically all seamen, of facing a new job after a long period of unemployment "schooner rigged"—with nothing but the shoes, shirt, and dungaree pants he stood up in to get the job. The workers' government would supply—as the government of the Soviet Union does today—the work clothing he needs for the voyage, whether to the Arctic or the Tropics. And when he left the ship he'd carry the same light suitcase ashore.

The Soviet American seaman would go down to his union—the industrial union of all water transport workers—where his name was registered for his turn at sea when he left his last ship, and when his name came up, he would get the job. If he didn't want that ship, he could turn it down, or the next one. The third he would have to take, or lose his place on the list. He would go aboard the ship, put his dress clothes in the locker in his room—not a "fo'c'sle" in the capitalist sense of the word—and make himself at home. Working clothes would be kept in lockers outside the seamen's rooms. Over his berth, not a two-decker bunk, he would have a reading lamp, so he could have light when his roommate wanted darkness. And in one corner of the room would be a writing desk.

Soviet ships have these conveniences today for every member of the crew. The relatively greater development of industry in America could give us even more, if transport and industry as a whole were run by the workers to serve the needs of the people, not by bosses for their private benefit.

The Soviet American seaman would not have a clothesline draped around his bunk, with socks, shirt, towel, and dungarees drying on it in wet weather and spreading tuberculosis. Soviet ships today have bath, laundry, and drying rooms, heated by steam from the boilers or from the motor exhaust.

The Soviet American seaman would find his mess room a large, well-decorated room, with one corner divided off—a "red corner" for entertainment, study, and recreational reading. A piano and other musical instruments would be part of the furnishings—furnished out of the cultural funds assessed by the government on the industry and administered by the union. A radio would allow him to tune in the latest stuff from ashore.

SOVIET CREW HAS VOICE IN MANAGEMENT OF SHIP

The seaman of Soviet America will have a voice in the running of the ship. As in the Soviet Union today, the ship will be part of the national industrial plan. But it will have its own work plan, too, a plan covering the year and the season, estimating the cargo-ton-miles it has to make, and the work the crew is to do. Fulfillment of that plan will be the crew's task or "norm" of production, and any production over that will be "overtime" and will draw extra wages at higher wage rates. Overtime work for "safety of the ship" will be paid for. Capitalist America's seamen donate such overtime "for safety of the ship" to the company, without pay, and the reactionary officials of the International Seamen's Union approve. Only those agents of the shipowners can understand why the seaman should risk his uninsurable (under capitalism) life, to save the shipowner's insured vessel and cargo, and not be paid for it.

But this plan is not simply handed down to the skipper and mate as "orders" to be whipped out of the crew by speed-up methods. The crew of a Soviet vessel is part owner of the vessel, and of everything else in the Soviet land. They have an "interest" in their vessel, and take part in laying the plans for its operation. If the crew thinks the plan gives them too much work to do, they say so, and propose changes. If they think they can do more, they propose a "counterplan." The plans and any counterplans made are discussed by the whole crew and decisions made. If the counterplan goes through, and the crew does more work than the plan calls for, they get more wages from it.

The navigation of the vessel, and discipline on watch and in emergencies, are in the hands of the captain as executive officer of the vessel. The social discipline of the crew, discipline on the watch below, is the province of the crew itself. The ship's committee, elected by the crew, handles all such matters, subject to the will of the crew. Even the skipper is responsible to this committee of workers.

The ship's committee and the mate are responsible for the work being done. The ship's committee is responsible for the social life aboard the vessel. And that is an organized social life, not the chance association of a mixed group as on capitalist vessels.

Capitalist shipowners find it an advantage to have the crew fighting among themselves. It prevents organization and a struggle for better conditions. Since better conditions are the aim of Soviet society, organization and solidarity aboard ship are fostered, not blocked.

The ship's committee has many functions. It decides, for example, what the menus shall be. It purchases stores for the voyage, and makes purchases in foreign ports. It has the general problems of discipline to settle, and it decides what members of the crew shall go ashore to study in the schools that the workers' government provides. Those who go to these schools continue to get the same monthly wages that they were earning while working on the ship. All these powers, of course, are subject to the final decision of the crew and the union. On Soviet ships it is impossible for the skipper or the mate to fire a seaman without the consent of the crew. But the crew and the union can fire a captain, and have been known to do so.

NO UNEMPLOYMENT

The Soviet American seaman, as the workers in all industries of Soviet America, will have no fear of unemployment. To begin with, his wages would be guaranteed by the social insurance fund provided by industry and the government. But—as the experience of the Soviet Union has shown—once the working class got down to the task of running industry on a Socialist basis, while the working hours would be cut down, the industries would expand at a rate never known under capitalism, and unemployment would be completely eliminated. This will be true also of the shipping industry.

Soviet America would need more ships than capitalist America can use. Large sections of our present population cannot afford to eat even the lowly banana, which comes to this country by ship. Not many of us ride on rubber, another tropical product. A thousand other tropical and foreign foods and industrial products would increase the need for shipping, and the unparalleled richness of the American Continent would bring those things into the diet and daily life of America's population as soon as we scrapped the profit system and set up a Soviet America. Workers would be spread over industry according to the need for them, on the basis of the national industrial plan, worked out by the National Planning Commission, to get the greatest benefit to all the population with the least effort. American shipyards would be busy for many years building these ships and replacing old ones as they wore out.

Passenger traffic would increase too. A hundred thousand Americans can afford a vacation in Europe under capitalist conditions. Wealthy parasites ride de luxe, sometimes taking a suite of three or four rooms for a man, his wife or lady friend, a maid, and a dog. And sometimes the chauffeur goes along third-class. Parsons, school teachers, and librarians, who get a vacation longer than most and a salary big enough to make the trip in "respectable" second-class cabins, go to see museums, make a "tour" of the accepted wonders of the Old World, and return to slave and save 7 years for another "cultural" tour.

The European immigrant saves for years to be able to return for a few weeks to his native village on a reduced-rate excursion to show his friends how well (or badly) he's done in America. And a horde of college students, whose middle-class parents can afford it, take a vacation in Europe.

The 59-cent dollar kicked a hole in this class of tourist trade and in the other lower groups as well. Capitalism still has some body blows to deal these middle-class groups and professionals who used to spend a vacation in Europe "cheaper than we could live in America." They will be living "cheaper" in America than they ever thought they could live anywhere—as Chicago's school teachers found when the city neglected to pay them for about 18 months.

Soviet America will make a great change in the traveling public. Shock brigaders—workers who have done better than average work in building Socialist society—will get vacations and tours in other Soviet lands as rewards. Workers will be sent on delegations, as capitalist representatives travel today. Sick workers will be sent to special climates. Workers will go to school in other lands, as the sons of the rich do today.

Soviet America will require a larger passenger service than capitalist America does. But there will be no class distinctions. Speed, comfort, and reliability will be the tests of a ship—not the luxury of de luxe travel while the passengers in third class live worse than seamen on Soviet ships today, both in food and quarters. And a different atmosphere will exist on the ships. Segregation of the crew from passengers does not exist on Soviet ships. A cordial equality exists, and passengers and crew off watch help each other with entertainment and are social equals.

Soviet America will need more seamen and longshoremen. The greater bulk of cargo, and of ships, will make America's harbors look as they did at the only time capitalism ever found it profitable to apply its full productive capacity—during the war that slaughtered 26,000,000 workers and maimed millions more for the glory of the profits.

Soviet ships will fulfill another slogan of the militant trade-unionists and the Communist Party of today: "Full crews and full longshore gangs." The Soviet American seaman will stand watch on deck with at least two other seamen. Ships will not run without a lookout while the watch is changed, or while the wheel is being relieved—or while the man on lookout goes below for a cup of coffee.

"EVERY FACTORY A SCHOOL"—SOVIET SLOGAN

One of the first results of any social revolution is the release of a tremendous sense of power and capacity among the oppressed who destroy their oppressors' power. The capitalists experienced it in their revolutions in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries, when they destroyed feudalism. The workers of the Soviet Union have experienced it since October 1917. This sense of power raises the workers' desire for knowledge and study. The capacities of the workers have shown an amazing growth in the Soviet Union. Every factory, every collective or state farm, has become a school. And from these schools the workers and peasants rise to the technical schools, institutes, and universities that have increased a hundredfold. Nine hundred and fifty-eight thousand workers went to factory schools and seven hundred and ninety-seven thousand went to technical schools in the Soviet Union in 1933. Four hundred and sixty-nine thousand attended universities and engineering schools. This, out of a population that was almost 90 percent illiterate in 1917.

Every Soviet ship is a school. The seamen study seamanship and navigation. But their studies branch out into all spheres of learning. They study politics and economics, literature, the arts and sciences. And the crew itself decides which of its members shall go ashore to the institutions of higher learning.

The instructors in these shipboard schools are those who have already had training in the workers' schools ashore. The officers and engineers pass on their knowledge, and this is no danger to them as it is on capitalist American ships. The expanding system of Soviet industry can absorb a far higher grade of technical ability than capitalism has any use for. American officers, under capitalism, feel that if they train a man they are only training someone to jockey them out of their jobs. Soviet workers have no fear of losing their jobs. The working class, in power, needs all the intelligence and knowledge its members can acquire.

The Soviet American seaman will not find an A. M. M. L. A. (American Merchant Marine Library Association) book box filled with slushy love stories, mystery thrillers, religious tracts, and lives of famous murderers who wore gold braid—the cast-off rubbish of private libraries ashore or books bought with an eye to the interests of the shipowners by a library association which is financed by the shipowners to keep the workers' minds undefiled with any thought of the class struggle. Technical books, science texts, literature, the latest fiction, and magazines would be in the ship's library, put there by the cultural department of the union and paid for from the social funds required of every industry by the Soviet Government.

SOVIET AMERICAN SEAMEN IN FOREIGN PORTS

The United States will not go Soviet alone. We do not expect it to be the next, nor yet the last, country to abandon the miseries of capitalism for the growth and security of socialism and communism. But when America's workers clear away the rubbish of capitalist barbarism they will sweep a large part of the world into the path of revolution and carry it with them. Especially, the colonial and semicolonial possessions of American capitalism in Central and South America will go along with the giant of the north into socialism and communism, as the petty capitalism of those countries has followed the capitalist giant for generations.

Therefore, when the Soviet American seaman goes into Soviet Rosario for a cargo of flaxseed, or into Soviet Para for a consignment of rubber, he will find the International Seamen's Club there to entertain him, offer him the latest information about the workers' world, and provide him food and drinks at prices not conditioned by "what you are drunk enough to pay" but actually by the cost of the goods consumed.

When he returns to his home port he will go ashore to his union hall and Marine Workers' Club, or to the International Seamen's Club, to find rest and recreation, to renew old friendships, see the shows, and read about the latest successes of Soviet America, or of the workers' achievements in other countries.

There will be no place in Soviet America for Mme. Ropeyarn's 10-cent stews. At present practically every port has its "holy racket," a combination church, social club, hotel, and restaurant business and spy agency for the shipowners. These institutions masquerade under religious names (thus saving taxes) and do hold church services occasionally. But the reverend gentlemen who wax fat in their management do not depend on contributions from their parishioners. Very few seamen ever go to church. And those who do do not contribute. These institutions live on charity—begged by the hundreds of thousands of dollars yearly, on the pretense that they provide religion, a shore home for seamen, and care for destitute seamen.

Most famous of these is the 15-story hotel and restaurant, pool room, and saloon that calls itself the Seamen's Church Institute of New York. It was founded in 1844 as a floating church—a church on a raft. But today the only floating thing about it is the mortgage that floats unpaid in a treasury of $1,135,000. Junius Spencer Morgan plays the stock market with this treasury, while the mortgage is a swell talking point for huge contributions.

Shipowners are large contributors to these religious shore communities. The gentlemen who exploit the destitution of unemployed seamen know how to get in right with those who exploit seamen on the ships. They spy on the seamen, fight against union organization, and ship scabs when the shipowner needs them. They maintain a corps of mission mice who draw special favors from the relief (the Government puts these persons in charge of seamen's relief, quite conscious of their graft and their connection with the shipowners) in the form of an extra 10-cent meal ticket, to stool on honest seamen. They also maintain a corps of muscle men to beat and browbeat seamen into accepting whatever treatment the holy racket chooses to give them. Of course, these places have political drag. Police protection makes them the safest racket in the world.

The Government and shipowners have made these places almost unavoidable to the seamen. The S. C. I. post office is the only place where a seaman can hope to get his mail. It holds mail for 6 months, while other post offices return mail after a week or 10 days. These "holy rackets" are the only large centers where seamen can gather on the beach, except union halls. And they are modern structures, with comfortable reading rooms, while seamen's union halls, in capitalist America, are generally old loft buildings, poorly lighted and heated—the best the working class can afford.

The workers' government in the Soviet Union took over princes' palaces to make clubs for its own and for foreign seamen. Soviet America would wipe out these "holy rackets." If a seaman wanted to go to church, he could go to church. But the church would not be allowed to pose as a "club" and be a spying agency for capitalist enemies of the workers.

The club in the Soviet Union is the seaman's home ashore. Even for married men the club is the center round which the social life of the workers revolves. It is no seamen's church institute. It is run by the seamen themselves, through their union, and its contents and development depend on the seamen themselves. Funds for it come from the government's social-insurance funds levied against the enterprises.

SOCIAL INSURANCE

Our Soviet seaman will not have to worry about sickness. The workers' government in Soviet America, like the Soviet Union today, will guarantee the worker against sickness, death, injury, and old age. The government requires every industry to turn over a definite percentage of its income to the social-insurance funds, to care for the workers in mischance. The union administers these funds for its members.

No Shyster Si will hang over the Soviet American seaman's sickbed, seeking a retainer from a man struck down by sickness or accident at sea. Shysters can't get by in Soviet lands. The Soviet American seaman will stay on the pay roll till well and able to work again. When he is sick, his union will send him to the hospital. When he needs rest or convalescent care, rest homes in the country or mountains will be his, maintained by the union out of the social-insurance funds.

The union cooperative will be his "store" instead of "tailors" and "slop chests," and there he can buy the best of everything in the market and the union will see that all his rights are observed. The union will draw its collective agreement yearly with the "management," which will not be a greedy capitalist profit grabber, but the workers' administration in charge of water transport.

The Soviet American seaman will get a month's vacation every year, with pay, and, as the industrial power of the workers expands, he will find his vacation period getting longer, keeping pace with the growth of production.

Since the life of the seaman takes him out of social contacts his status will vary from that of shore workers. His day may remain eight hours long after other workers in Soviet America have been cut to four a day. But he will be repaid for this by a longer vacation to be spent ashore, and by an earlier retiring age, so that his term of service to the working class will equal that of workers ashore.

Seamen in capitalist America are, by the very nature of their calling, denied the "right" to vote. Few of them ever establish "residence" anywhere, and if they do, chances are against them being ashore to cast a vote on election day. But Soviet seamen have not only the right to vote, but special arrangements are made for them to vote, and to serve on the Soviets. Thus, for the first time, the seaman becomes a real citizen, in the workers' republic. The Soviet seaman's vote is cast right on the job, and if the job happens to be out at sea, he casts his vote, and it is recorded. If a seaman is elected to the Soviet (elections are by industry, not district) he attends the Soviet meetings. The seaman takes part in the government of the community for the first time.

LONGSHOREMEN AND HARBOR WORKERS TODAY AND IN SOVIET AMERICA

Thus far we have said nothing about longshoremen and harbor workers. The reason is that they are, or can be considered, shore workers. Bargemen today lead desolate lives, even in the best barges. They are on call 24 hours a day, hardly daring to go ashore to buy groceries. For this they draw (in New York) the amazing sum of $60 a month if their barges are loaded. "Light" the bargeman gets either nothing at all or a dollar a day. And he is expected to live on that and keep the barge in repair and be on the job 24 hours a day.

Soviet America will put bargemen on shifts. There will not be hundreds of barges laid up, waiting for loads. The number of barges will be figured to meet the known needs, thanks to social planning. It will not depend on some capitalist's estimate that he, too, can get profits out of hauling sand and gravel, coal, flour, or grain, in spite of a 200-percent oversupply of barges in the harbor.

The towboat men will live ashore, too, and work in regular shifts. Longshoremen, of course, do not live on the water. They load and unload ships, taking goods from warehouse to ship's hold or from ship to warehouse. They live ashore and their working conditions are shore conditions, with serious modifications.

There are about 250,000 longshoremen in the United States today, and 85 percent of them are unemployed. The rest slave under conditions of intolerable speed-up and impossible hours of labor.

Under capitalism the longshoreman is a "casual" laborer. He never knows when he is going to have a job. He rises early in the morning to make a 7 o'clock "shape-up" on the street in front of a dock. Maybe he is picked to work. Maybe not. If not, he hangs around a poolroom or lunch counter, waiting for the next ship to come in, for he may be "shaped up" again at almost any hour of the day till late at night—and then perchance will be kept waiting, payless, for several hours before turning to.

When he thinks there is no more chance for work that day he can go back to the poolroom or back to his miserable dwelling in the slums. Longshore wages are "high"—95 cents an hour in New York for a 44-hour week. On the west coast the 1934 strike won the 6-hour day, 30-hour week. But they still have to fight to prevent the shipowners working all sorts of schemes to gyp them out of overtime pay and destroy other working conditions.

The west coast longshoremen have the gang-steward system, which tries to control the size of drafts (amount of cargo in one sling) and prevent other forms of speed-up. But the Government "arbitrator" has ruled that the longshoremen must do whatever the boss tells them to do—an effort to get 8 hours' work out of them in 6.

The longshoremen on the west coast fought for a system of rotary hiring direct through their union halls, controlled by committees elected from their own ranks. Their own reactionary officials opposed this effort to give every man an even break on the work. The shipowners, of course, opposed it bitterly, and the Government supported them with tear gas, guns, and militia, and with the sell-out machinery of the New Deal.

The shipowners wanted their star-gang system, whereby some men worked 70 to 80 hours a week and others got no work at all. These star gangs were made up of men who could stand a hard pace and keep it up. When one slowed down, out he went on the dump heap and fresh blood came in. Any refusal to drive at top speed sent you back to the beach, jobless. The star-gang system is a blacklist system. Yet the Government wanted to put it in effect everywhere under a "decasualization" plan.

In spite of the "high" wages, the longshoreman makes little. On the west coast the average was less than $12 a week. In eastern ports they average even less. And a vicious system of "kick-backs" has been developed by dock bosses and some union delegates. Those were the things the west coast fought against.

Longshoremen labor under the most dangerous conditions. The incidence of accident is higher among marine workers than in any other trade except structural iron working. The average longshoreman is married, and these desperate conditions bear with bitter force on his wife and children.

Soviet America would cut the longshoreman's day to 6 hours immediately, as hazardous work, and soon to 4 hours. We know from the Soviet Union that longshoremen can have good conditions.

They do not "shape up" on Soviet docks. The longshoreman has a regular job, like any other worker. He comes to work on a shift, puts in his day's work, and goes back to his wife and family.

Ships can't keep as close schedule as railroads, and even railroads are sometimes delayed by storm or unforeseen events. So the Soviet longshoreman has a warm waiting room to spend his time in when he has to wait. This is also a dressing room. The Soviet American longshoreman can have it even better, because the economic level of America will allow better conditions immediately the profit grabbers have been removed and the workers' state takes possession.

The Soviet American longshoreman will keep his working clothes in locker rooms at the docks. And the "company," the workers' government administration for water transport, will supply the working clothes. They will go to the port laundry regularly and be kept in condition by special workers. The longshoreman will not have to ride home damp with sweat from a day in the hold of a vessel, in Soviet New York subways. He will change clothes and take a shower in the port locker rooms and put on dry, clean clothes.

MODERN MACHINERY FOR SOVIET LONGSHOREMEN

Today few American docks are equipped with up-to-date shore machinery. Speed-up machines you will find on many docks—gas or electric jitneys that throw thousands of truckers out of work. But shore cranes, to handle cargo easily, are scarce. Europe goes in heavy for them. Small, crowded ports make them necessary. Here we depend on the ship's gear to discharge or load, except for a few floating cranes to handle extreme lifts.

Leningrad's lumber docks are the best mechanized docks in the world. But Leningrad's longshoremen benefit by those mechanical arms. They are extra arms for the workers, making work easier. Mechanical loaders have cut down labor till it is almost a simple matter of turning planks over. Heavy lifts do not exist for men. Such mechanical assistants can be applied in all countries, but in capitalist America every improvement in machinery has meant fewer men and harder work on the job.

Soviet America would soon apply the many mechanical principles that are already known but not applied because they are unprofitable. What cuts labor strain is profitable to the ruling working class. What gets more work out of the workers for less pay is profitable to the ruling capitalists. With present appliances we could reduce working hours in American industry to 4 a day. Soviet America would do it and make those 4 hours useful labor instead of slavery for starvation wages.

The Soviet American longshoreman would never fear unemployment. If there was no work for him, his wages would go on anyway. He would have a guaranteed yearly minimum wage. If for any reason he could no longer do longshore work, but was capable of lighter tasks, he would be given proper training for another job, and—the job. Soviet America would guarantee every worker the right to work and to live. Work would be based on what the working class needs, not on what it is profitable to our masters to have produced. We would be our own masters in Soviet America.

The longshoreman would eat his meals in the dock "factory kitchen" in the club, or other public restaurant. Or if he and his wife wanted to, they could cook and eat at home. But he would probably be as sensible as Soviet workers are today and prefer his factory kitchen, for it would remove the mass of drudgery connected with single family cooking.

HEALTH PROTECTION

This restaurant on the docks would be run by his union—the same union to which seamen, barge men, and towboat men belong. For industry is the basis of the union in Soviet America, not craft. Soviet America will do away with unsafe conditions; but nothing can ever remove all risks from a job of moving heavy loads, especially through the air. There will therefore be first-aid stations on the docks which will be run by the union.

The first-aid station on the docks will be connected with the network of hospitals, rest homes, and vacation homes for marine workers, maintained by the union and the Soviet Government. These will also be part of the whole system of rest and cure resorts of the Workers' Commissariat of Health and Recreation. Mountain, sea, and summer resorts will miss their old-time voluptuousness, dependent on the whims and fancies of the over-wealthy ruling class of capitalist America. These resorts will belong to the workers. Their health and sport facilities will be expanded a hundredfold to care for the greater demands of the workers.

The Soviet American longshoreman will not finish up his day's work ready to drop from exhaustion. He will be fresh for sport and leisure at the end of his shift on the docks or in the hold of a vessel. He will find, at his workers' club, all facilities for sport and leisure.

Game clubs, singing and dramatic groups would form in every clubhouse; the working class develops great eagerness for self-expression when revolution rips the yoke of capitalist slavery from its neck. Billiards, pool, chess, checkers, gymnasium equipment, movies, and other sports will provide indoor recreation. Tennis courts, football, baseball, and other fields would belong to the workers. You would not have public tennis courts at $1 an hour in Soviet America. All sports would be encouraged.

In capitalist America, few workers' children have a real chance to play. Especially city children, such as longshoremen's. Their playground is the city street, and you can't play many games there. If they have a club, it is a club with strings on it—tied to a political or religious kite.

In Soviet America sports would swell to tremendous proportions. One hundred and fifty thousand marched in the sports parade in Moscow on International Youth Day, 1934. As many more marched in the Leningrad parade, and all over the Soviet Union sports parades showed the way workers have taken to their new-found opportunities to have and enjoy healthful recreation.

Two and a half million "ready for labor and defense." "Ready" means physically trained for the struggle for a socialist society in industry or on the field of battle if capitalism attacks the workers' land. To be "ready for labor and defense" means you can run, swim, row, skate, jump, carry weights, shoot, and throw a hand grenade, well. When the danger of an attack from hostile capitalism dies out, in a Soviet worker's world, the hand grenade will be replaced with a more peaceable object. Today, "ready to defend" is just as important as "ready to work." In looking at Soviet America with the help of these present Soviet institutions, we can see an army of young workers, men and women, strong, healthy, building a happy life in the sports fields, factories, and homes of Soviet America.

The Soviet longshoreman will not fear destitution caused by unemployment, sickness, or injury. His children will be guarded against the loss of their father by the guaranty the Soviet Government gives every child—schooling, nourishment, proper doctor's care, and training for life in a classless Socialist society.

EQUALITY FOR NEGRO WORKERS

Negroes and colonials (Filipinos and Spanish-Americans) have always been a considerable part of the American marine industry, but they have always suffered from discrimination. Oppressors have always resorted to the policy of bringing division into the ranks of the exploited—for the benefit of the exploiters. Certain lines, running to the West Indies or the Tropics, man their ships with Negro deck hands or Filipinos, but the quartermasters and officers are whites. Otherwise Negroes especially, and to some extent Filipinos and Spanish-Americans, are restricted to jobs in the steward's department, or to the fireroom. Spanish-Americans were numerous when ships burned coal, but they are becoming fewer as oil supplants coal.

Negroes and colonials are kept down with a purpose. When the Barber Line cut wages for firemen to $37.50 a month, the Filipino seamen struck. The Barber Line announced that it was going to "give white men a chance." But as soon as the wage cut had been put across the white man's chance disappeared. The company went back to Filipinos "for efficiency in the Tropics." The seamen understand that pretty well now, and opposition to all sorts of discrimination is growing. But the leaders of the International Seamen's Union of America still foster it. Andrew Furuseth, the 86-year-old president of the I. S. U., was dragged to the platform at the A. F. of L. convention in October 1934, to defend the principle of discrimination. We quote from the official report of the convention:

"Delegate FURUSETH. Speaking for the seamen, I want to tell you something on this question that has a very serious bearing on it. The International Seamen's Union of North America has never for one moment made any distinction, but when we accept the colored man and put him on absolute equality with the white man as to wages and conditions, we create thereby a situation whereby the employers accept the white man only. We could get no employment for our colored workers if we had to pay the same wages and give them the same conditions as the white workers. The result was that the colored men, as a whole, left our organization and accepted employment with less wages."

Therefore Furuseth was willing to accept less wages for them, so long as they paid their dues. Furuseth and his fellow officials agreed too thoroughly with the whole scheme of racial discrimination to put up a fight against it. This is in line with the policy of the reactionary leaders of the I. S. U. of collaborating with the shipowners, instead of the policy of class struggle in the interests of the workers. This is the reason why the I. S. U. under the old leadership has won so little for the seamen in the 50 years of its existence.

It will take a battling rank and file to unseat these relics of a lost century and make the I. S. U. a fighting organization of all the seamen. The I. S. U. formerly classed "Asiatics and scabs" together. But the rank and file have a clearer understanding of that problem now, and know that helping the shipowners to split the seamen into groups of foreign-born, Negro, Filipino, Chinese, on different levels only helps the shipowner keep wages down and conditions rotten. A short time ago, this prejudice extended even to South European seamen, and the I. S. U. officials tried and still try to arouse every kind of race and national prejudice.

"Formerly," said ancient Andy Furuseth, "the American merchant marine was Christian and Nordic. Now we must make it Christian, Nordic, and American." But this old fossil can't perpetrate that. In spite of him and his coofficials, the I. S. U. is broadening its membership base, not narrowing it.

The Negro longshoreman always has the dirty end of the stick. In most east coast ports there are both Negro and white longshoremen. Generally they are "Jim Crowed" and, curiously enough, the part of the coast where they are not "Jim Crowed" is the coast of Texas. In Philadelphia the Negro longshoremen get such dusty work as discharging licorice root, fertilizer, and other rotten jobs. But the companies also work a "checkerboard" system, dividing the ship between Negro and white gangs so they can use each to drive the other harder. The understanding of this is the beginning of working-class wisdom.

As we said, Negro and white longshoremen are not divided in some Texas ports. There the position of "inferiority" is reserved for Mexicans, and the shipowners get the same slave-driving results from dividing the workers.

Negro longshoremen were first imported to San Francisco to scab in the 1919 strike. The shipowners' efforts to use them in the 1934 strike were spiked by the decision—inspired by class-conscious rank-and-file leaders—to admit Negroes on a basis of equality to the International Longshoremen's Association. There were no Negro scabs in the west coast strike in 1934. As long as this policy is maintained, its benefits will be seen.

In the Soviet Union, of course, such divisions of race, color, and nationality are unknown. There are 150 nationalities in the Soviet Union, and half a dozen races. Race prejudice does not divide these races, however. All workers are equal. In their own districts, each of these nationalities is the ruling power. National cultures are encouraged. But they all work together without friction. Usbeks, Tatars, Great Russians, Mongols, and Ukrainians all work together in the same factory, on the same deck harmoniously—and Czarist Russia was known as the prison house of nationalities.

When the economic rivalry between the national and racial groups disappears, race prejudice disappears with it. Prejudice is fostered and exaggerated by the capitalists to use one nationality against the other. It is done in every capitalist nation. But the Soviet Union has no need to keep wages down, therefore it has no need for these divisions. Unity to raise living standards is the desire there, and unity is raising living standards for all.

When America goes Soviet, the Negro workers will be freed of hampering oppression. They will be encouraged to develop their own culture. In the large section known as the black belt, a Negro Autonomous Socialist Soviet Republic would grow as the minority races of the Soviet Union now have their autonomous republics, and Negro national culture would develop and racial and national oppression be wiped out. They will be guaranteed a full right to any job on an equal basis with all other members of the workers' society. They will have full economic, political, and social equality.

They will never attain full equality until the workers take control and ownership, because capitalism depends on divisions in the workers' ranks to keep itself in power.

CULTURAL ADVANCEMENT

The Marine Workers Industrial Union in Soviet America will have close connections with the Government schools where the workers' children prepare themselves for life in the future society. The longshoreman would not, as today, be called in by a haughty principal because little Johnny had been a bad boy. The pioneer organization little Johnny belonged to would take care of that, supervised by the teachers and the parents' committee. The longshoreman, through his union, would keep a sharp eye on what little Johnny and his boy and girl schoolfellows learned in school. The union would be patron of the schools, kindergartens, and day nurseries where longshoremen's and seamen's children went to school. And as the child grew older the workers in their trade-unions would take an active part in his education—teaching practical courses.

The Soviet school is not a painful period in which the child is cooped up to learn how to read and write well enough to be a useful wage slave. It is not a place where he learns some very doubtful history and some very erroneous civics. It is not a place where the child learns about public utilities out of books by authors bought and paid for by the barons of gas, electricity, and traction.

The Soviet school is the road to life for the child of the worker. He learns the "three R's" all right. But he learns (what is infinitely more important) how to be a citizen of the classless society. He learns a new social code.

Capitalist society teaches the child that those who do the least work deserve the greatest rewards. He learns it by hearing bankers and politicians, rich parasites, praised in the newspapers, books, and schools. He learns it by seeing those who do the least—the society of capitalism and the degenerate nobility of feudalism—praised and given high honor on all occasions.

Our Soviet American school child would go to a different kind of school. He would see scientists honored, and inventors, who lightened the burdens of society, instead of seeing them robbed of their inventions to make a banker's fortune. He would see the head of his father's union honored at functions where his "shock brigadier" father or big brother or sister was also honored by a triumphant working class. He would learn that "he who does not work does not deserve to eat"; that labor is the passport to all not birth or riches.

And part of his training in school would be the use of tools—all tools. He would start using tools almost as soon as he started to talk. In Soviet kindergartens, children clip out airplanes, tractors, locomotives—not fairies. A little later, the child begins to use the hammer, saw, screwdriver. Later he graduates to machine tools, and when he is through school he has mastered, not just a trade, but the essential skill in handling tools that makes a master craftsman in all trades.

Thereafter he would enter industry on a part-time basis. Half his day he would work in the factory, gaining practical knowledge. The other half he would apply to study of the theory in back of his work, till he became an expert. If he proved a good student and a good worker, he would be sent to the higher technical school and to the other institutions of learning. The union in the factory would decide his worth as a member of society—and that would be a big factor in deciding whether he graduated or not.

The Soviet Union began with a shortage of almost everything. Czarist Russia was a land of paupers, except for the few who lorded over the laboring masses. A good part of the industry which had been developed was destroyed by the White Guard and interventionist troops during the long years of the civil war when the dispossessed exploiters tried to wrest power from the triumphant workers' revolution.

There was a terrific shortage of trained forces in every field of education. In spite of that, the workers of the Soviet Union have established and maintained a compulsory 7 years' schooling for every child. In many parts of the Soviet Union the compulsory period has been increased to 10 years. It will increase again and again, as Socialist construction builds up the resources of the workers' land.

Soviet America will start on a far higher economic level. Soviet America will have the trained workers, the factories, the mills, and electric plants that the Soviet Union today is struggling to acquire; that is, we will, unless we allow capitalism deliberately to destroy, because it cannot profit from, the vast economic forces of America today. Capitalism is allowing billions of dollars' worth of our past labor, in plant and structure and training, to go to waste today, because it cannot use it. Our Soviet American school children will have the privilege of going to school freely till they are full-grown men, to get a completed knowledge that their working-class fathers under capitalism are denied. And our longshoreman, bargeman, towboatman, or seaman will have a family and a home for the first time in history. It will not be a hovel, but well-lighted, well-heated, well-ventilated quarters such as even the rich do not have today. The experiments in housing that capitalist America finds too expensive, the workers' government of Soviet America can put in mass production, simply because we will produce these quality goods for the mass of the working class, not individual samples for the few who now own and dominate the capitalist world.

The longshoreman's wife will be a worker, too, and so will the seaman's. Woman will not be the slave of the stewpot and scrubbing board in Soviet America. Neither will she be the slave of her husband. No real freedom is possible under economic dependence. The Soviet American woman will be sure of her standing. Through her working life in Soviet America she can always have a job if she wants to and be able to care for herself, regardless of a husband. And when she is unable to work, because of sickness, child bearing, or old age, she has the guaranty of the Government's social-insurance system to protect her from hunger, cold, and uncertainty. She has the freedom of her own life to live, dependent on no man, an efficient and effective member of society.

WORKERS' PART IN GOVERNMENT

The United States, we are told, is a democracy. The worker and the capitalist have equal rights. But what democracy and equality is there between J. P. Morgan and a seaman? Morgan, the multimillionaire, and a few other big capitalists own and control the finances and the industrial system of the country. If they choose, they have the power and the legal right to shut down the industries and to sentence millions of workers to starvation. The workers on the other hand, have no say at all in the running of the industries. A worker has not the slightest say even in the factory, mine, or ship where he works—if he has a job.

If workers don't like their wages, and exert their economic power in a strike—the law is against them. If the boss chooses to starve the workers because he cannot exploit them profitably—the law is with him, against the workers, and will massacre workers by the score before it will allow any violation of his property rights. The workers' right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness is a grim farce when men are denied the right to eat or produce food, clothing, and shelter for themselves and their families.

In the Soviet Union, under the proletarian dictatorship, the dispossessed capitalist has no voice at all. The workers have all the say in the running of the industries. The law and the State power is with the workers, against their enemies. They deal none too gently with the enemies who attempt to sabotage the industries, which are operated solely with the view of serving the needs of the toiling people.

Under capitalist democracy the worker has the right to vote—but that right is denied to millions, and to increasing millions. His own political parties, working class parties with working class platforms, meet with every sort of trickery, repression, and actual violence to keep them off the ballot. Where they make the ballot—a blank wall of silence in the capitalist press, when that press is not slandering and misrepresenting their position. The capitalist parties, on the other hand, or a party which pretends to speak for the workers but serves against the workers' interests, gets space freely and eagerly from the owners of the press—who are part of the capitalist class.

We workers lack the finances, the press, the radio, all the means of "making public opinion" against capitalist robbery. All these propaganda weapons are owned by the capitalist class and used against the workers. As, for instance, Mr. Hearst misquotes Lenin, and refuses to correct the misquotation. It is deliberate. Mr. Hearst lies about the Soviet Union and tells lies that even his own reporters prove are lies. But he tells them over and over again, with a perfect capitalist disregard for decency, honesty, truth. Against this we have the feeble pennies of the working class, and our small press, which we must strain every nerve to keep alive.

In the Soviet Union, the papers, movies, radio, meeting halls, and political control are in the workers' hands. The workers' opinions are important; they are printed in the papers. The remnants of capitalist groups (still capitalist in sympathy but no longer exploiters of labor) have nothing to say. They cannot vote, they cannot hold office, they cannot own anything. The Soviet workers nominate and elect their political representatives, right on the ship, the dock, or right in their factory. And it is their factory, because the workers own it.

The American seaman is a ward of the Government. He has no vote, because he has no established residence. His most familiar contacts with the law are the United States shipping commissioner, the customs collector, and the "bull" on the beat. And they are all his enemies.

The shipping commissioner is supposed to enforce the law, but he always makes his first stop in the skipper's cabin for a drink or a cigar, and things flow smoothly as he logs (fines) this man and that for minor infractions of the rules. But when a seaman wants to protest a violation he must take it to the United States marshal and wait 6 or 8 months for it to come to trial—and finance the case.

The customs officer searches his bag to see if he has committed the heinous offense of bringing in a "contraband" bottle of spirits, or tried to eke out his miserable wages with a few trifles bought abroad.

The "bull" on the beat slugs him when he takes a drop too much, and protects the gang of pimps, prostitutes, and sharks who try to rob the sailor ashore. Since the seaman doesn't drink regularly, it doesn't take much to edge him, and a little slug of knockout drops always helps the shore enemy. The cop, of course, knows the gang on the beach, and the chances are even they play together.

The seaman comes still closer to the real significance of government and politics in his struggle for better wages and working conditions. Then the "law" is squarely lined up against him. You don't have to tell the seaman that the Government is the executive committee of the capitalist class. He sees clearly that politics is a class struggle for power. Maybe that combination of circumstances explains why seamen have always been militants, and are always found in the vanguard of working-class revolution.

Longshoremen, of course, face politics more familiarly. But politics dissolves itself into the class struggle for them, too. The "political club" and the graft of municipal jobs and contracts and Federal "patronage" are just a way of paying the capitalists' henchmen for their job of baiting the masses and keeping the capitalists in power.

The reactionary leaders of the American Federation of Labor have an important part to play in capitalist politics. The "nonpolitical" policy of the A. F. of L. has brought sweet plums to the officials of that organization. They have "rewarded friends and punished enemies" very effectively for themselves. Joseph P. Ryan, of the I. L. A., plays in close with whatever administration is in power in New York. Nationally he is a Democrat. Victor Olander, of the I. S. U., plays Democratic politics very successfully in Illinois, and Paul Scharrenburg plays the "rock-ribbed Republican" so successfully in California that he has held political office for 12 of the 18 years that Tom Mooney has been in prison. They all have contributed mightily to keeping capitalism in the saddle. So have Billy Green, Ed. McGrady, and Matthew Woll.

Under capitalist democracy the worker is lied to, tricked, and persuaded—and, if need be, intimidated—to vote for capitalist politicians, who make many promises and repudiate them all when they get elected to the seats of power and graft. Every capitalist politician does it. Compare Roosevelt's promises with Roosevelt's acts. He promised unemployment insurance; he gives us the Wagner-Lewis bill which leaves entirely out in the cold the 17,000,000 now unemployed. He promised "sound money"; he gives us a 40-percent wage cut by inflation. He promised to "drive the money changers out of the temple" and 46 more grabbers made million-dollar incomes in the first year of the New Deal. He promised us "greater purchasing power," and wages have gone down, prices up. He promised us the right to organize, and under section 7A 45 percent of the industrial workers were forced into company unions.

Capitalist politics—regardless of capitalist party—is the technique of keeping the workers in subjection. While they can do it peacefully they keep up the mask of democracy. When they can't put that across any longer, because they have to smash demonstrations for relief, and strikes for higher wages and shorter hours, because the workers can no longer be deluded, and begin to fight for power, they drop the mask and show the real face—the open face of capitalist dictatorship.

Working-class politics under capitalism, on the other hand, is the struggle to wrest power and ownership of the means of production from the capitalists for the workers. Whether in elections or fighting criminal syndicalism laws and other antiworker laws in the courts, or in strikes for higher wages and better conditions, the worker finds the State power pitted against him. He is fighting a political battle. Every force of the law is against him. Sometimes it is an N. R. A. Mediation Board. Sometimes an injunction court, sometimes the police or troops with tear gas, bayonets, bullets, and even artillery. Sometimes it is the illegal vigilante mob defending the right of the capitalist to exploit the workers. It may take some time but the capitalists will drive this lesson home in this and every capitalist country.

In America we have a dictatorship of the plutocracy disguised as a democracy. In the Soviet Union we have the dictatorship of the proletariat—a dictatorship for the exploiters, a democracy for the toiling masses.

Stalin writes, in his Foundations of Leninism:

"Democracy under the capitalist system is capitalist democracy, the democracy of the exploiting minority based upon the restriction of the right of the exploited majority and directed against this majority. Only under the dictatorship of the proletariat is real freedom for the exploited and real participation in the administration of the country by the proletarians and peasants possible. Under the dictatorship of the proletariat democracy is proletarian democracy—the democracy of the exploited majority based upon the restriction of the rights of the exploiting minority and directed against this minority."

State power in the hands of the working class is a necessary and mighty weapon in the struggle against class enemies, within and without the country, in the struggle for greater well-being of the toiling masses, to build industry and agriculture on a Socialist basis, and to wipe out classes entirely—to achieve the classless Socialist society.

It was not enough to overthrow the capitalist class. Even after that the capitalists would not give up. It was therefore necessary for the working class to establish its state power, the dictatorship of the proletariat, in order to suppress the resistance of the capitalists, to uproot the vestiges of capitalism and capitalist influence, and the influence of capitalist ideas, in order to build socialism.

Lenin said that upon the overthrow of the capitalist class "Its resistance is increased tenfold," among other reasons, because of the strength of its international connections and the strength of international capital. This was proved correct by the experience of the Russian revolution.

The white guard and interventionist troops tried to smash the workers' revolution, to restore the capitalist power. International capital tried to defeat the revolution by an economic blockade and boycott. Spies and saboteurs tried and still try to wreck the triumphant march of the workers and peasants to the classless society and production for use—the goal of the working class. In spite of these enemies, within and without, the toiling masses, under the dictatorship of the proletariat, and led by the Communist Party, have marched steadfast toward the goal.

The collective-farm campaign, weaning the peasants from their little individually tilled strips of land, to work cooperatively and with machinery on huge areas of land, was the final crushing blow to capitalist tendencies in the Soviet Union. The great gain in producton—more bushels of wheat per acre and per man—proved to the peasants that the Bolsheviks were right. The peasant is on the road to socialism, to becoming a worker in an "agricultural factory," instead of a half-starved landowner. He has become a builder of socialism, side by side with the worker in the industries.

This process has now gone so far that the recent Congress of Soviets, the supreme governing body, admitted the peasants as full partners in the dictatorship of the proletariat—the workers' government. Thus, while capitalist democracy (the disguished rule of the capitalist class) is shrinking, the base of democracy in the Soviet Union—the democracy of the toiling masses—gets broader.

CRISIS OF THE CAPITALIST SYSTEM

This sounds good but you won't get it for nothing. The woes of the American worker today all come from one thing and one thing only. That is private ownership of the land and the means of production.

Land, mills, mines, factories, railroads, and ships—everything in America has a private owner, although the owner is most often a corporation for anything larger than a 3-acre farm.

The workers, on the other hand, own practically nothing, certainly not the tools of production. Their "tools" are the machines, factories, mines, railroads, ships. With these tools they produce all the good things of earth. Without these tools they are helpless. They have nothing but the bare force of their arms and brains. They "know how to do" things; but they have no power to do them until the owner of the means of production gives them a job.

The owner of these tools, the capitalist, refuses to hire the worker to produce goods unless the owner can sell the goods the worker makes, and get more money for them than it cost him to pay the worker his wages, pay for raw materials, and pay for the replacement of the tools and machines used in producing goods.

When the worker works, he makes for the owner many times over what he "earns" for himself in wages. This surplus value produced by the worker is split many ways. Part goes as rent to the landlord, part goes as interest to the bondholder, part goes as profit to the shareholder, and part goes as wages of management to financial wizards who sit in offices and figure out how to cut wages.

The owner uses part of this surplus to enjoy life—to eat in swell cafes, live in swank apartment houses, with strings of servants, cars and yachts, to go to theaters, and take trips to Florida, or to Europe when America bores him. But he makes more than that. Part of what the worker makes for him he turns back into industry, as an investment. In other words, he buys more tools that other workers have made for other bosses. And then he makes surplus value on more workers operating those tools. He produces nothing himself; merely buys the workers' labor power and puts it to work on tools that are themselves the stored-up labor power of other workers.

The bosses keep piling up more and more, till they have such a surplus of goods that they can't sell any more—because all the workers can't buy back the total of what all workers produce. Goods begin to pile up in the warehouses. The bosses cut down production, lay off workers. We get unemployment, people of all classes begin to feel uncertain about their income and cut down on their expenditures, there is a further shrinking in the demand for goods. The bosses get panic stricken, lay off more workers, close down factories. An industrial crisis, or depression as the capitalist spokesmen prefer to call it, is on.

Capitalism has always periodically gone through such unavoidable crises. To the working class, they meant unemployment and starvation, and a break-down of health and morale, for millions.

In former times, the capitalists managed to scramble out of the crises because capitalism was still on the up-grade, because it was operating in an expanding market. Capitalism still had the world to conquer. Capitalist nations were grabbing colonies and establishing spheres of influence in backward, undeveloped countries, to exploit as markets and fields for investment. North America was still a land of unlimited opportunity. It was being rapidly settled with immigrants from Europe. Its agricultural population was increasing. New industries were rising, old industries were expanding—offering a market for what is known as capital goods.

By the beginning of this century, however, the world was pretty well divided up. Germany came late on the scene of industrial development but forged ahead rapidly. It could not find any free countries to conquer for her surplus goods. She started taking England's foreign markets away from her by selling goods cheaper. But she also wanted colonies and spheres of influence to secure sources of raw materials and a market for her industrial goods and for investments. So the Kaiser started talking about a place in the sun. This struggle for markets brought on the World War.

Across the Atlantic, United States imperialism was also reaching out for markets. It had grabbed Cuba and the Philippines. It was pushing ahead in South America. It was fighting for the "open door" in China, that is, for an equal opportunity with the other imperialist powers to exploit the Chinese market.

The outbreak of the war in 1914 was its golden opportunity. It started taking over the foreign markets that Germany and England were too busy to think about. It had an unprecedented period of "prosperity" and expansion, supplying murder implements to the battling armies of the belligerents and selling manufactured goods on its own terms in other foreign countries. The United States became a first-rate world power.

American imperialism finally entered actively into the war, to save Morgan's loans to the Allies, to have a say and to protect its interests when the time came to "settle up" in the peace treaties.

The World War was a struggle for a redivision of the colonies and the world market. But it did not solve the difficulties of world capitalism. On the contrary, it upset the stability of the capitalist world, it brought a general crisis of the whole capitalist system. It brought the first wave of proletarian revolution in Europe and roused the oppressed peoples in the colonial and semicolonial countries.

When the first wave of proletarian revolution receded, in 1921–23, world capitalism got a breathing spell. But it did not regain its old strength and stability. It had lost one-sixth of the world to the proletarian revolution—the Soviet Union, whose very existence and growing strength on the basis of Socialist construction are a standing challenge to capitalism. It was unable to restore the pre-war standard of living to the toiling masses in Europe and the colonial world, and was forced to place a heavy taxation burden on them in the interests of the war-loans bondholders. This sharpened class conflicts in the imperialist countries and intensified the struggles of the colonial peoples. Nor were the antagonisms between the imperialist powers solved. They had to make a truce because they were not ready to fight the issues out. But actually the old antagonisms became sharper, and new antagonisms came to the fore. Thus world capitalism regained stability only as compared with the immediate post-war period.

Capitalism proceeded to lick its wounds. The European capitalist countries, especially Germany, went ahead adapting and restoring industry to a peacetime basis, with new equipment and to a considerable extent with American credits. This temporary demand for industrial equipment, a byproduct of the World War, helped to start the wheels going. American capitalism, after deflating labor and labor costs in 1920–21, began to take care of those needs of the home market that were neglected during the war. There was a boom in the construction and household goods industries. The home market was jerked up through installment-plan sales, by swallowing future earnings—to the benefit particularly of the automobile industry. And American capitalism was still the big figure in the world market.

As European capitalism was restoring its industries and getting back into the world markets, the capitalists of Europe and America were taking steps to undersell each other by cutting the cost of production. They did this by installing more efficient, labor-saving machinery and by the new American methods—the conveyor system, efficiency, speed-up, stretch-out. The bosses use a nicer name for this—rationalization.

It was all very beautiful (on the surface) and it went on for a few years. World capitalism developed its productive forces and productive capacity to a much higher level than ever before. American industry boomed, American capitalism seemed to be in full bloom. To be sure, it had some suspicious spots—like the agricultural crisis, the sick, overexpanded coal and textile industries, the technological unemployment—but the medicine men of American capitalism refused to look too closely at these spots.

Its spokesmen, and the reformist labor leaders, claimed that it had found the way to permanent prosperity, to a chicken in every pot. Socialist leaders in Europe helped to put over rationalization and spoke of the American methods, Ford methods, as the way to raise the standard of living of the masses, the way to reform capitalism.

They forgot that capitalism did not solve its basic difficulty arising from the private ownership of the means of production, that the capitalists, by appropriating the surplus value squeezed out of the workers, restrict the market. They forgot that world capitalism was expanding its productive capacity in the face of the shrinking post-war market. That the very means the capitalists used in the struggle for the shrunken world market made it shrink more, intensified the internal and international antagonisms.

It was a fool's paradise, and it could not last. The bottom blew out in 1929. The economic crisis that followed swept the capitalist world with unexampled ferocity, affecting every corner of world capitalism, the imperialist countries and colonial countries, industry and agriculture; upsetting the credit and finance structure; undermining the international connections of world capitalism sharpening the class antagonisms within the imperialist countries, sharpening the international antagonisms.

Never had capitalism known such mass unemployment, such impoverishment of the toiling masses of city and country. The capitalists of all countries searched feverishly for new markets, and they further reduced the markets by cutting wages and raising the burden of taxes on the masses. They all agreed at international conferences that it was necessary to lift the tariff barriers, and kept on building tariff walls, higher and higher. Even England abandoned its traditional free-trade policy. And while they were raising the tariff walls to protect their home markets, they fought for foreign markets and subsidized exports to the point of developing dumping into a general system.

They said it was necessary to reduce and to balance the governmental budgets, and the governmental deficits keep rising to new heights. They were anxious to eliminate all factors of uncertainty and instability—all uncertainty disturbs business—and they were forced to abandon the gold standard, to resort to inflation and devaluation. This had its silver lining—it served as a weapon both to lower the standard of living of the masses and in the struggle for foreign markets.

They wanted to allay discontent, they preached "class peace," and they did everything to intensify discontent and to sharpen the class struggle. Never—save during the period of the first wave of proletarian revolution—had capitalism faced such mass struggles. Bitterly fought strikes; determined mass struggles of the unemployed; mutinies in the British fleet, in the Dutch fleet, in the Chilean fleet; revolution in Spain, revolution in Cuba; the spread of Soviet rule in China. They were forced to discard the "safety valve" of illusion-producing democracy, and to clamp down on the toiling masses the lid of open, terrorist dictatorship of finance capital—the Fascist regime—in Germany, Austria, etc. And in the other capitalist countries they are paving the way for fascism, resorting more and more to Fascist measures and fostering Fascist movements.

For many years they talked of disarmament and reduction of armaments. And we now have the greatest peacetime armies, the largest peacetime war appropriations, and the armaments race is more feverish than ever. Japan has upset the imperialist truce in the Far East, attacking China and seizing Manchuria—as a base for a future attack on the Soviet Union. In Europe, the mad dogs of German fascism are straining at the leash, anxious to loose a war on the Soviet Union, or a new world war.

American imperialism is rushing its war preparations. It is hurrying the building up of its Navy. It is strengthening the Army and the National Guard. Behind a screen of "taking profits out of war" it is preparing the mobilization of industry for war purposes—and conscription of the workers at low wages. It has by far the largest peacetime war budget in history. On top of this, it is using a good part of the unemployment-relief funds for war preparations, including training of the youth for future cannon fodder in the C. C. C. camps.

The stability of the capitalist world is a thing of the past. The crisis of the capitalist system is deeper than ever.

Every capitalist nation is in the same straits, and every capitalist nation tries to get out by the same method—breaking down the standards of living of the workers, and fighting for an advantage over the enemy in foreign trade. Eventually it all leads to another war—another redistribution of the world—with millions killed, and another and deeper phase of the same crisis of capitalism at its end.

All our miseries result from the private ownership of the machines and the land.

That is why we are unemployed. That is why we always risk losing our jobs—because we have produced too much. That is why the laboratories that find new processes and new products cannot continue to find new wonders for the human race. That is why machines cannot continue to turn out the goods we need to live. That is why wheat and corn, cotton and cattle are destroyed while millions of workers starve. And that is why we face the danger of being sent off to some foreign land to attack enemies whose working class population are as innocent of any crime against us as we American workers are of any crime against them. It is because the capitalist class owns the tools of production and the land, and will not let us use them unless that use is profitable to them.

If you examine capitalist thought today (like Roosevelt's campaign promises and his "revolution"), you will see that the capitalists, as well as the workers, know their system is all wrong. But every step their governments take to correct it is a step to fasten their criminal system of exploitation faster to our necks; to guarantee their profits, no matter how bad they have to make the workers' lives.

This is what capitalist government is for—to guarantee to the owning class its possession of the means of production, to regulate somewhat the struggle of the ruling class among themselves over the division of the loot, and to crush the struggles of the exploited class against this ownership and exploitation by any means necessary.

MENACE OF FASCISM

American workers today are examining the conditions of social life—politics—in a critical way they never did before. There is a growing conviction that the workers cannot live under private ownership of the means of production, and the workers are determined to live. The capitalists know this. They know that the workers are rapidly coming to the conclusion that capitalism is the enemy. That conclusion is a threat to capitalism. And the capitalists are desperate in their efforts to head it off.

In Italy there was one fascist movement. In Germany there was one. In the United States there are a hundred different fascist movements, all trying to head off this anticapitalist conviction in the workers' minds. There are veterans' movements by the score. Social justice movements by the dozen, "religious" movements in squads, and just plain rackets done up in fancy shirts by the hundred. And there's the old Ku Klux Klan, hating Negroes, Jews, Catholics, workers, and ready to rip the sheets off the bed and ride again in defense of private property.

All these "shirt and social justice" movements are basically one effort to save capitalism. All of them pretend to correct injustice but all of them stand ready to shed workers' blood for the sacred rights of private property—to defend capitalist ownership against the workers' right to live, just as Hitler and Mussolini have done.

The capitalists have given these anticapitalist movements a big hand. Many of them started their careers in Wall Street offices, like McGuire's efforts to get General Butler to lead half a million veterans to Washington to "support the President" by putting him out of office and putting "our man" in his place. That scheme was concocted by a Mr. Clark, heir to the Singer millions that lost one factory and 5,000 wealth-producing slaves when the Russian workers kicked out capitalism. Mr. Clark said he was willing to spend half his $30,000,000 to save the other half.

Father Cox, of the Catholic Church, also tried (like the Singer gang) to take over the bonus expeditionary force. He put on a blue shirt and tried to organize gangs to disrupt workers' meetings in Pittsburgh, and tried to get the miners back to work for less than the county relief gave them when unemployed.

"The church will make up the difference" said the Fascist Father. That ended Father Cox as a mass leader. Holy church had to look for someone else to lead the masses to social justice and to fascism. The church supports Hitler, although it has minor differences with the Nazis; the church supports Mussolini; the church supports Schusschnigg in Austria, and supported Dollfuss—the murderer of a thousand workers—before him. The church supports Pilsudski in Poland. In fact, fascism is the form of government the church approves most. It can always play ball with a Fascist.

The church turned to the Little Flower, whose scab church desecrates the suburbs of Detroit—Father Coughlin. This scabby little flower blares forth on a broadcast that costs $30,000 a week for social justice, including the right to exploit workers. He is supported by an inflationist clique that cleaned up (including a quarter million for the Little Flower) in Roosevelt's Dollar Devaluation and Silver Purchase Acts. One of his Committee for the Nation is Rumley, who went to jail as a German agent during the war. Rumley is still "agenting" for Hitler.

Another who wants to "save the Nation" is that great American and sterling patriot, Al Capone: "Bolshevism is knocking at our door," says Al. "We can't afford to let it in. We have got to organize ourselves against it and put our shoulders together and hold fast. We must keep America whole and safe and unspoiled. We must keep the worker away from 'red' literature and 'red' ruses; we must see that his mind remains healthy." Otherwise, Al Capone might have to go to work. A pleasant picture: Al Capone, shoulder to shoulder with the Singer millions, holy church, and a three-K nightgown, defending "America." Hearst somehow would fit better with Capone. Gen. Smedley D. Butler exposed a few of these shirt-tail movements to save capitalism, and some "veteran" movements financed by Wall Street. Butler, apparently, didn't think they'd come across. Every one of these movements is "patriotic," bloodthirsty, capitalistic, and a racket. But if one catches hold, it won't be a racket. The big boys will grab it and make it the Government of the United States, as Fritz Thyssen made Hitler's racket the "Third Reich."

Still another "anticapitalist" move to save capitalism is Huey Long's "share the wealth" plan, which has gained much support from middle-class groups in the South. Huey wants to limit exploitation to $50,000,000 per exploiter. But he wants to guarantee the right to exploit with every piece of artillery in the State of Louisiana—and especially Huey's right to graft on every piece of business in the State. We know what becomes of these "limitations" on capitalism when they have served the purpose of putting their inventor into power. They are ignored.

All Fascist schemes are alike. They denounce the "abuses of capitalism" and attack some special phase of capitalism. Huey attacks "great wealth," Father Coughlin denounces "bankers' money," while Morgan, Vanderlip, and Rockefeller—all bankers—support him. But they all defend private property in the means of production; they all defend the right of ownership to rob the workers. And when they get power, they all use their gangsters, their police, their army, to keep the worker working for the private owner, and to drive wages lower.

Fascism attacks the abuses of capitalism with words, but it attacks the workers with knives, guns, and gas, like the Christian Father Coughlin, who wants to shoot Communists himself.

Fascism always has the police with it. Fascists kill workers, the police arrest other workers for the crime. Fascism never won power for itself. In Italy, Germany, Austria, the very state power that was supposed to be fighting against fascism handed it power. Fascists talk of their revolution, of their march on Rome, or Berlin. Mussolini marched on Rome in a sleeping car, with a special police escort.

And every Fascist movement that has won power has had the aid of labor leaders who cried to the workers: "Don't fight back, be law-abiding; the state will protect our rights," while Fascist gangsters were shooting, knifing, breaking up workers' meetings. These labor leaders, like the International Seamen's Union leaders in this country, talk about working with the employer for mutual benefits. They always shout for democracy while they rule their unions with dictatorial power, and prevent any fight against the Fascists. They teach the workers to retreat inch by inch, foot by foot, before aggression, because they want to be law-abiding, democratic, peaceful, till the workers are in full flight before Fascist assaults. Fascism never dares seize power till these leaders have paved the way by breaking the ranks of labor and spreading their poisonous doctrine that the workers are too weak, "we can't win." And when fascism strikes its final blow these leaders and their hapless followers are alike victims of Fascist terror.

In Germany, Austria, and Italy the Social-Democratic leaders (like our A. F. of L. and Socialist Party leaders) took this "peaceful road to socialism" line, defending capitalism, even when they controlled the government. They delayed, excused, apologized for, and supported capitalism until fascism had built up its army of thugs, and till the workers had become demoralized and unprepared to fight.

Austria's labor leaders did the same thing. And when the workers finally revolted at this hesitating leadership and took arms, their Socialist leaders had got them to retreat so far they couldn't fight a winning battle. The fight against fascism came 2 years too late in Austria, and the Socialist leaders made the workers delay. Now they use this defeat to claim that the workers can't win—typical cowardice.

In Germany, when the Communist Party and the "red" opposition in the trade unions were clamoring for all the workers to get together in a united front to fight Hitler's Nazis, the Socialist leaders refused. They said, "Stick to constitutional methods," while every legal right of the workers was being destroyed, with the police watching and defending the Fascist murderers.

Fascism came to Italy, Germany, Poland, Austria. It destroyed the labor unions, it made the factory owner the leader of his workers, and took away every right ever won by the workers. It cut wages, lengthened hours, and drove the unemployed, and especially the young men, into slave camps to work for nothing. Fascism murdered thousands of workers and imprisoned hundreds of thousands. All the social justice and socialism, all the Fascist promises to the workers, were forgotten. The poor dupes who insisted on socializing the banks were murdered. Fascism showed its true face—the last desperate effort of the capitalist owners of the means of production to enslave and drive down the workers.

The French workers, on the other hand, refused to listen to these legalistic leaders who urged them to yield, not to fight back. The workers formed a united front—got together regardless of their political opinions, and fought back. The Fascist drive of February 6, 1934, was smashed on this rock of working-class unity. The Fascists are not completely crushed in France. They will try again, and as French finance capitalists get more desperate, fascism will get more support. But the united power of the French workers can, and will, smash every attempt, and go forward to Soviet France, instead of to Fascist France, if the workers keep their fighting united front.

Now, fascism is trying to get a grip on America's workers. The capitalist class in America is desperate, and getting more so. They see its great industrial structure—which we built for them—tottering, unable to support the workers, unable to produce profits for them. Their solution for this situation is more crushing burdens on the workers; through the trickery and maneuvering of N. R. A. codes [1] with their company union and anti-working-class trends, and through open union smashing, and Fascist domination of the workers by their employers.

THE REVOLUTIONARY WAY OUT

The workers refuse to accept this enslavement. On every hand you see the workers fighting back—in spite of their leaders, who smoke an opium peace pipe and accept defeat time after time without putting up a fight.

The workers have put up a fight, and will continue to put up a fight, in spite of their leaders' treacherous connivance with the employers and the Roosevelt government.

Toledo, Minneapolis, San Francisco, and the textile strike last year—all show the battling spirit of American labor. And it is fitting that in San Francisco the battle of the marine workers, against the enslaving code and enslaving agreement their self-styled leaders accepted, should have risen to the highest point in that year of struggle against the slavery of capitalism. In New York longshoremen and teamsters, connected with the marine industry, built on the west coast gains and struck in 1935—a purely political strike—against an infamous injunction that tries to smash their unions and forbids them to organize.

It is fitting, because in all history the marine workers have been in the forefront of revolutionary struggle among the workers. The sailors of Cattaro, the sailors of Cuxhaven, the sailors of the "Aurora," and the sailors of the Black Sea Fleet, all stand out as heroes of the working class battles against oppression, for political power. America's seamen and longshoremen will stand out in that battle too, in spite of every attempt of fascism to break their militant spirit.

The fundamental thing about fascism is that it preserves capitalism, the private ownership of the land and the means of production, the owner's right to profit on the labor of the workers. That means less to eat, less to wear, less of everything for the worker. Besides, any political rights the worker may have go.

Reformists say "fight fascism legally," and so pave the way to fascism. Fascism is the illegal attack of the owners, backed by their political state power, to crush the workers' resistance to slavery. Reformists talk about "a peaceful road to socialism" when every force of the capitalists is leveled at the worker's throat, to smash him down into the prison of fascism, the concentration camps and forced labor.

It would be very nice if the workers could get ownership of the means of production and a Soviet America without a struggle. It would be very nice if the capitalists would say, "Boys, we have tried to run this damned thing and we can't. You take it, and we will go to work tomorrow in a ditch, doing the only honest labor we are able to do." But they won't.

A dying class never dies peacefully. Today, the capitalist class is fighting a last-ditch fight to stay alive and exploit the workers. The capitalist class sees machines rotting, sees workers losing their skill, sees workers dying of starvation. Does it give up? Does it modify its exploitation? Does it cut profits and raise wages, so the workers can buy back what they have produced, and so start industry working again? It does not.

It arms its Fascist gangs. It crushes demonstrations with police clubs. It smashes strikes with gas and gun, club and bayonet. Fifty workers murdered on the picket line last year; concentration camps for strikers in Georgia; Bloody Thursday on Rincon Hill in San Francisco; the "Battle of Pier 41" in Seattle; and workers' halls smashed and looted by Fascist mobs in every coast city (while police protected the Fascists); these are the owners' answer to our cry for the right to live.

Workers lost in wages, in buying power, in living conditions last year. But 46 new parasites made million-dollar incomes through concentration of ownership. Capitalism had a "year of recovery"—recovery of profits at the expense of the workers. The capitalist class is a dying class, but it does not die easily. The workers will have to put it out of its misery or it will make misery more acute with slavery, war, and destruction of all life and civilization.

That is what the Russian workers found out in 1917. They took the path of revolution and worker ownership of the means of production as the only escape. And eventually the American workers and farmers will take that road to worker ownership.

We will have a harder time than the Russian workers had attaining power. Our capitalist class has had generations of experience in ruling by means of "democracy." It has well learned the art of using its economic power, its state power, all the means of deception, bribery, and coercion to fool and intimidate the workers and the toiling masses. It has in its service labor leaders skilled and experienced in misleading the workers, in dividing their ranks, in spreading illusions among them, in checking and obstructing their will to struggle against exploitation. It has built itself an army of gunmen, who face the necessity of going to work if the workers abolish private property and exploitation. It has built itself an army of parasites and hangers-on to defend it. It will fight the workers to the last ditch.

[1] This pamphlet was written and ready to go to press before the Supreme Court decision on the N. R. A. The decision does not invalidate the characterization of the N. R. A. as an anti-working-class measure. It only means that Wall Street is convinced that the N. R. A. had served its purpose, that the capitalists can now pass to a more open onslaught on the workers to be combined with a new kind of demagogy.

But the American workers will not be fooled nor intimidated much longer. They are learning from their own bitter experience and from the example and experience of the workers of the Soviet Union. It will take a dictatorship of the proletariat (the workers) in this country, as in the Soviet Union, to defend the workers' power, to suppress the resistance of the capitalists, to crush the sabotage and terror our "white guards" will carry on in secret.

But once capitalist rule is overthrown, once the working class and its allies have discarded the capitalist state power and have established a Soviet state, a Soviet America, it will have great advantages that the Soviet Union did not have. Soviet America's progress toward socialism and communism will be fast. Our workers are trained. Millions of them have the knowledge and skill that old Russia lacked. In Russia the working class was a minority of the population. In the United States the working class is a majority of the population.

The Soviet Union started out with undeveloped resources, with an economy predominantly agricultural, a population largely illiterate and predominantly peasant, with an extremely inadequate communications system, with a shortage of skilled workers and trained engineers and technicians. Soviet America will have at its very start developed resources, highly developed industry as well as agriculture, railroad systems which crisscross the country. It will have a working class which constitutes a large majority of the fifty-three million classed as gainfully employed and the workers, millions of them, skilled and trained in the handling of machinery. It will have a large number of trained and experienced engineers and technicians.

Our farm population, too, is not the peasantry of old Russia. Our farmers know what capitalism is. They know that capitalism offers no salvation to the farmer. Our American farmer knows that ownership of the land does not solve his problems. He still faces all the terrors of the mortgage, and loses his farm to the banker. He has learned that his interests clash with the interests of the big capitalist. The American farmer has also learned something of the value of cooperation and large-scale production. We will not have so difficult a struggle against "kulakism" in this country as the workers had in the Soviet Union.

Our professionals, too, our engineers, technicians, architects, research and scientific workers—a large part of them—will be ready to line up with the working class and give loyal service in building socialism. Scores of thousands of them are learning of their own experience what capitalism spells in insecurity, unemployment, misery, in waste and destruction of natural resources and of human life and labor. Many of them are already now giving support to the struggle against capitalism and capitalist rule. An increasing number of them will be ready, as time goes by, to join in the struggle for socialism.

Only one organization has had a clear view of the developments of the world in recent years—the Communist Party. When Coolidge was President and everything was booming, the Communist Party warned the workers that capitalism, which had gotten temporarily on an even keel, was heading into heavier weather than ever, and was bound for the rocks.

In May 1929, Stalin, addressing an American delegation, said:

"You all know very well the strength and power of American capitalism. Many now think that the general crisis of world capitalism will not affect America. That, of course, is not true. The crisis of world capitalism is developing with increasing rapidity and cannot but affect American capitalism. The 3,000,000 now unemployed in America are the first swallows indicating the ripening of the economic crisis in America. The sharpening antagonism between America and England, the struggle for markets and raw materials and, finally, the colossal growth of armaments—that is the second portent of the approaching crisis."

The crash came 6 months later.

When it came, the reformists, the labor leaders, the Socialists all agreed with Hoover and the capitalist economists that all the machine needed was a little fixing. The labor leaders of the A. F. of L. agreed with Hoover on a no-strike policy. And the capitalists started slashing wages. The Communist Party called on the workers to fight, to fight against wage cuts, to fight for shorter hours without loss of pay, to fight for unemployment relief and unemployment insurance.

While labor leaders and Socialists were talking class peace, the Communists mobilized the first mass protests against unemployment and starvation. On March 6, 1930, the Communist Party organized a demonstration of 100,000 in Union Square. Other demonstrations all over the country showed the workers' demand for unemployment relief. The Communist Party has never lost leadership of the fight for relief and for unemployment insurance. It was this struggle, led by the Communists, which forced the capitalist class—for the first time in the history of the country—to extend public relief, instead of private charity, to the unemployed. The Communists have forced the capitalist parties—all of them—to do lip service to the needs of the unemployed, and to introduce various measures to sidetrack the demand for unemployment and social insurance that grows more insistent daily.

On the water front, it was Communists who organized the Waterfront Unemployment Councils, and led the seamen's battle for relief from the intolerable graft and robbery practiced by the "holy rackets" in the name of relief to seamen.

It was Communists who defied William Green's acceptance of Hoover's no strike policy, and all the truces by which Roosevelt has tried to stop the workers' fight against wage cuts and starvation. The first strikes against Hoover's wage-smashing policies in 1931 and 1932 were led by Communists. Communists led the miners, the auto workers, the steel workers, the seamen to organization and a struggle against the rotten conditions and wages in these basic industries.

The Communist Party was the only party that analyzed the New Deal and branded it from the very first for what it was and has proved itself to be—an effort to bring down wages to minimum standards, to lower the workers' living standards through inflation, and raise the profits of the exploiters; to prevent strikes through the labor boards, and to hinder the organization of the workers into genuine unions.

The "red" unions of the T. U. U. L. led the first strikes against the New Deal. The "red" members of the American Federation of Labor unions started the fire of revolt against New Deal slavery that spread till it involved millions of workers in the struggle against wage cuts and lower living standards.

The Communist Party has led the struggle against growing fascism and the growing war preparations in this country.

The Communist Party has consistently fought for the united front of all workers in their immediate struggles for better conditions, and against the menace of fascism and war. It is fighting for unity in the trade union movement, for democracy and rank and file leadership in the trade unions, for militant policies, for industrial unions. It is fighting for a united front of all workers who are ready to break away from the capitalist political parties—for the building of a mass labor party based on the trade unions and other working-class organizations.

Many workers have been deluded by the capitalist press into holding false beliefs about the Communists. They have denounced the "reds" and followed the "red" program, because their class instincts told them that those tactics were right and that their conservative leaders were playing into the hands of the enemy and helping to cut their wages when they cried out for peace and cooperation with the employer who was slaving and starving the workers.

By degrees those workers wake to the real meaning of the "reds'" campaigns. They see that it is the "reds" who fight hardest in every fight—that the Communists lead the struggle for every demand of the workers, because the Communist Party is the party of the working class and the Communist program is the program of better wages and working conditions for the working class and final freedom from exploitation for the workers.

The Communist Party leads the American workers today in spite of the mob hysteria and Fascist violence stirred up against the Communists. The Communist Party will continue to lead the working class in action, more and more consciously, to unity of all workers, to better wages and working conditions, to unemployment and social insurance, to the fight against war and fascism, to a Soviet America.

Join the Communist Party!

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous special order of the House, the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ANGELL] is recognized for 30 minutes.

THE 76TH CONGRESS AND THE BATTLE OF AMERICA

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include certain excerpts, quotations, and tables.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ANGELL]?

There was no objection.

SHOULD CONGRESS ABDICATE AND GO HOME?

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, a little less than 3 months of the Seventy-sixth Congress remains. We should not adjourn, and we should not recess but should remain on the job and devote all of our energies and talents to keep America out of the European conflict and keep the ravages of war from our shores and to solve our domestic problems. As a Congress we have done all that we can do to this date in providing for total defense and perfecting our armaments so that we may successfully defend our possessions and our people against any and all invaders. We should make our defenses so strong that no dictator or combinations of dictators would dare to attack us. Having done this, we should devote our vast armaments to the defense of America and its possessions. We should see to it that we make no commitments and become embroiled in no entanglements or alliances that will provoke an attack upon us and thus lead us into war through the back door. The American people are of one mind that they will fight to the last ditch to defend themselves, but they will not again make the momentous blunder of sending American soldiers overseas to fight in foreign wars.

We have passed legislation providing for such a national defense as I have outlined, but we are still confronted by an equally important problem, that of providing against the collapse of our democracy from within. Our first line of defense is a strong economic and fiscal policy. Unless we can coordinate our industrial enterprises and bring all of our manpower and industries into unison for the one definite purpose of building the armament equipment for which we have now provided, we will fail. This requires the unswerving loyalty of every single one of us devoting all that we have to the one problem of consummating our defenses at the very earliest date. We must permit of no delay, no interruptions, or no postponements.

DOMESTIC PROBLEMS UNSOLVED

Our domestic economy and our finances are in a wretched condition. This one big problem still faces the Congress. Without partisanship, without personal ambitions or desires, all of us, Republicans, Democrats, and independents should put our shoulders to the wheel and go forward with the utmost efficiency and dispatch to finish this great task which we have set for ourselves. In keeping with such a program I have from the outset urged the Congress to keep in session and give the green light to our domestic program and endeavor to find solutions for our economic and financial difficulties which have confronted us like grim specters for 10 years.

Early in June, when the President urged Congress to adjourn, I, with many of my colleagues, took the position that to adjourn would be a grievous mistake. I believe it is more important to the welfare of our country and the preservation of our democracy that we continue in session the remainder of the Seventy-sixth Congress and devote these 3 months to a sincere and patriotic effort to win the battle of America and to make America impregnable both within and without. We may prepare an impregnable defense from an attack from without but if we fail to provide against a collapse of our economic structure from within we will lose the battle. I urge upon you, my colleagues, to join with me in voting to keep the Congress in session and to complete the job which America has entrusted to us. I shall not vote to adjourn or to recess.

THE AGRICULTURAL PROBLEM UNSOLVED AFTER 10 YEARS OF FRUITLESS AND PROFLIGATE SPENDING

Mr. Speaker, I supported the A. A. A. program for the relief of agriculture. I have done so with the full realization that it is only a makeshift, stopgap program which has not given the farming industry fair and equal treatment with other industries of our country. The farmer is entitled to a fair return for his labors and to have the market price of the things he sells protected so as to give him a fair return on his investment and for the labor expended by him. He is entitled to parity prices with other American citizens receiving help from the Federal Government. Until we have perfected and adopted a plan which will place the farmer on an equality with other industries I will continue to support the A. A. A. program as the best available for temporary relief.

I join with many of my colleagues in a sincere desire to bring success to agriculture. My people were farmers. I was brought up on a farm and for years have worked in the Grange and in the legislature of my own State seeking to bring relief to this great industry. It is conceded by all that unless we have prosperity on the farms of America we will not have prosperity anywhere.

I am a member of the Unemployment Conference of the House composed of some 70 Members who for months have voluntarily been wrestling with the problem of unemployment which has hung like a millstone about the neck of America. This committee composed of Democrats, Republicans, and independents, after weeks of study and debate, among other things reached this conclusion with reference to the farming industries as it affects unemployment. I quote from the conference report, House Document 850, Seventy-sixth Congress, third session, pages 6 and 7:

That while the national income during the last 30 years has increased 250 percent, from $26,415,000,000 to $67,608,000,000, the farmers' cash income in 1939 was practically the same as it was in 1909, and instead of being 16.4 percent of the total, as in 1909, the farmers' cash income from the sale of their crops had dropped to 6.6 percent. That means that 25 percent of our total population must try to live on only 6.6 percent of the total national income. Do you wonder that they leave the farm as quickly as they can get away?

Your committee is thoroughly convinced that unemployment cannot be solved, that prosperous conditions cannot be realized merely by increasing industrial wages or merely by seeking to restore more prosperous conditions in the cities and industrial centers. Our investigation goes back over 100 years, and it appears without exception that whenever wages or conditions improve in the towns and cities there is an immediate and substantial rush from farm to city. That is but the human, the natural, thing. Today the farmer is receiving for his crops a price which returns him a wage for his labor of from 5 to 20 cents an hour. Any man who seeks to improve his condition, who has any respect for his wife, who wants an education and decent clothing for his children, will move where he is guaranteed at least 30 cents an hour and can have the benefits of unemployment insurance and old-age security.

On the other hand, your committee is convinced that the greatest potential market in the world today is the American farmer and that if given a proper return for his crops, if given the purchasing power, he will go into the markets of this Nation and will make necessary the employment of millions of additional workers in our manufacturing and industrial plants. Agriculture is the foundation of all civilization; it is the rock upon which all true progress and prosperity must build; it provides the raw materials which are the basis of all industrial employment; it is the key to many of our present-day problems, including unemployment.

This is a severe indictment of the farm program of the present administration which has spent huge sums of borrowed money which the taxpayers ultimately will have to pay. As stated by the committee, 25 percent of our total population living on our farms must try to live on only 6.6 of the total national income. In 1909 farmers received 16.4 of the total national income. And the committee asks, Do you wonder that the farmers leave the farm as quickly as they can get away? Today, as found by the committee, the farmer is receiving for his crops a price which returns him a wage for his labor of from 5 to 20 cents an hour. And yet we pride ourselves that America is one of the most progressive nations of the world in providing adequate wages and living conditions for our labor. The farmer is the forgotten man. In our zeal to protect those who earn their living with their hands we have completely ignored the farm community, which is the backbone of our Nation and which comprises 25 percent of our population.

SENATOR M'NARY'S FARM POLICY

My distinguished fellow citizen from Oregon, Senator CHARLES L. MCNARY, has proven himself to be the outstanding friend of the farmer. I support Senator MCNARY's program. For years he has labored in Congress to bring about remedial legislation that will correct this great injustice forced upon this large portion of our population and secure to our farmers adequate income for their labor and restore to them parity prices.

AMERICAN FARMER SOLD DOWN THE RIVER BY RECIPROCAL-TRADE PROGRAM

Senator MCNARY recently said:

The New Deal already has our economic borders defenseless. Because of the reciprocal-trade treaties our trade frontier is unprotected.

The trade treaties—supported by Secretary Hull and Secretary Wallace as measures to promote peace and benefit agriculture—have failed in both instances. In addition, the trade treaties, by giving us the lowest tariffs since the Democratic Underwood Act of 1913, have lowered our resistance to an after-war flood of cheap imports. * * *

The reciprocal-trade treaties, viewed as a lever for increasing exports, are fallacious—however they were intended. I propose to demonstrate that. They have deprived the American farmer of a good slice of the American market—to which he is entitled.

They have injured his prices. Actually they constitute a formula for rewriting the tariff schedules while talking about something else; a cynical example of New Deal double talk. Mr. Hull admitted that in his Farm Bureau speech at Chicago last December. They embody the historic free-trade policy of the Democratic Party.

Moreover, they have been used too often for diplomatic, not economic, ends. Through them, we have seemed to be in the foolish business of trying to buy good will.

I do not ask that we harden our spirit against other countries. I am all for being a good neighbor, but am not in favor of being a chuckle-headed neighbor—forever turning the other cheek. No government has the right, as trustee for its people, to prefer the material interest of other countries. Yet the New Deal, under the Hull foreign-trade policies, has served alien interests. * * *

The trade treaties, as you will observe, helped the farmers. But the farmers they have helped live in Mexico, Canada, Asia, and Africa.

I would prefer helping the farmer of Clay County, Minn., pay his taxes, lighten the mortgage, educate the children—and even buy a new car. (Speech at Ulen, Minn., October 5, 1940.)

The American farmer does not want charity. There is no more loyal, hard-working, and effective member of our democracy than the farmer. He does not want to be put in the position of standing hat in hand and holding a tin cup in front of the Federal Treasury for a dole year in and year out. He wants to be placed on an equality with other American industries and to have the same protection so that his labors on the farm will be rewarded by a fair share of the Nation's income. He wants to receive a price for his products that is on an equality with the prices for the things he must buy. The farm program which has been in vogue for the last 7 years has failed miserably to give him this protection.

I favor proper and adequate laws to enable American farmers to receive parity prices and to put them on the same basis as our citizens employed in other walks of life. Any program which denies the farmer cost of production is wrong.

An examination of the payments that have been made through the A. A. A. will disclose that it has wholly failed to give this protection to the farmers of my own State of Oregon as well as most of the farmers of other communities. The following table shows the total of A. A. One insurance company received over $254,000 in Agricultural Adjustment Administration payments in 1 year. One corporation farm received $112,000 in 1938 and $122,000 in 1939. Actual farmers received very small amounts.

It will be noted from this table that the average annual payment per farm in my own State of Oregon is $53. These checks do not offset the low agricultural price received by the Oregon farmers under the program of the administration. The tax the farmer has been compelled to pay during this period has more than doubled and this miserable payment of $53 he receives has already been taken out of his own pocket in the taxes he has already paid and he will be compelled to pay huge taxes in the future. He has also had to shoulder an inordinate share of the deficit spending carried on by the administration. The public debt has been increased during these fateful years $21,000,000,000, and the farm communities, representing 25 percent of the total population, will eventually have to repay five or six billion dollars of this public debt. There is approximately 341,000,000 acres of lands devoted to crops harvested each year, upon which there is an invisible mortgage of $15 on every acre thereof for the proportionate share of this stupendous public debt. The farmers of America have received from this program approximately $3,000,000,000, and in addition to the moneys already paid by the high taxes imposed upon them they will still be required to pay an additional amount of some $6,000,000,000.

Oregon receives $53 per farm under the A. A. A., while many large corporations receive payments in excess of $50,000 each. The highest single payment for 1937—the latest figures I have available—was $257,095.

I quote from the Washington Times-Herald of March 4, 1940, showing the payments for that year under the A. A. A. program which exceed $50,000.

[From the Washington Times-Herald of March 4, 1940]

SURETY FIRM GETS BIGGEST A. A. A. PAYMENT—TOP BENEFITS TO OWNERS OF FORECLOSED FARMS

(By Fred Bailey)

The biggest single beneficiary of the New Deal's farm program in 1937 was the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. An Agriculture Department report to Congress today revealed it was paid $257,095 in A. A. A. benefits on farms it owns.

Nearly all the top payments went to life-insurance companies and banks which have become large-scale owners of farms on which mortgages have been foreclosed.

PAYMENTS LAG A YEAR

More than 20,000 farmers and corporations received A. A. A. benefit payments of $1,000 or more for compliance with the 1937 program. Most of the checks were sent out in 1938 and 1939, since payments usually lag more than a year behind program compliance.

The report disclosed 272 farmers and corporations received more than $10,000 each, and 594 received $5,000 or more. Total payments for 1937 were $325,856,887.

The payments were obligated before Congress amended the Agricultural Adjustment Administration Act in 1938, prohibiting the payment of more than $10,000 to any person or corporation. The limitation became effective last year.

CONTINUE TO COOPERATE

Agriculture Department officials said "very few" of the large corporations had ceased cooperation in the farm program because of the limitation. It has resulted, they said, in larger payments to small farmers.

A. A. A. officials said the average check sent 3,750,000 farmers who participated in the 1937 program was about $75. Since then the average has increased, partly because nearly $500,000,000 was provided by Congress for such payments in both 1938 and 1939.

There were 11 payments of more than $100,000 each, and 12 of between $50,000 and $100,000. After the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., the next biggest payments went to the Prudential Insurance Co. of America, $231,158, and the Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States, $206,962.

OTHER HIGH PAYMENTS

Other payments of more than $100,000 were:

NEW DEAL DOCTRINE OF SCARCITY ANOTHER GIGANTIC FLOP

I am opposed to the doctrine of regimented scarcity designed to feed and clothe Americans in want and restore prosperity. I am opposed to killing pigs, cattle, and brood sows, and plowing under corn, cotton, and wheat, and then throwing down the bars to permit importations of these very products from abroad. It has built up foreign agriculture and brought deserted farms and farm mortgage foreclosures to American farmers.

The New Deal confuses even its own members. On March 28, 1939 one of our colleagues, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MASSINGALE], a distinguished Democrat, on the floor of the House said in part:

> Let me tell you this: I hope this will be a lesson to the American Congress, to the American farmer, and to the American people as a whole, that we are going to abandon these foolish philosophies of trying to do something by cutting down acreage, killing cattle, killing hogs, and things of that sort, and restore the American farmer to the estate of decency, at least, that he used to have. We can do that. We can give him parity and better than parity. We can give him cost of production. There is a petition on file up here, No. 5, that will give to the farmers of this country what it costs them at least to produce a pound of cotton or a bushel of wheat or any other commodity that we grow on the farms of this country. Let us give it to them. We have got to quit this. Congress cannot go on year after year appropriating five hundred million to a billion dollars a year in order to carry out this darned fool philosophy that some fellow has picked up somewhere and tries to foist on the people of the country and make the farmers endorse it in order to get an imaginary payment.

Millions of the American people have Mr. MASSINGALE'S views on this subject.

While 91,135 farmers were being driven from their farms because they could not pay $112 interest on an average $2,800 mortgage Uncle Sam was building 90,436 building units in the cities costing $4,359 a unit, with rent $193 a year for 60 years. More families were driven from their homes than were provided with these new homes and the public debt was increased $1,680,000,000.

SAVE AMERICAN MARKETS FOR AMERICANS—AMERICAN FARMERS FORCED TO COMPETE WITH CHEAP FOREIGN IMPORTS

Well we may ask why it is that American farmers are in such distress. They have as fertile lands as are found any place on the face of the globe. Under our reclamation projects we have provided ample water for irrigation. The American farmer possesses the most advanced type of farming machinery designed to save labor costs and give efficiency to operation. Our American farmers are the equal of any farmers of any country in industry, training, and resourcefulness. Yet as reported by the Congressional Committee on Unemployment, to which I have already made reference, they are receiving only five to twenty cents an hour for their efforts and only 6.6 percent of our income whereas they comprise 25 percent of our population. The answer is simple enough. We have embarked upon a program which this administration has consistently followed in opening the American markets to competitive farm products from abroad. These cheap competitive importations from abroad are produced by coolie, Hindu, and other low class labor receiving wages barely sufficient to sustain life.

Many of these products coming from abroad are subsidized by the countries in which they are produced, so as to enable the products to be laid down in the American markets at a cut-throat price with which we cannot compete and sustain our American wage scales and standard of living.

To show some of these importations and the increase in the year 1939 over 1938, I call attention to the following tables from the Department of Commerce and Agriculture:

During the past year while the Surplus Commodity Corporation was spending $30,000,000 of your tax dollars to get rid of certain surplus farm commodities, these New Deal trade agreements permitted foreign countries to ship in $90,000,000 worth of these very same commodities. It just does not make sense.

Mr. Speaker, the American farmer is suffering from increased farm imports and decreased farm exports. The Hull trade program lowered farm tariffs and opened our home market to the advantage of foreign farmers with low wages and cheap lands. Our farmers are asked to curtail their production and when they do their market is given to foreigners. The American farmer is entitled to the American market.

The following table shows value and increase in farm imports. These may greatly increase if we vote a $500,000,000 loan to Latin American countries to be used in financing competitive farm crops:

From these tables which are from the official records of the Federal departments named, it is at once seen that the administration program as carried out by Mr. Wallace has deprived the American farmer of a fair return for his labors and has also penalized him when compared with the income he received prior to 1932. Thus, for the 12 Republican administration years prior to 1932, the average annual income for American agriculture was $9,212,250,000, whereas the average annual income under the present administration of 7 years was $7,255,142,857. This resulted in direct loss each year to the American farmers of $1,957,107,143 or for the 7-year period practically $14,000,000,000. It is clear why we who are concerned with the welfare of the farmers insist that this whole program must be revamped and the farmer allowed to receive his fair share of the Nation's income and a fair return for his labors and investment and to have farm prices put on a parity with other American prices. Everything the farmer has to buy has increased as commodity prices rose but the farm prices have either remained stationary or gone below what would be a parity price.

RECIPROCAL-TRADE PROGRAM HAS WRECKED OREGON AGRICULTURE AND LUMBER INDUSTRIES—LIVESTOCK INDUSTRY

Let us see what these trade agreements have done to the livestock interests.

Early in 1936 a trade agreement was made with Canada that reduced the duty on 175,000 heavy cattle from 3 to 2 cents, and later reduced it to 1½ cents with the quota increased to 225,000. No provision limiting the number or time when these cattle could be marketed was made. As a result, starting on March 28, 1936, and continuing through June 15, 1936, we find at the St. Paul market total receipt of 233,342 head of cattle, of which 42,575, or 18.27 percent, were Canadian. During this period, on an average, cattle prices were off $2 per head, which, applied to the total receipt of 233,342, approached a loss of $500,000 for the St. Paul market alone. Since the low bid at one market sets the price at all markets, and applying this same loss of $2 a head to the combined receipt at all of our great markets, we find that during the first 3 months after the Canadian agreements became operative the livestock interests, because of these agreements, took a loss of $25,000,000. During all of that period we read in the St. Paul livestock reports every day such statements as 80 cars of Canadians, 55 cars of Canadians, 60 cars of Canadians, 125 cars of Canadians, and so forth, as well as the continuous daily restatement that trading was dull, that the market was off, that there was a big carryover. The convincing part of the proof lies in the fact that daily the great Chicago market faithfully followed the lead of St. Paul. The receipt of Canadians oversupplied and broke the St. Paul market, and that break was reflected in every other market and definitely caused the loss of the millions referred to above. Small wonder that the farmer feels himself utterly abandoned by our Government.

Under the existing tariff, 85,862,876 pounds of canned beef entered the United States during 1939, an increase of 7,265,896 pounds over 1928. I wonder if you really realize what these figures mean? Translated into terms of cattle on the hoof, roughly 143,000 critters stampeded through the 6-cent tariff wall to our shores during the past year. For good luck and for good measure, you can add another 10,000 head in the forms of smoked, pickled, and cured products.

Again I ask, Why lower the tariff? Not only canned beef, but hides, dog food, fertilizer, and practically all other remaining parts of the critter are to be admitted under the pending agreement with Argentina in direct competition with American stock raisers.

Perhaps we do need more canned beef in this country, but, if so, it is because of the President's superb sales talk for the foreign product. Why not let the American farmer supply this market? It is interesting to note the effect of the pronouncement by the President that "Argentine canned beef was superior to the American brand," and suggesting that you take a can along so that your family could see for itself on the next picnic. I suggest you try to buy a can of American beef from your grocer. You will go hungry waiting. Here is the story:

In June 1939 Argentina exported 2,440,202 pounds of canned beef. This was about the time of the President's sales talk for Argentina. In July, 500,000 additional pounds were exported, and during August Argentina's exports reached an all-time high of 3,418,566 pounds—more than a million pounds increase in 2 months because of a few kind words by the President.

During the entire trade-agreement period, agricultural exports have declined $104,000,000 while competitive farm imports have increased $68,000,000.

In discussing this subject before the Committee for Reciprocity Information in Washington, D. C., Senator TOM CONNALLY, a Democrat, said:

> We don't feel so kindly toward Argentina that we want to hurt our own farmers to help the pampas cowboys. We don't want to build up industry which is already bloated and overextended. Congress appropriated $700,000,000 to help the farmers last year, and we don't want to do something now to harm them.

In the first 9 months of 1939 we imported foreign products for consumption in the amount of $794,700,000, while in the same period in 1938 we imported $711,600,000. During the same period our agricultural exports declined from $602,700,000 to $418,400,000.

Another striking effect of the operation of these agreements was brought to my attention recently. State Senator C. H. Zurcher, of Oregon, reported that in the Northwest he found a herd of 6,300 Canadian calves, weighing about 250 or 300 pounds each. These calves were being fattened for the American baby-beef market and were being fed, according to State Senator Zurcher, Argentine corn and East Indies molasses. A small duty had been paid on the calves, but the Argentine corn was delivered cheaper here than Iowa corn could be procured, and ships from the Orient brought molasses from the East Indies cheaper than our own sugar wastes could be obtained.

This is a striking example of the operation of the reciprocal-trade agreements and the havoc they are working upon agriculture. It shows the impossibility of American agriculture competing with cheap labor and living conditions of foreign countries as long as we maintain the American wage scale both as to agricultural employees and maritime workers. The importation of these Canadian calves and the food products for fattening them, of course, deprives the American farmer of a market for a like amount of his products. In 1934 we imported 59,000 head of cattle. In 1938, under the trade agreements, we imported 424,000. In 1934 we imported 313,000 pounds of fresh beef, and in 1937, 4,600,000 pounds. The Agriculture Department recently reported that American imports of cattle and beef during 1939 totaled 440,092,000 pounds, or approximately 30 percent more than was imported in 1938. The 1939 imports represented 8.2 percent of the cattle inspected for slaughter in the United States. Under the administration of the trade-agreement law we are allowing foreign beef or cattle to come into our country from Canada, Mexico, and South America to displace American products, thus depriving our American farmer of a market and throwing American laborers out of their jobs. It brings forcibly to our attention the fact that the American market is the best market we have for our agricultural products. Why trade it down the river to foreign countries? If we trade it away to foreign countries in order to build up the manufacturing industry in America, we are undoing the very thing that Congress has been attempting to do in solving the farm problem.

AMERICAN WOOL INDUSTRY THREATENED

Mr. Speaker, we in Oregon are especially interested in the wool industry. Many of you have a like interest. You, Mr. Speaker, in the great wool-growing State of Texas are particularly interested. The reciprocal-trade agreement with Great Britain became operative on the 1st day of January 1939. Approximately 90 percent of American products on which tariff concessions are made by Great Britain are on the prohibitive list, and export license must be obtained for any of the products to be shipped. In other words, anything Britain shall ship may come to us free from quota restrictions and currency regulations. France, Belgium, and Italy benefit equally with Great Britain by this treaty, which is further enhanced by the rate of exchange. During the first 8 months of 1939, representing the period during which the reciprocal-trade agreement with Great Britain had been in effect, our imports of woolen rags totaled 5,461,292 pounds, an increase of 4,969,167 pounds, or more than 1,000 percent, compared with the corresponding months in 1938. Imports of manufactured woolen goods also showed tremendous increases, amounting to 8,749,587 square yards, during the first 8 months of 1939, or more than 100 percent over the imports for the corresponding period of 1938. The imports of these materials amounted, in the 8-month period, to over 12,000,000 pounds, which would equal approximately 25,000,000 to 30,000,000 pounds of raw material. The combined raw materials and finished products is the equivalent of 35,000,000 pounds of raw wool. It is estimated that it amounts to twice the annual wool clip of such States as Oregon, Idaho, South Dakota, Ohio, and many other wool-producing States, and more than half of the total annual raw-wool production in the great sheep-raising State of Texas.

WEST COAST LUMBER INDUSTRY SCUTTLED

Mr. Speaker, in Oregon we have the largest body of standing timber of any State in the Nation. Over 50 percent of our pay rolls come from the forest industry. The Douglas fir forests of Oregon and Washington are the largest in the United States. The reciprocal-trade agreement with Canada has resulted in great injury to this industry in our State. In 1935 the total forest products and paper imported from Canada was $108,724,794, whereas in 1938 it had increased to $168,990,162, or an increase of 55 percent. We formerly supplied 75 percent of the north Pacific coast lumber used by the British nation. The Canadian agreement of 1935 lowered the American tariff wall one-half, but left the British Empire tariffs intact. American duties on Canadian lumber were cut 50 percent—all the law allowed, restricted to 250,000,000 feet annually. Under the most-favored-nation clause this reduced lumber duty was automatically extended to every other country in the world shipping lumber to the United States, including Soviet Russia. Lumber imports to the United States increased at once. Douglas fir and west-coast hemlock from British Columbia was practically doubled. In the first 11 months of 1938 Canada shipped 155,000,000 feet of Douglas fir and west-coast lumber into the United States while west-coast shipments to the entire British Empire, Canada included, totaled only 59,000,000 board feet—a ratio of 3 to 1. In other words, American lumber exporters have been cut off from the British market, but the home market has been opened to Canadian shipments. In 1938 in the Northwest 16 percent of the sawmills worked full time, 32 percent part time, and 52 percent were idle. We paid 76.7 cents per hour to our workers for a 40-hour week and British Columbia paid 57 cents for a 48-hour week.

FOREIGN-EXCHANGE CONTROL NULLIFIES TARIFF

There has been set up in Canada a foreign-exchange control board, with arbitrary power over rates of exchange, foreign securities, and exports and imports. This arbitrary power lodged in this board by an order-in-council of the Dominion of Canada has given the board the absolute power to stop the sale of American goods in Canada. As a result of this arbitrary action of our northern neighbor the managed depreciation of Canadian exchange has wiped out completely the small protection for American lumber provided by the reciprocal-trade treaty with Canada. I call attention to the rates of exchange fixed by this board for the 4 months of August to November, inclusive, 1939:

Comparative rates of Canadian, British, and American exchange

	Aug. 1	Sept. 1	Oct. 2	Nov. 1	Nov. 30
New York noon buying rate: Canadian dollars	0.999765	0.956718	0.894453	0.896562	0.863359
Sterling (in United States dollars)	4.680694	4.21375	4.015833	3.999305	3.8825
Canadian buying rate: Sterling (in Canadian dollars)	----------	4.44¼	[1] 4.43	[1] 4.43	[1] 4.43

[1] Fixed by the Canadian Foreign Exchange Control Board at a buying rate of $4.43 and a selling rate of $4.47.

The disastrous effect of this arbitrarily managed exchange is at once apparent when we thus see that on November 30, 1939, a British pound would only buy $3.39 worth of Oregon lumber, but $4.43 worth of Canadian lumber. Likewise, the Canadian exporter of lumber to Oregon, or to its lumber markets in the United States, would have an advantage through this favorable exchange of 13½ percent to 14 percent over Oregon lumber producers. The Canadian exporter of Douglas-fir lumber selling at $18 per thousand board feet, the current price, with a retained duty of $2 per thousand board feet, would have an advantage over Oregon producers under the exchange rate of 14 percent, or $2.50 per thousand board feet. This would more than offset the tariff under the treaty. This tells the story why cheap Canadian lumber undersells our Oregon lumber, and why our Oregon mills have been closed down much of the time while the Canadian mills run full time. It also explains why many of our loggers and sawmill workers in Oregon are on the relief rolls and W. P. A. drawing from the Federal Treasury. The American lumber industry, with high wages and costs, cannot, in the American markets, compete on a free basis with western Canada with cheap labor.

With congressional approval of trade treaties, these facts could be presented to the Congress with assurance of fair treatment. Under the present secret negotiations and consummation of trade treaties, the American producer is helpless. He not only has no voice in the procedure taken, which may ruin his industry, but likewise his duly elected representatives in Congress have no voice, having delegated their legislative power to the Executive. As a result of these conditions threatening to destroy our lumber industry, our lumber producers have appealed to the Secretary of State for relief from the trade treaty with Canada, saying:

1. The basis of commerce between Canada and the United States has been abrogated by the Dominion Government through formation of the foreign exchange control board, which has complete and arbitrary powers over foreign exchange, rates of exchange, imports, and exports.

2. The managed depreciation of Canadian currency has completely offset the existing $2-a-thousand tariff and tax protection granted American lumber producers in the trade agreement. In this connection the American producers show that the present depreciation of about 14 percent on Canadian currency amounts to around $2.50 a thousand feet on $18 lumber, or more than the total of $2 a thousand of existing tariff and import duty.

3. Canadian lumber mills operated steadily in 1939, piling up inventories estimated at more than 330,000,000 board feet of lumber as of the middle of last December. With British ships not available to move this large accumulation of lumber, there is the threat that Canadian mills will start selling to the nearby American market.

Since 1934, following the inauguration of the reciprocal-trade program, the Pacific Northwest has lost 1,000,000,000 feet of its offshore lumber trade, which means the loss of 2,000,000 days of work each year, or about $12,000,000 in wages.

TRADE-TREATY PROGRAM UNDERMINES AMERICAN LABOR

Few countries have gone as far as has the United States in protecting its wage earners. We have put a floor under wages and a ceiling over hours, and have provided minimum wages and have raised standards on a broad scale for the guaranteeing to American workmen healthful surroundings and social security. We have imposed heavy taxes on American industries and agriculture to provide these advantages to laborers and other citizens. As a result, these additional costs are reflected in the cost of American products. We cannot hope to maintain our agriculture and industries on a profitable basis, which are heavily taxed for these purposes, if we throw their products in free competition with peon, coolie, and other cheap labor of foreign countries.

FARMERS AGAINST RECIPROCAL-TRADE PROGRAM

I call your attention to the fact that the National Grange, the outstanding farm organization in the United States, is opposed to the present reciprocal-trade program. If the farmers of America were being benefited by the program it would have their whole-hearted support, and not their opposition. They know, as we know, that the reciprocal-trade program is working havoc with the farming industry, and is depriving the American producers of the best market in the world for their produce, the American market. The National Grange has adopted the following resolution:

The reciprocal trade agreements program has caused serious damage to American agriculture. It has depressed farm prices by encouraging imports of competitive products from countries where substandard labor conditions prevail. It is wrong in principle and violates the Constitution. It should not be renewed when it expires by its own limitations on June 12, 1940.

Mr. L. J. Taber, master of the National Grange, testified before the Ways and Means Committee in opposing the extension of the reciprocal-trade law:

May I make a further observation before turning from this farm question? I want to say that this Congress and the Ways and Means Committee should face the fact that, if we are going to have these reciprocal treaties, we must look forward to adding another billion dollars to farm payments because of the depressing effect of these treaties, the repercussions of even small importations, the certainty of a lowered standard of living, and world-wide poverty, which will make imports beat at our doors, so that, instead of being satisfied with what Secretary Wallace reports, I will serve notice now that if we are going to continue the reciprocal-treaty program the Grange is going to come here and ask not for hundreds of thousands of dollars, but a billion dollars additional to bring agriculture up where it ought to be. Why? We are 22 percent below parity now after 6 years of reciprocal treaties. We have not helped the surplus problem; we have not helped the farm income. The farm dollar is 22 percent below par. We have about 22 percent unemployed. We have not solved the farm problem. We have distressed it. Until we quit distressing it we cannot make progress.

EXPORT TRADE UNDER THE RECIPROCAL TRADE ACT

An examination of the official statistics of the Government discloses that the administration of the Reciprocal Trade Agreement Act and the trade pacts negotiated under it have not resulted in increasing our agricultural exports, but, on the other hand, have opened our local markets to many competitive agricultural products resulting in serious injury to our farmers.

During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, the last full year before the reciprocal-tariff program went into effect, our exports of farm commodities totaled $787,343,000. Our farm exports for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, amounted to $682,962,000. This shows a loss of farm exports of $104,381,000.

During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, our imports of farm commodities totaled $838,952,000. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, farm imports amounted to $998,616,000. This shows an increase in imports of $159,664,000.

Speaking only of competitive imports, there was an increase of $67,625,000 in 1939 as compared with 1934.

The cash income of the farmers of the United States for 1937, including Government payments, was $8,574,000,000. In 1938 this income was $7,632,000,000, a decrease in farm income of $942,000,000. This effect of the lowering of import duties on competitive agricultural products is further disclosed by a comparison of the importations of these products as compared with the noncompetitive agricultural products.

The average imports of competitive agricultural products for the 5 years ending June 30, 1934, were $495,395,000. For the next 5 years, beginning July 1, 1934, they were $616,149,000, or an average increase in competitive imports in the last 5-year period compared with the first of $120,754,000. Then take the noncompetitive agricultural products for the first 5-year period. They averaged $536,933,000, or an average decrease of $37,210,000.

UNSOUND FISCAL POLICIES

Mr. Speaker, I have voted for all of the appropriations for the preparedness program since it was inaugurated. As I stated before, I believe we should leave nothing undone to rearm ourselves at the very earliest time so that we may make America impregnable against attack but that we should not use this immense military force for taking part in wars in the Old World. Let us use our armaments for defense and not for intervention. We must, however, adopt a sound fiscal policy and abandon the makeshift policy we have followed for over 7 years. I append below a table showing the appropriations we have made at this session of Congress:

TABLE I

Direct appropriations	$15,768,339,250.12

Mr. Speaker, we have appropriated in direct appropriations, including permanent appropriations, a total for this session of Congress in excess of $20,107,000,000. The following table shows a recapitulation of the appropriations and funds otherwise made available for expenditure at this session of Congress, namely:

Direct appropriations	$15,768,339,250.12

Permanent appropriations	3,965,049,289.00

Of which about $13,800,000,000 is for alleged national defense.

THIRTEEN BILLION SPENDING TO MAKE DEFICIT OF $5,760,000,000

The Treasury expects the current fiscal year to produce a peacetime spending record of $13,000,000,000 and a deficit of about $5,760,000,000.

The anticipated total expenditure would be the second highest in all American history, yielding only to the World War fiscal year 1919 when the outlay reached $18,522,895,000.

The expected deficit would be exceeded only by the figures in the 1918 and 1919 fiscal years.

Our distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], in presenting the third deficiency bill involving the last appropriation for rearmament, said:

If we get value for the money we have appropriated, and if we get hemispheric defense, this Government will have secured a great bargain. But we had just as well face the realities. Further great appropriations are going to be necessary. The $13,000,000,000 of appropriations do not constitute full defense. We have given the Executive, the commander in chief and his experts what they asked. No one can do more than that. With the economic outlook I am terrified (September 26, 1940).

We have enacted a new tax measure. It is estimated to raise from $500,000,000 to $900,000,000 the first year and a billion dollars a year thereafter. With these added revenues the total revenues of the Federal Government will not be sufficient to pay for purely non-defense spending. Such non-defense expenditures will approximate $7,000,000,000 while the revenues with this increased taxation is estimated to be $6,600,000,000 leaving a shortage of nearly a half billion dollars in the payment of the ordinary peacetime expenditures of our Government. This means that every dollar of national-defense spending is being added directly to the public debt, notwithstanding that the public and the taxpayers have been led to believe that these emergency taxes are for national defense. These ominous facts showing the inadequacy of our financial program should deeply concern every American citizen. The Congress and the administration have not even approached a solution of the task of financing our preparedness program. We have even failed to provide sufficient revenues for current expenses. We should eliminate from our thinking the notion that by merely signing a blank check as the Congress has done, drawn upon a bank account that does not exist, to finance the defense of America, we have fulfilled the duty resting upon us. That is one of the reasons why I contend that this Congress should stay at its post of duty and use the remaining 3 months of the Seventy-sixth Congress in solving our financial and economic problems. After all, this problem now facing us is an old one. It has become chronic. For 10 years we have been facing deficits.

Mr. Speaker, I draw attention to the following table showing receipts and disbursements and the national debt for the years 1931–40.

Receipts, deficit, and national debt for 1931 to 1940, inclusive

	Receipts or taxes and fees paid to Government	Deficit	National debt
Year ended June 30—
1931	$3,189,638,632	$901,959,080	$16,801,485,143

1934	3,115,554,050	3,255,393,297	27,053,085,988
1935	3,800,467,202	3,782,966,360	28,701,167,092
1936	4,115,956,615	4,952,928,957	33,545,384,622

1940 [1]	5,669,300,000	3,426,363,200	44,457,845,210

[1] Estimated.

A comparison of the receipts and disbursements discloses that these enormous and abnormal deficits are due not to the impoverished condition of the country by reason of the depression through which we have been passing and therefore a dearth of income-tax revenues, but to an inordinate orgy of spending. Thus in 1932 and 1933 our tax receipts were little in excess of $2,000,000,000, whereas in 1937, 1938, 1939, and 1940 they will average approximately five and one-half billion dollars per year, between two and three times the amount collected during earlier years. In 1938 the total tax bill of America, national, State, and local, amounted to nearly 25 percent of the income produced during the year, and the American people will have paid during the period from February 28, 1933, to June 30, 1940, approximately $34,000,000,000 in Federal taxes alone. Our President, when a candidate for the high office he now holds, in October 1932, said:

Taxes are paid in the sweat of every man who labors because they are a burden on production and can be paid only by production. If excessive, they are reflected by idle factories, tax-sold farms, and hence in hordes of the hungry tramping the streets and seeking jobs in vain. Our workers may never see a tax bill, but they pay in deductions from wages, in increased cost of what they buy, or (as now) in broad cessation of employment. There is not an unemployed man—there is not a struggling farmer—whose interest in this subject is not direct and vital.

Mr. Roosevelt also said in Sioux City, September 29, 1932:

And on my part, I ask you very simply, to assign to me the task of reducing the annual operating expenses of your National Government.

The March American Federationist's preliminary figures show that in January 1939 there were 11,523,031 unemployed. We now have 9,600,000 unemployed. After taxing, borrowing, and appropriating more than $65,000,000,000 and going in debt over $24,000,000,000 since March 4, 1933, we have approximately the same number of unemployed and a great many more people on relief than we had when we started this program. In considering these startling statistics, is there any reason why industry is discouraged and has lost faith in this program, and that fear dominates the businessman and the investor today? Sensible folks can only see one answer to this whole social, political, and economic muddle which threatens to wipe out the American system of private enterprise. If the incomes of all who receive $150,000 or more were divided equally among the American citizens each would get only 15 cents, and the incomes above $5,000 if equally divided would only furnish $2.32 per capita. Million dollar incomes are now taxed 84 percent, and hundred thousand dollar incomes 40 percent. No; the answer is not a socialistic division of wealth but the restoration of American industry to a normal basis, permitting a fair profit to industrial enterprise and thus restoring to private pay rolls the great army of unemployed. At the same time, the old folks of America, 60 years of age or over, who have been cast off by industry, must be cared for. Industry which has put them aside must resume the responsibility for their keep, and in so doing contribute materially toward industrial recovery.

AMERICA ONLY LEADING NATION UNABLE TO BEAT THE DEPRESSION

For over 7 years now we in America have been laboring in the throes of this crushing depression. As shown by the report of the League of Nations, of the 17 leading nations of the world we are at the bottom in recovery. We are the only one of the great family of nations of the world that has not been able to throw off the depression, and we are the only one that has piled up an immense public debt in an endeavor to beat the depression. We are the only one that has attempted to borrow and spend ourselves into prosperity. We are the only one that has attempted by the doctrine of scarcity to supply the needs of a hungry nation. As I have heretofore pointed out, during the last 7 years the annual revenue of the Federal Government has increased from $2,079,696,742 to approximately $5,669,300,000 in the last year. During that time the public debt has doubled, and the Federal appropriations have increased from $7,692,447,339 in 1934 to approximately $10,928,399,272 in 1939. The deficit during this period amounted to $20,889,000,000, which, added to the public debt, has reached the grand total of over $41,000,000,000 for the period under consideration. It is now approaching fifty billions. In addition, the Federal Government is liable on contingent liabilities guaranteed as to principal and interest in the sum of approximately $5,500,000,000. The per capita public debt has increased from $131 in 1931 to $305 in 1939. The interest on this public debt is over $1,000,000,000 a year, more than the total cost of government a few years ago. In 1913 only 6.4 percent of the total national income was required for Federal, State, and local taxes. In 1930, 14.2 percent was required for such taxes, and in 1938, 23.6 percent of the total income of the American people was handed over to the tax collectors. Approximately one-fourth of the time of everyone who labors in the United States is spent in working for the tax collectors. In 1913, 1.9 percent of the national income went for Federal taxes. In 1930, 4.8 percent was required, but in 1938 it had increased to 10.9 percent. State and local taxes in 1938 had increased to 12.7 percent.

In the campaign, on July 30, 1932, Mr. Roosevelt gave his ominous warning:

> Any government, like any family, can, for a year, spend a little more than it earns, but you and I know that a continuation of that habit means the poorhouse.

We have continued in this wild, uncontrolled spree of spending now for over 7 years, throughout the entire present administration, and have accumulated the largest debt in our history; and if we are to avoid the poorhouse, as suggested by Mr. Roosevelt, we must mend our ways. Mr. Roosevelt again said, on March 10, 1933:

> Most liberal governments are wrecked on the rocks of loose fiscal policy; and we must avoid this danger.

I most heartily agree that we are heading direct for the poorhouse, and if we are to avoid the danger of being wrecked on the rocks of loose fiscal policy we must immediately change our existing policy of reckless spending and take steps to put our house in order.

In the same address Mr. Roosevelt said:

> For 3 years the Federal Government has been on the road toward bankruptcy.

And on July 30, 1932, he said:

> Let us have the courage to stop borrowing to meet continuing deficits. Stop the deficits.

NO PANACEA WILL SAVE AMERICA

Mr. Speaker, I am not one of those who believe that we may hit upon some panacea that will solve these fundamental problems which have been on our doorstep for 10 years, bidding fair to wreck our economy and democracy. I believe that the adoption of a common sense, economic, social, and political program, based upon the great concepts of honest toil, economy, thrift, industry, and private property with the right to earn and keep an honest profit will bring the solution. Such a program was at the foundation of the great achievements America has made in the 150 years of its existence. The adoption of such a program and putting it into effect in our every-day transactions will, in my judgment, bring America back to sanity, thrift, and prosperity. As a candidate for the office which I now hold, I advocated such a course of procedure and urged the adoption of the following program:

COMMON-SENSE PROGRAM

> Restore American democracy with constitutional checks and balances. Protect labor and industry from foreign cutthroat competition. Remove the shackles from industry. Assure to industry a definite governmental program of good will and cooperation instead of antagonism and governmental dictation so that confidence and prosperity will return, giving real jobs with decent wages to the unemployed. Replace friction with cooperation between labor and capital for good of both. Maintain law and order, no compromise with racketeers. Old-age assistance equal to American standards. Unemployed relief pending restoration of industry. Adequate aid for needy children, the blind and handicapped. Armaments for defense only, no foreign wars or alliances. No Federal tax on gasoline or fuel oil. Curb unbearable Government expenses and tax-eating bureaus so Government may live within its income. Promote Oregon industries—lumber, wool, agriculture—providing pay rolls for Oregon labor. Extend and preserve civil service and promote the merit system. Square deal for veterans. Protect our youth and safeguard their interests that they may become stalwart, dependable, and clean-minded citizens. Provide adequate facilities for our schools and their teaching staffs. Less cross-word puzzles, more horse sense in government.

During my service in the Seventy-sixth Congress I have endeavored insofar as it was possible as a minority Member to bring about the adoption of legislation that would put into effect this course of action, and I will continue to adhere to such a course. I have supported the program of the administration for the P. W. A. and other relief agencies. We cannot let the American unemployed down. I contend the W. P. A. program should not be made permanent. We should adopt a plan that will permit these worthy citizens to be absorbed in private industry with standard American wages. To require them to be resigned forever to a bare subsistence wage on W. P. A. is not American.

Mr. Speaker, I have also supported wholeheartedly the program for American youth—the C. C. C. and the N. Y. A. Five hundred thousand young people are knocking each year at our doors for an opoprtunity to become a part of the American way of life—to have work in American enterprise, to marry and become the heads of families. There are 5,000,000 of them now unemployed. These projects will help to bridge the chasm between school and a life calling.

OLD-AGE SECURITY

Mr. Speaker, a sound deduction from our experience with old-age security is that the only solution of this problem is this enactment of a Nation-wide plan on a pay-as-you-go, broad tax base affording uniform adequate annuities to all citizens 60 years of age or older who are not gainfully employed.

The Townsend plan as embodied in H. R. 8264, pending in the present Congress, proposes such a solution. Funds are provided under it by the imposition of a 2-percent tax upon all gross incomes, except wages and salaries of workers up to $250 a month, which are exempt, with a similar exemption of $3,000 annually from gross business income. The funds raised from this tax are equally divided monthly among all American citizens 60 years of age or over not gainfully employed, which funds would have to be spent under the terms of the law within 30 days from time of receipt. It is estimated that under existing conditions, this plan would provide $50 a month for each annuitant, increasing as national income increases. The tax formula set forth in the bill is subject to change or amendment when the bill is up for final passage.

Workers 60 years of age or over are unable to find employment in industry. Even younger workers are displaced. The statistics given by the Supreme Court, to which I have hereinafter referred, show these workers are discarded by industry and are forced into idleness, and that approximately 3 out of 4 persons 65 or over are dependent wholly on the public, charity, or others for support. In the main, the support comes from the public now. The tax under the proposed plan, therefore, would not shift the burden for the support of these old people to the public but would only make the care of these senior citizens more certain, uniform, and effective. The plan would bring uniformity throughout the United States which does not now exist. We now have as many plans as there are States in the Union, most of them bogged down by red tape and insufficient funds to meet payments for the bare necessities of life. State lines cause many inequalities. As pointed out by the Supreme Court in the decision hereafter referred to—

> The problem is plainly national in area and dimensions. Moreover, laws of the separate States cannot deal with it effectively. Congress, at least, had a basis for that belief. States and local governments are often lacking in the resources that are necessary to finance an adequate program of security for the aged. This is brought out with a wealth of illustration in recent studies of the problem. Apart from the failure of resources, States and local governments are at times reluctant to increase so heavily the burden of taxation to be borne by their residents for fear of placing themselves in a position of economic disadvantage as compared with neighbors or competitors. We have seen this in our study of the problem of unemployment compensation. Steward Machine Co. v. Davis, supra. A system of old-age pensions has special dangers of its own, if put in force in one State and rejected in another. The existence of such a system is a bait to the needy and dependent elsewhere, encouraging them to migrate and seek a haven of repose. Only a power that is national can serve the interests of all.

These stark facts most forcibly remind us that this problem facing America today demands the unselfish nonpartisan devotion of every American. The Supreme Court, speaking through Mr. Justice Cardozo, recently said (Helvering v. Davis, 301 U. S. 641):

> Spreading from State to State, unemployment is an ill, not particular but general, which may be checked, if Congress so determines, by the resources of the Nation. * * * But the ill is all one, or at least not greatly different, whether men are thrown out of work because there is no longer work to do or because the disabilities of age make them incapable of doing it. Rescue becomes necessary irrespective of the cause. The hope behind this statute is to save men and women from the rigors of the poorhouse as well as from the haunting fear that such a lot awaits them when journey's end is near.

We not only have 10,000,000 or more unemployed, but each year we add to the list 500,000 young men and women pouring out of our schools and universities seeking in vain a niche in the business life of America. Some 10,000,000 of our population are 60 years of age or older, many of whom have been cast off by industry and find themselves stranded without income and without hope. We should not be unmindful of the fact that these senior citizens were the workers of yesterday. They helped build our cities and clear our lands. They were the trail blazers, the pioneers. They built for us. Now that they are old, we cannot pass them by. They do not seek our charity. They only ask simple justice—a modest share in the fruits of American industry, to the production of which their labors in the past have contributed. Discussing the plight of these discarded workers, the Supreme Court, in the decision to which I have referred, said:

> Congress did not improvise a judgment when it found that the award of old-age benefits would be conducive to the general welfare. * * * The evidence is impressive that among industrial workers the younger men and women are preferred over the older. In times of retrenchment the older are commonly the first to go, and, even if retained, their wages are likely to be lowered. The plight of men and women at so low an age as 40 is hard, almost hopeless, when they are driven to seek for reemployment. Statistics are in the brief. A few illustrations will be chosen from many there collected. In 1930, out of 224 American factories investigated, 71, or almost one-third, had fixed maximum hiring-age limits; in 4 plants the limit was under 40; in 41 it was under 46. In the other 153 plants there were no fixed limits, but in practice few were hired if they were over 50 years of age. With the loss of savings inevitable in periods of idleness, the fate of workers over 65, when thrown out of work, is little less than desperate. A recent study of the Social Security Board informs us that "one-fifth of the aged in the United States were receiving old-age assistance, emergency relief, institutional care, employment under the works program, or some other form of aid from public or private funds; two-fifths to one-half were dependent on friends and relatives; one-eighth had some income from earnings; and possibly one-sixth had some savings or property. Approximately 3 out of 4 persons 65 years or over were probably dependent wholly or partially on others for support.

Mr. Speaker, I sincerely urge my colleagues to sign the petition now on the Clerk's desk and bring this bill out on the floor for final passage before we adjourn in January 1941, preparatory for the Seventy-seventh Congress.

FOOD STAMP AND A. A. A.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Wallace, the Democratic candidate for Vice President, on his recent campaign visit to Portland, Oreg., my home city, falsely stated in a public mass meeting that I voted against the agricultural appropriation bill, which included the food-stamp plan. His exact statement, as given in the Oregonian of October 2, is as follows:

> May I remind you that Mr. ANGELL, Republican Congressman from this district, last spring voted against the agricultural appropriation bill, which included the food-stamp plan.

This statement is absolutely false. It seems unbelievable that Mr. Wallace did not know that it was false, because he was the head of the Department of Agriculture at the time and watched this legislation with the keenest of interest. He was especially interested because his agricultural program and the program of the President were opposed to each other.

The record vote on the food-stamp plan, as carried in the agricultural bill referred to, is roll call No. 104, appearing in in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 9, 1940, at page 5902, which shows that I voted against the motion of my distinguished friend from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], who led the New Deal forces in an endeavor to cut down the appropriation for food stamps from eighty-five millions to seventy-two millions, the seventy-two million being the approximate recommendation of the Budget and the President. My vote, together with many others from the Republican side and some Democrats, prevented the slash in the appropriation for the food stamps, as proposed by the President and the Budget. I also voted for the bill.

It seems apparent that the distinguished candidate for the Vice Presidency on the Democratic ticket is engaged in a little purging on his own behalf in the districts of Members of the Congress. In doing so, however, he does not seem to be circumscribed by being obliged to keep within the truth in attempting his purge.

The Democratic candidate for Vice President has no real honest reason to present to the people of my district why I should not be reelected and has therefore resorted to deliberately false statements to defeat me. I do not believe that the voters of my district will be deceived by the opponent of our beloved fellow citizen, Senator CHARLES L. MCNARY, candidate for Vice President on the Republican ticket. The people of my district will resent a carpetbagger coming into our district and attempting to regiment the voters of Oregon and telling them how to vote. Oregon does not believe in dictatorship. Such tactics may work in the districts of the machine bosses, Hague, Prendergrast, and Nash-Kelly, who are supporting Mr. Wallace, but not in Oregon.

NORTHWEST NATURAL RESOURCES AND INDUSTRIES

Mr. Speaker, I am particularly interested in the great Bonneville project situated on the Columbia River in Oregon and Washington. It not only is in my district, but I was born and raised almost within sound of the rushing waters of the Columbia River, the second largest river in the United States, and the largest in potential hydroelectric power. My parents emigrated to this far western region with ox teams and covered wagons when the West was a wilderness inhabited only by Indians, trappers, and missionaries. I have seen this land of opportunity transformed into thriving and prosperous cities, farms, and industries. I have through the years been intensely interested in the development of the Columbia River for navigation, flood control, and irrigation, and also for the utilization of its immense energy for hydroelectric power which down through the years has been allowed to waste itself in the flow of its mighty waters from the Canadian Rockies to the Pacific Ocean.

BONNEVILLE HYDROELECTRIC POWER

Mr. Speaker, there is one resource in which the Northwest stands above all other regions of the Nation—hydroelectric power. Our mountain peaks, clothed in eternal snow and ice and extensive forests, are the sources of mighty rivers, tributaries to the Columbia River whose steady flow descends from Canadian headwaters and cleaves the Cascade Range before pouring into the blue Pacific. This, Jefferson's Columbia, and its tributaries contain the Nation's greatest source of water power, about 44 percent of the potential hydroelectric power of all the streams of the continental United States.

If we were to translate the potential annual output of the Columbia River basin in terms of use, we would obtain the fabulous figure of 90,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours, an amount equal to the output of the entire electric utility industry of the United States in 1929. This is a wealth which, unlike many resources, cannot be depleted, and which will serve the Nation for ages to come.

Our population is not large—one-thirtieth of the Nation's total—but it has been increasing at a greater rate than the Nation as a whole. The rich soil, the abundant rainfall, the alluring promises of the Northwest are drawing many earnest families from less bountiful sections of our country seeking fresh opportunities in the land of great distances and great vistas. The opportunities they seek are not to be denied them because this is still a pioneering Nation. Our physical frontiers may not be as boundless as they were 50 years ago, but human ingenuity and the desire to wrest security, happiness, and an honest livelihood from our natural resources knows no boundaries. These western citizens will furnish the manpower for the development of these vast natural resources of the Northwest.

Mr. Speaker, important as electro industries may be to our normal everyday life, they become indispensable to a defense program. If it were not for the many ferro alloys and the alloy steels, our guns would bark a few times and then remain silent—worn out, incapable of guiding the shell of destruction to its appointed mark. Our battleships would be cardboard, our tanks could not resist the fire of the antitank artillery. Our airplanes would essay the hopeful but short-lived flight of the barnyard fowl.

Similarly, in the manufacture of munitions, the product of the electro industries ranks high. Brass for shell casings, the nitrates for explosives, the chlorines for gases, are all derived from the electric furnace and the electrolytic cell.

I need not emphasize or describe further because it is fact today that electric power, guided by the genius of the scientist and the engineer is one of the most important items in our national-defense industries. I would like to point out, however, that these electro industries require very large blocks of continuous and cheap electric power. They cannot use power whose unit price is much in excess of 3 mills per kilowatt-hour, nor whose availability is limited to portions of the year or of the day. These industries need power uninterruptedly throughout the year and throughout the day.

POWER FOR DEFENSE INDUSTRIES

Mr. Speaker, the Pacific Northwest States themselves, in spite of the relative infancy of their mining industry, contribute over two-thirds of the Nation's production of antimony, one-seventh of the copper, one third of the lead, one-seventh of the zinc, one-fourth of the mercury, almost half of the manganese ore, and one-seventh of the tungsten concentrates.

There are not many places in our great Nation where such power is available or can be made available in time to meet our present crisis. Rivers like the Columbia, of the type that insure continuous flow, are rare. That is why the development of the Columbia River offers paramount advantages to electro industries. With Bonneville's generators producing thousands of kilowatts, Grand Coulee about to make its share available, and T. V. A. in operation, the Nation need not fear the acute power shortages experienced during the last World War. The facilities in the Tennessee Valley are being expanded and will be ready in some 2 or 3 years. Today, the Columbia River offers plentiful power for industries whose products are needed now in our defense program. This fact must not be overlooked by industry and our defense agencies. Let me specify. The Bonneville project will have 100,000 kilowatts of firm power available at the beginning of next year, above and over the amounts now committed and needed for reserves. In August of next year, 200,000 kilowatts will be available from Bonneville and Grand Coulee, and in January 1942, 400,000 kilowatts. These quantities result from the wisdom of Congress in providing the funds and authorizations to advance generating facilities at these projects.

The Aluminum Co. of America's western plant on the Columbia River is now in operation and will make 30,000 tons of pig aluminum a year, 60,000,000 pounds for our airplanes, our transport facilities, and other national uses of the light metal. Other important industries can be established in the Pacific Northwest for operation within a year to 18 months which will provide for shipbuilding and repair, for our west coast aircraft industry, which represents 60 percent of the dollar volume business of the national industry, for ordnance and munitions to be used in the defense of the west coast and our Pacific outposts. They would obviate choking eastern industry and would provide not only desirable decentralization, but would also diversify our sources of supplies in times of emergency. By locating these industries in this area where raw products and power are already available or obtainable, we would also be adhering to another principle in national defense; namely, locating essential defense industries away from coast areas and thus less vulnerable to attack.

These industries could produce 155,000 tons of basic materials important not only to the normal economic life of the Pacific Northwest but to our national defense:

Produce	Power requirement	Annual production
	Kilowatts
Aluminum	65,000	30,000 tons of metal.
High-grade iron and steel	125,000	50,000 tons of metal.
Ferrochrome	30,000	20,000 tons of alloy.
Electrolytic zinc	15,000	35,000 tons of metal.
Nitrates	60,000	30,000 tons of fixed nitrogen.
Calcium carbide	10,000	20,000 tons of chemical.
Total (less Alcoa plant)	140,000	155,000 tons of products.

We cannot allow this great reservoir of power to remain without the necessary outlets to market.

BONNEVILLE APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate, sincerely, the support my colleagues in the House have given me in pleading for the Bonneville project. The following are the appropriations made for Bonneville for each of the four Congresses since it was begun.

Here is the record:

Seventy-third Congress	$32,440,700.00
Seventy-fourth Congress	11,868,000.00
Seventy-fifth Congress	25,432,272.85
Seventy-sixth Congress	39,042,903.45

The appropriations obtained in the Seventy-sixth Congress, in which I have served, are approximately 33 percent of the entire funds allocated and appropriated for the entire project since its inception.

PACIFIC NORTHWEST MINERALS AND THE NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. Speaker, I have discussed so far the benefits of which this Nation can take immediate advantage in the huge power resources of the Pacific Northwest. I would like now to examine briefly our mineral situation.

Strategic and critical minerals are found in the West. The deposits of chrome, of manganese, antimony, tungsten, have not been fully charted, and the Pacific Northwest has not as yet been examined with the care that it deserves. Some of the minerals now known in the Oregon country are of low grade, but are particularly susceptible to treatment by electric power. Metallic chrome and manganese can be obtained from Northwest ores, magnesium—that increasingly important light metal—can be produced from Northwest magnesite and magnesitic dolomites by the electric furnace, and apparently at a price level lower than that now available. Aluminum can be made from alunite, a western ore. As far as possible we should use our own raw materials for the production of aluminum instead of depending on foreign supplies of bauxite, or on our rapidly shrinking domestic bauxite deposits. And so the list could be expanded. This development and use of our own natural deposits depends on the efforts of the scientist in his laboratory and in the pilot plant, of the geologist and mining man, of the engineer who can translate these investigations into successful commercial operations.

Mr. Speaker, the Pacific Northwest can contribute immeasurably in this emergency toward national defense through the use of its deposits of strategic and critical minerals and other materials, and through the development of the electroindustries in the Columbia River area. In this area there are immense deposits of raw materials much of them wholly undeveloped. They will replace essential products now being imported and which may be blacked out at any time. Nowhere else in the Nation is there comparable potential and existing supplies of low-cost power. The Pacific Northwest asks that these powerful resources be enlisted in strengthening our national defense and in providing for our country's welfare in time of peace, in time of emergency, and in time of war which, pray God, may never come.

AMERICA IS CONFRONTED WITH A GRIM TASK

Mr. Speaker, America is confronted with a grim task. Whether or not we succeed in its solution may determine the course of history. The welfare and preservation of this Nation of ours indeed may turn upon the course we take. As I have pointed out, this problem is a double one. First of all, we must provide for our national defense—strong, effective, and impregnable—to beat off the attacks of any nation or combination of nations. Secondly, we must take up the battle from within and solve our social, economic, and political problems so that this great democracy will not collapse from its own weight. We must prove that our democracy can and will work. For 10 years we have failed miserably to bring success to our efforts. Now, with the added burden of a preparedness program which will likely exceed $25,000,000,000 in costs, even though no American gun is ever fired in the present World War, we face a task which will tax our resources and abilities to their utmost.

This task is on the doorstep of Congress today. It should not shirk its duty. It should not give way to political or partisan considerations. It should seek unity of purpose and devote itself to the task with the grim determination to win the battle of America and save our democracy.

Mr. Speaker, we should ever keep uppermost in our minds the determination of the American people that our soldiers shall not leave our own shores to wage war in the Old World and that we shall not leave a single stone unturned to provide that the ravages of war shall not be brought to America.

As I speak, ominous events are transpiring in the Far East. The triple alliance just concluded between Germany, Italy, and Japan raises new, critical problems in the Pacific. We must not permit America to become embroiled. Congress alone can keep us out. God grant that our conscript soldier boys shall not be sent to spill their blood in these distant lands.

Let us remember that there is one thing that has caused more heartache and misery in the world than any other, and that is war. The sole objective of war is destruction. Brute force is its mainspring; the dead and the maimed are its harvest. It not only bankrupts nations in their material welfare but it robs them as well of all spiritual values. It not only sets nation against nation but breeds in the hearts of men hate and the desire to destroy and tear down. It never builds, it never ennobles. Worst of all, its fruitage is the death and maiming of the young manhood of the country. It feeds not upon the old and the maimed but devours the flower of the youth of the country and leaves the living impoverished, sickened, and spiritually weakened for generations and casts its spell and its burdens upon generations yet unborn. Over 10,000,000 soldiers were killed or died in the World War and over 20,000,000 wounded. It is estimated that it cost the United States to date over $60,000,000,000 and the nations engaged in it over three hundred and thirty-eight billions. Nothing truer was ever said than the words of Washington in his Farewell Address that America should avoid entangling alliances. America should adopt as an unalterable policy that it shall never again engage in war upon a foreign soil, that our soldier boys, if fight they must, shall spill their lifeblood only on American soil in the defense of America and the liberties of our democracy which have made us a great nation.

Mr. Speaker, I agree with our colleague in the Senate, the Honorable JOSIAH W. BAILEY, when he said:

> But what I want and what the country demands is a united Congress, not a group of Republicans seeking advantage, not a group of new dealers defending and apologizing, not a group of Socialists scheming to gain power, not a group of Democrats trying to see how they will win the next election, but a group of American Senators and Members of the House of Representatives who have a sense of responsibility to their circumstances and who are willing to unite in the common task of putting employment and business and industry in this country upon a firm foundation.

Mr. Speaker, the sun of authority should set forever for the "rubber stamp" Congressmen. We need none of them. They have wrecked our economy. They will destroy our democracy. We need Americans in Congress, Democrats and Republicans alike, who put country above party, who stand on their own feet and do their own thinking. Who are not slaves to the beck and call of the Chief Executive and his coterie of bureaucrats, selected for each passing whim.

Mr. Speaker, the biggest business anywhere is the United States Government. It spends $8,000,000,000 annually. That is almost $24,000,000 daily, or nearly $1,000,000 an hour.

Nearly a tenth of the Nation's 130,000,000 citizens are dependent on it for a living.

It has over 1,000,000 civil employees on its pay roll. It has become the largest commercial banker, the largest single creditor of the railroads, one of the biggest producers and distributors of electric power, and the biggest holder of farm products. It is the biggest single factor in the building and construction industry. It regulates and to a large extent controls the securities markets and the banks. In addition, it competes with private business directly and indirectly on many other fronts. There is nothing like it anywhere else in the world.

Clearly, our Federal Government is a big business operation. To run such an enterprise the best trained and the best qualified business brains are none too good—especially at the present time, when the machine has bogged down. For 9 years our Federal Government has been unable to balance its outgo with its income by anywhere from one to four billion dollars annually.

"Must legislation" has no place in the American system. It can only thrive in a totalitarian state. If our democracy is to be preserved we must maintain intact our independent Congress, an unpacked Supreme Court, and an executive department freed from its maze of bureaucracy and usurped unconstitutional powers.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Roosevelt said, when a candidate for office, he would reduce the bureaus and employees 25 percent. The following table shows how well he has kept the promise, and reveals why our fiscal policy is on the rocks.

The following table gives the number of employees in the Federal Government beginning June 30, 1930. These figures indicate a steady increase, and it must stop. There has been an increase of 450,610 since the Roosevelt administration came in, an increase of nearly 100 percent.

THE BATTLE OF AMERICA

Mr. Speaker, my work here in the Nation's Capitol during the three sessions of the Seventy-sixth Congress, while the holocaust of total war has been sweeping over Europe, carrying to their doom the nations of the Old World, convinces me that our own supreme problem now is the battle of America. With feverish haste we have been building up our defenses to protect our Democracy against attacks from without. This being now provided for as far as lies within the power of the Congress, we must not overlook the danger from within. It has been well said: "We are in danger from without because we are in danger from within." We are witnessing here in Washington a gradual surrender of the rights of the people to a centralized control in the Executive. We see the growth of a huge bureaucracy with over a million employees, reaching out to control all the blood streams of our Government's life. We see an attempt to perpetuate itself. We note the loss of the independence of the Congress and its subordination to the will of the Executive. We see the lessening of the stamina of our people and their dependence upon the bounty of the Government. We see the loss of faith on the part of the leaders in power, in the abilities of our people to govern themselves, and in our democratic processes and our American way of life. In a word, we are gradually slipping down the road toward a totalitarian state where the people themselves no longer retain control over their own destinies, but look to and depend upon a super government over and above them with all power fixed in one centralized control. The American Government belongs to the American people by right of heritage. We the people must awaken from our lethargy and recapture our Government. We must halt the drift toward totalitarianism and reestablish our democracy and preserve the American way of life and free enterprise, maintained and carried forward by freemen. We do not want to be governed, we want to govern ourselves. We must foster and preserve an abiding faith in a free society and the spiritual and humanitarian values in our American life. Mere material success will not save our civilization.

"Great lives and great ages never grow from dead hopes." Life itself is a great adventure. America was built from the dreams of our torchbearers. Columbus led the way when he followed a dream across an uncharted ocean to find this New World; faith pushed our frontiers across a continent, over plains and mountain ranges to the Pacific; faith, vision, and leadership will continue to take America on new adventures into the world of prosperity and happiness. May we have the vision to follow such leadership in this grave crisis confronting America.

God, give us men! A time like this demands
Strong minds, great hearts, true faith, and ready hands;
Men whom the lust for office does not kill;
  Men whom the spoils of office cannot buy;
Men who possess opinions and a will;
  Men who have honor; men who will not lie;
Men who can stand before a demagog
  And damn his treacherous flatteries without winking;
Tall men, sun-crowned; men who live above the fog
  In public duty and in private thinking.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO]?

There was no objection.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, we are living in a dark hour in the history of the world. There is war and rumors of war. Human freedom seems to be disappearing from the face of the earth. The Republic of the United States is the last refuge and the last citadel of human freedom.

Mr. Speaker, within our borders exist two documents that symbolize the great principles of liberty to mankind. They stand as the hope of the world. In order to renew and revive interests and to make them better known to our people, I have introduced a bill providing that the Post Office Department of this Government shall display in a prominent place in every post office in the United States a copy of the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, we have all listened with a great deal of interest to the wonderful speech on Thomas Jefferson delivered by our colleague the very distinguished and able gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHANNON]. I want to discuss briefly Jefferson's position on an important matter which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHANNON] did not mention.

Mr. Speaker, President Franklin D. Roosevelt has drafted himself for a third term after indicating that no other living American is qualified for the Presidency.

Mr. Speaker, our first President, George Washington, declined a third term and thereby set the precedent of a two-term limit for President.

Mr. Speaker, President Andrew Jackson said:

It would seem advisable to limit the service of the Chief Magistrate to a single term of either 4 or 6 years.

Mr. Speaker, Boss Frank Hague, mayor of Jersey City, N. J., a main cog in the New Deal political machine, said:

Absolutely 100 percent for a third term for Mr. Roosevelt.

Mr. Speaker, President Woodrow Wilson said:

It is intolerable that any President should be permitted to determine who should succeed him—himself or another.

Mr. Speaker, the New Deal No. 1 hatchet man, Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior, said:

But, after all, what is a "sacred tradition" among friends?

Mr. Speaker, Boss Edward J. Kelly, mayor of Chicago, Ill., a main cog in the New Deal political machine, said:

I suppose I was one of the very first to go on record for a third term.

Mr. Speaker, Thomas Jefferson said:

Should a President consent to be a candidate for a third election, I trust he would be rejected on this demonstration of ambitious views.

Mr. Speaker, I sincerely hope that the very distinguished gentleman from Missouri, and all of our countrymen who adhere to the principles of the noble and patriotic statesman, Thomas Jefferson, will, on this November 5 election day, oppose President Roosevelt for a third term.

Mr. Speaker, they will then be faithful to the memory of Thomas Jefferson, who said:

Should a President consent to be a candidate for a third election, I trust he would be rejected on this demonstration of ambitious views.

[Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, on this November 5 election day the third-term issue will be fought out. I shall take my position with George Washington, Andrew Jackson, Woodrow Wilson, and Thomas Jefferson and against Franklin D. Roosevelt, Harold L. Ickes, Boss Kelly, and Boss Hague. [Applause.]

A FARMSIDE CHAT ON "THE MIRAGE OF MR. WALLACE"

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD and include therein one page from the hearings of the Committee on Agriculture.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, the opposition seems to be very critical of the manner in which our Republican candidate with Hoosier accent pronounces his words and openly criticizes his grammar. The criticism I have of the New Dealers is not their grammar or pronunciation but their utter disregard for simple arithmetic and their total lack of sense of proportion.

About the first question I asked Mr. Wallace before the Agricultural Committee was why the New Deal added the farm-subsidy payments to the national farm income, as shown in the hearing, page 603, serial A, February 21–March 22, 1939, as follows:

Mr. MURRAY. Not as a matter of politics, but purely as agricultural economics, Mr. Secretary, I would like to ask you this question: Why do you think there should be included in the total national farm income the benefit and other payments received from the Government by farmers? I do not see how that could be figured as farm income any more than when I go to figure my income tax I would include a loan of $1,000 I made from a bank. That surely would not be income. But in the case of the income shown by this last year I think it would be of the same line of reasoning if you add to the total income of farmers the subsidies which they received, as long as we have not balanced the Budget and as long as that remains a part of the public debt, and the rural people themselves will surely have to pay their share of the public debt.

Secretary WALLACE. Undoubtedly the Government's payments are properly a part of farm income. The taxes the farmer has to pay are local property taxes rather than income taxes. I think there has been a great deal of unnecessary worry on the part of farmers concerning statements that have been made that led them to think they are going to have to pay the taxes that pay the national debt. As a matter of fact, in the case of about 90 percent of the farmers the only taxes they will pay will be property, county, or State taxes, in the form of ad valorem taxes.

Mr. MURRAY. In the final analysis they will have to pay their pro rata part of the tax, however, will they not?

Secretary WALLACE. Well, I do not think that will amount to much.

Mr. MURRAY. Thank you.

Mr. Wallace may think the farmers will not pay their share of the public debt, but I cannot believe it. I think every living human being is going to contribute toward paying the public debt whether it is the rich, the poor, or the average individual, and this includes the widow's mite.

If the New Deal has increased the public debt $27,000,000,000, the farm people will surely have to repay over $6,000,000,000 with interest, as they represent about 25 percent of the people. Mr. Wallace may believe and may try to make this country believe that because a farmer does not pay any income tax he is not paying any taxes toward the national debt, but he surely went to a different school than most of us in order to come to this kind of a conclusion.

The New Deal has placed an invisible mortgage of $1,000 on every farm in America and other property in proportion. The sooner we make 2 and 2 equal 4, talk, think, and act accordingly, the sooner we will quit the New Deal fallacies.

I am sure Mr. Willkie's grammar excels Mr. Wallace's arithmetic.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 10, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Heavenly Father, we pray that the divine voice may penetrate the holy of holies of our breasts saying, "Man shall not live by bread alone." Today put us in possession of our best thoughts and holiest feelings. He who brings some new thought of the Christ, quickening the soul with holy love, opens within a well of water springing up into everlasting life. O God, give us to understand that life is not a dowry to be selfishly squandered, but a stewardship to be faithfully discharged; self-care for the good of others is good and right. Blessed Lord, reveal to us more and more the glory and the redeeming power of our Lord. In our vision let us see the withered hand with eager, nervous, trembling finger thrust forward to touch the hem of His garment and the light of health and peace flooding one sad life. Oh, what a breaking of day over the dark inner world of that confused and disappointed one; O Master, touch our hearts and minds and lead us in the way everlasting. In Thy Holy Name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, D. C., October 3, 1940.

The Honorable SAM RAYBURN,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: With reference to House Resolution 595, expressing the sympathy of the House of Representatives on the tragic death of His Excellency Gen. Jose Felix Estigarribia, of Para-

As an enclosure to this despatch the Legation has forwarded the text and a translation of a note received from the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Paraguay expressing the appreciation of the Government of Paraguay for this tribute by the House of Representatives.

MR. MINISTER: I take pleasure in addressing Your Excellency to acknowledge the receipt of your note No. 42, dated the 11th instant, in which you inform me, in compliance with instructions received from your Government, that on the 9th of this month the House of Representatives of your friendly Nation adopted the following resolutions:

I beg Your Excellency to communicate to the Presidency of the honorable House of Representatives of the United States of America the deep gratitude of my Government, which appreciates in all its high significance the tribute that the Members of the House of Representatives of our friendly sister nation resolved to accord in homage to the memory of His Excellency Marshal Estigarribia, whose personal feelings of kind sentiment and friendship toward the United States were well known.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, after the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table, I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. D'ALESANDRO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address I made over a national broadcasting station on national defense.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, all Members of the House at different times are deluged with mail on various subjects of importance pertaining to matters our constituents back home are interested in. Usually we are able to give them a suitable and deserved answer. However, I am up against something at the present time and concerning which I need some help. I want to read you a post card, almost 200 of the same kind having been received in one mail this morning:

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I want to be a captain. Please use your influence to get me this commission.

Each one is signed by a constituent of mine, and I do not know how to answer it. [Laughter and applause.]

I might call the War Department and ask them if they would care to offer any suggestions as to how such communications might be answered. However, the War Department—and I place no blame on their shoulders—are not in a position to give a Member of Congress certain information.

As a member of the House Military Affairs Committee, I, as well as other members, recently asked for data as to how much aid we were furnishing to England, such as destroyers, airplanes, machine guns, rifles, and other materials of war. My constituents want such information and should have it. I was told such data was not available, following orders coming to the War Department from the White House. In other words, it appears to me that we have now arrived at the place where a Member of Congress is precluded by the White House from obtaining essential information which any Member of this House is entitled to. Is the sole purpose of Congress now to be only one of making appropriations and to leave everything to the White House?

As one Member of this body, I deplore such procedure and expect to do everything within my power to see that a change of policy is brought about.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a telegram, and also to correct the RECORDS of October 8 and October 9, in two particulars.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Speaker, on the menus for the House and Senate restaurants today will be, among other foods, some east Texas yams or sweetpotatoes which have just been shipped direct to me by the officials of the East Texas Yamboree at Gilmer, Tex. The East Texas Yamboree is an annual event held at Gilmer, the county seat of Upshur County, my home county, incidentally. The sixth annual yamboree is to be held the 24th, 25th, and 26th of this month. I hereby extend to all of you a cordial invitation to attend. In this Nation there are many fairs, but only one yamboree. Its purpose is to give appropriate recognition to the yam or sweetpotato as one of the primary foods of man, and to call attention to and emphasize the difference in an ordinary or average yam and a first-rate yam. There is a great difference.

At Gilmer, Tex., the home of the east Texas yam and the capital of all yamdom, one of the very few sweetpotato experiment stations in the Nation is located. The work there is carried on by funds made available from the State treasury and from the Federal treasury. The work of the station, we feel, is highly commendable and conducive to bettering the quality of the sweetpotato as an edible food. Furthermore, another objective of the experiment station is to develop a sweetpotato containing sufficient starch to make profitable the operation of sweetpotato starch plants on a commercial basis.

You Members have heard of Texas as a great cotton-growing State; as a great wheat-producing State, and as a great oil-producing State. I desire to acquaint you with the fact that east Texas has brought another honor and distinction to Texas in that the finest yams or sweetpotatoes of the Nation are grown there.

The managers of the House and Senate restaurants have been kind to me in permitting the farmers of east Texas and the officials of the East Texas Yamboree to demonstrate the excellence of our highly palatable food. When you sample, today, the east Texas yam, as I hope you will do when you lunch, you, too, will thank the farmers of east Texas and the officials of the East Texas Yamboree for remembering Capitol Hill with some fresh yams or sweetpotatoes from east Texas.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I had some time on yesterday which I did not use because of a cold. I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to address the House next Tuesday for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KNUTSON asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the Appendix of the RECORD the legislative record of the Honorable HAMILTON FISH.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

By unanimous consent Mr. PITTENGER was granted permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include a letter from a county judge in Oregon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

NO QUORUM

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order at this time.

MOTIEJUS BUZAS AND BERNICE BUZAS—VETO MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States, which was read by the Clerk:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith without my approval the bill H. R. 6409, which would provide for the cancelation of deportation proceedings against Motiejus Buzas and Bernice Buzas, his wife, but would at the same time preclude them from becoming eligible to naturalization by virtue of their residence in this country.

It appears that Motiejus Buzas is a native of Russia, while his wife, Bernice Buzas, is a native of Lithuania. Both of them were originally citizens of Lithuania. Many years ago they immigrated to Canada and were naturalized in that country. About 15 years ago they entered the United States from Canada as visitors.

The legislation under consideration appears anomalous. It proposes to permit these aliens to continue their residence in the United States, but would bar them from becoming citizens of this country, even though they do not belong to a race ineligible for naturalization. It is highly questionable whether it is in the best interests of the United States to place persons living in this country in such a peculiar status as would be accorded to the beneficiaries of the instant bill.

In view of these considerations, I am constrained to return the bill without my approval.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, October 10, 1940.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the bill and message be referred to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization and ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

VETO MESSAGE—LOUIS D. FRIEDMAN

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following further veto message from the President of the United States, which was read by the Clerk:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith without my approval a bill, H. R. 7179, which would permit Louis D. Friedman to become a naturalized citizen of the United States merely upon the taking of the oath of allegiance and without complying with any of the requirements of the naturalization laws.

It appears that Mr. Louis D. Friedman was a native-born citizen of the United States but for business reasons became a naturalized citizen of Canada. He now desires to resume his American citizenship.

No reason is discernible why a special dispensation should be accorded him from compliance with all of the requirements of the naturalization laws.

Resort to naturalization by private act should be permitted, if at all, only in unusual and unique situations.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, October 10, 1940.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the message and bill be referred to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization and ordered to be printed.

Mr. RANKIN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. There is no unanimous-consent request.

Mr. RANKIN. This bill can only be referred to a committee by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. No; a motion is in order.

Mr. RANKIN. I understand; but it is privileged. Any Member can demand a vote on this at any time, on a President's veto.

The SPEAKER. A motion to refer to a committee takes preference, of course.

Mr. RANKIN. I did not think a motion to refer to a committee was privileged. My understanding is that any Member can demand a vote at any time.

The SPEAKER. A motion to refer at this stage is a privileged motion and has preference, under the rule.

Mr. RANKIN. It will have to be voted on.

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. RANKIN. I rise in opposition to the motion. I wish to make a statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recognized.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I expect to vote to sustain the veto. This just shows the kind of legislation that has been slipped through here with reference to immigration. This bill ought never to have passed the House. From this time on I hope that every Member will carefully scrutinize all legislation that is brought in here touching the question of immigration. I shall certainly do so. I do not propose to have our immigration laws broken down piecemeal in any such way if I can prevent it.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask for recognition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recognized.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, for fear that this may not be understood, I do not know that I understand this veto message exactly, but I think we are likely to be misled by it. As I understand it, here is the situation: We know there are many on this side and on the other side as well who scrutinize these bills carefully. Those who have the responsibility to object at this desk and at that desk over there have evolved a pretty good plan. They add an amendment to these bills providing that if we leave them here, that then they cannot become citizens. That is what I think the gentleman from Mississippi would approve. That is what I would approve. That is what the House did approve. The President is finding fault with that in his veto message. He did not want us to do that. He wanted us to let those people in as they were, and stay in here.

Mr. RANKIN. It seems that Congress attempted to let a man become a citizen by merely taking the oath of allegiance, after he had left the United States and become a citizen of another country.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. No. I think the gentleman will find in this veto message the fine hand of Mme. Perkins.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman from Ohio has this bill confused with the first veto message.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes; I thought you were still talking about the first veto. My attention was diverted for a moment. I am sorry to have said what I said, and, of course, it does not apply to this second veto message.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for recognition on this motion and I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entitled to the floor, if he desires it.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, after listening to the learned discussion between the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] and a few more gentlemen, I am more than satisfied that they do not know what they are talking about.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No. Let me proceed. I always had a great admiration for the gentleman from Ohio. He generally knows the immigration law. The gentleman from Mississippi on the other hand seems to have a general principle to oppose all immigration matters. If it was not an immigration bill he would not have paid any attention to it.

The objectors, in my opinion, are conscientious and usually do a good job. They go over every bill with a fine comb and of the many bills introduced in the committee less than 1 percent is voted out. Out of the 600 or 700 bills the committee has had before it only 1 or 2 percent have been voted out. The committee is pretty careful, too, as you can see from this record.

So it gets right down to the question of alien-baiting and nothing more, and everyone who has a dislike of aliens is going to get up and have something to say. What does the President do? My good friend, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN], has a great knowledge on the subject of public utilities, and I have great admiration for the work he has done in that field, but his knowledge does not extend to the field of immigration. The bill the gentleman talks about concerns a man who was born in this country, a native of the United States, whose wife is an American citizen, whose family traditions go back for many years. He got into Canada and somebody over there bamboozled him, not only taking his money away from him, but making him take out citizenship in Canada. Thereby he forfeited his citizenship in his mother country, the United States. This bill would simply restore to him citizenship in his mother country. He was born here. That is all there is to the bill. It has nothing to do with aliens at all. This man is an American by birth, and his family have been Americans for years before him, but because of certain conditions under which someone in a business transaction cheated him in Canada, he lost both his money and his citizenship. The President vetoed the bill, saying that this man ought to recover his citizenship through the regular naturalization channels. I do not find any fault with it. I do not get hot about all these things.

The other question presented by the veto message is very simple, and that is the criticism that if the committee saw fit to allow these people to stay here, they should let them become citizens. That is the objection of the President. In other words, the committee did not see fit to allow them to pursue to citizenship. They only allowed them to stay in this country.

Some of the criticism possibly should be directed to the committee which adds amendments to these bills letting the people stay in the country but prohibiting them from becoming citizens. That is what the President objects to, and all these threats "from here on" and "hereafter" are needless. The committee watches these bills very closely. We table more bills in the committee than we report out. You may rest assured that when one of these bills does reach the floor it must be a meritorious and genuine bill.

I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio if he desires to ask me a question.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I will get my own time.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. RICH. As I understand it, the gentleman, as a member of the committee, does not approve the veto.

Mr. RANKIN. That is alien bating, according to his statement.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I approve of the President's stand in this instance. He may be more nearly right than the committee. I want the bill sent back to the committee and opportunity given the committee to study the bill further. We may have done something we should not have done. I do not disagree with the President or have any criticism of his veto one way or the other.

Mr. RICH. Does the gentleman mean to say that he agrees with the President over anything the President does?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I agree in the proposition that the President is justified in exercising that which is his as a matter of right, the power of veto. He has exercised this right in this instance, and my contention is that the bill should be referred back to the committee for further consideration; that is all.

Mr. RICH. That is all right if you want to consider it, but what does the gentleman think about throwing down the bars to the admission of aliens into this country?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. We have put up the bars. No one is coming into this country unless under proper provision of law. There is nothing to this hue and cry about letting down the bars, I may say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Is the gentleman interested in letting foreigners in in great numbers to take the jobs of our American laborers?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No; I am interested in protecting this country.

Mr. RICH. That is what we want to do; keep the foreigners out unless they have business here. We do not need 200,000, a million, or 5,000,000 additional aliens at this time to become citizens.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Keep them out; but do not persecute the minorities within our gates. Do not do that, because that is not a charitable thing for any country to do. We must be honest and fair to the people now in our country. Also, let us not make mountains out of molehills. Do not say we are letting down the bars, because we have raised the bars. No one is coming into this country other than by due process of law.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for one further question?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I will.

Mr. RICH. I have a list here of the names of 700 people who are in this country today who should not be here, people who have committed perjury, forgery, and other crimes, people who should be deported; yet Mme. Perkins, Secretary of Labor, has let them remain here by a loophole in her interpretation of the law. We ought to send them out. Why does not the gentleman try to use his good offices and the influence of his committee to get Mme. Perkins to hike out of this country these 700 people who have committed crimes? They have no rights here, under our law.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MASON. Let me answer the gentleman from Pennsylvania by saying that no committee of this House, whether it is the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization or any other, can see to it that the executive departments enforce the law. That is a statement that should not be made. That is not the purpose of our committee.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. A lot of statements are made that should not be made. May I say that I am not in favor of keeping criminals in this country. So far as the committee is concerned, they have done everything in the line of legislation to bring about deportation of criminals. You must bear in mind that there are a number of men and women who came to this country when they were children, they became criminals during the time that they stayed in the United States, and they have no country to go back to. Where are you going to send them? I do not know, and I do not care. But why blame Mme. Perkins and everybody else? We know we do not want them. They are undesirables. You draw a bill to get rid of them, and I will be glad to support.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. RICH. What can we do to get Mme. Perkins to deport the 700 criminal aliens that are in this country and get them out of here? They have no right here under the law; they are a menace to our civilization, to our form of government, to our good people.

Mr. SCHULTE. What has that to do with this particular bill?

Mr. RICH. I am asking this gentleman. He is the father of immigration legislation. I would like to get his assistance to have Mme. Perkins do her duty.

Mr. MASON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MASON. I pointed out on the floor of this House when we had the bill before us to transfer the Immigration and Naturalization Bureau from the Department of Labor to the Department of Justice what should be done so far as Mme. Perkins is concerned. That is the answer to the gentleman's question.

Mr. RICH. We ought to impeach Mme. Perkins. That is the thing to do. But it cannot be done with a big New Deal Congress; that I know.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to get excited about nothing. That is practically what we are discussing now. The Committee on Immigration does not mind a veto of the President. He may be right, and if we find he is right we will sustain him. If we find he is wrong, we will report the bill back to the House for its action and consideration.

Mr. GEYER of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. GEYER of California. Much has been said rather impugning certain things that the committee has done. It has been stated that the committee is probably too lenient. May I say that I have had bills before that committee involving definite hardship cases on American citizens, and I think the committee is entirely too stringent. I think there ought to be a little mercy tempered along with justice. The gentleman from Pennsylvania should worry about balancing the Budget and should worry about where we are going to get the money.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the membership of the House that I have tried the best way I can, as chairman of that committee, to work with every Member of this House. I agree with my good friend from California that sometimes the committee is too strict, sometimes we may be a little lenient, but on the whole I think we are a strict committee. We have voted out hardly any bills at all and those that have been objected to we have gone over with a fine comb. It is not our duty to excuse anybody for violations of the law. We hope we can get rid of these criminals sooner or later if we can find a country to send them to. May I say that we should be patient and reasonable. Let us look at it in the proper American light and not from any other point of view.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for recognition.

The SPEAKER. The time is in control of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN]. Has the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] yielded the floor?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield for a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The gentleman from Mississippi asked me to give him time, which I was good enough to do. I said I would be glad to do it. Had I known I was going to surrender the floor by that, I would not have done it. I did not surrender it. I simply yielded back the balance of my time, and the RECORD will bear me out.

The SPEAKER. The Chair distinctly asked the gentleman from New York if he yielded the floor, and his answer was in the affirmative.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I did not understand.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized for 1 hour, if he desires that time.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield further. I do not expect to speak an hour. You should applaud that statement. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] made the statement that my opposition to this measure was alien baiting. It sounds very much like American baiting to me for him to so accuse real Americans in this House who are trying to protect our immigration laws.

This particular man, whoever he is, I never heard of. I do not know his name, his race, his color, or nationality, except that he was at one time a citizen of the United States. I am tired of citizens of the United States going to other countries to make trouble for us. He went to Canada; he was not satisfied to remain an American citizen, which showed that he evidently regarded his American citizenship rather lightly. Real Americans do not very often change their citizenship. He took out citizenship papers in Canada and became a citizen of that country. Then when he got dissatisfied about something, probably saw the war coming, he comes back to get them to bring in this bill—that evidently passed when I was not on the floor; at least, I do not remember it—to permit him to become a citizen by simply taking the oath of allegiance. President Roosevelt vetoed the bill and I am in favor of sustaining his veto. I want to vote on the veto now.

I am opposed to permitting the Congress of the United States to be used to break down our immigration laws by passing legislation of this kind.

Who are your "fifth columnists" in America? They are these people who have crept in here, invariably in violation of law. Who are the people who have forged passports and stirred up trouble for us here and abroad? They are not the real Americans, they are those who trespass upon our generosity in this way.

I opposed the passage of the law to permit an American woman who married a foreigner to retain her citizenship in this country while also retaining her citizenship in the country of her husband. I am opposed to dual citizenship.

Let me say to the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. GEYER] that while he is attempting to correct all the imaginary ills of the South by attacking our election laws, he has a problem confronting the people of California today more serious than any we have in the Southern States.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. When I get through telling the gentleman what he is up against.

I was for many years a member of the Committee on the Territories. Three years ago they sent me to Hawaii on a committee of Senators and Members of the House to investigate the proposition of making Hawaii a State. I brought out before that committee the fact that the Japanese in Hawaii have what they call dual citizenship. When a Japanese child is born, they register it with the Japanese consul and immediately that name is sent to Tokyo, Japan. That child is then registered as a citizen of Japan and is so regarded, yet he claims citizenship in this country and the protection of our flag. He can go to Japan and own land and enjoy all the other privileges a native-born Japanese can enjoy, but one who renounces Japanese citizenship and says, "I am an American citizen only," cannot go to Japan and own land or enjoy the privileges of Japanese citizenship.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICHOLS. Also, when that child is registered with the Japanese Government at Tokyo, he cannot of his own volition relinquish his citizenship rights in Japan. That request must be made by his parents before his citizenship can be relinquished.

Mr. RANKIN. With the result that while we were in Hawaii there were Hawaiian-born Japanese who had voted in the election the year before who were being drafted into the Japanese Army to go to Japan and engage in the war against China.

Now I am coming to the gentleman from California [Mr. GEYER]. I had a letter from California recently on this same subject, wherein they said there are 25,000 of these California-born Japanese who are registered in Japan the same way and who are claiming dual citizenship. While they can vote in this country, they can go to Japan and enjoy all the privileges and all the benefits of a Japanese citizen.

Let me say to the gentleman from California [Mr. GEYER] that while he is attacking the South about the Negro question, about something he knows nothing about, I want to tell him what a Negro said down there some time ago. A man asked him, "What do you think about our foreign relations?" He said, "Cap'n, I jes ain't got no fureign relations."

You let the Negroes and the white people in the South alone and take care of the Japanese question in California, because you have a problem on your hands compared to which our race problem in the South will likely shrink to insignificance in the years to come.

Not only that, but Hawaii is a great outpost of this country. There are numerous spies in those islands. You talk about "fifth columnists." There never has been such a well-organized "fifth column" as we find in the Hawaiian Islands and as probably exists among the same people on the Pacific coast.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. SCHULTE. Is it not a fact that some time ago I brought out on the floor of this House the information that a "fifth column" did exist in Hawaii and that the Japanese down there who are blessed with dual citizenship could serve in the Army of Japan, in the Marine Corps, and also in the infantry; that they did serve there, and then came back to the Hawaiian Islands and were still American citizens?

Mr. RANKIN. Certainly, that is what I was referring to awhile ago. They were drafting them into the Japanese Army when we were in Hawaii. I do not care who likes it or who does not like it; I am tired of "fifth columnists" coming in here in any guise whatsoever. I am tired of the Communists, I am tired of the Fascists or the Nazis or the Japs coming into my country and undermining it in any way whatsoever. I am for deporting every human being who is not a real—I will not say a 100 percent—American, for they would jump up and object to that, but anybody who even claims a dual citizenship. If he cannot surrender his citizenship in a foreign country, let him go to that foreign country and stay there.

I know we have had an infiltration of these Communists, and they boasted they were going to overthrow this Government. Well, we are prepared to take care of them.

I have heard the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] abuse the Dies committee. I do not hesitate to say that the committee of which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] is the chairman has rendered a great service to the American people by bringing to light those insidious and damnable influences that were threatening to undermine and destroy the American Republic and the American way of life. [Applause.]

I am not baiting any foreigners, but I am getting tired of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] coming on the floor and baiting us Americans for trying to keep these alien elements out who have no right to be here.

Mr. Speaker, what we need is to build more real, strong Americanism. Let them begin by speaking American at home and quit this silly prattle of foreign or alien languages in their homes. Let them teach their children to speak the language of the American people to begin with. Then, perhaps, you will not feel so offended when old-line Americans rise in this House and demand that we protect our country against such infiltrations as we have seen in the last few years.

I went through this battle in 1924 when we were passing the immigration law. We heard the same cry "alien baiting," because, forsooth, we were trying to pass a law to protect America, and if it had been properly enforced from 1924 to the present time, you would not have had all this communistic infiltration you have had for the last few years.

We are spending money to protect America. We are drafting the youth of this land to build up our defenses. To shed their blood, if necessary, to protect our institutions and preserve our way of life. We will exhaust the manhood and the resources of America, if necessary, in order to protect our Nation, to protect our form of government, and to protect our way of life. We mean to make America strong, and in order to do it we are going to expel the wormwood; we are going to wipe out those insidious, poisonous elements that threaten the very foundations of our institutions. They can form all the combinations of foreign powers they want to; they can form all the unholy alliances they please, but the American spirit, the spirit that your people and mine manifested from 1861 to 1865, when they met and grappled with each other upon the field of battle—your people fighting to prevent the spread of slavery and to save the Union, mine fighting to preserve justice and to guarantee that the white man's civilization would not perish from the earth—you and I, their sons and their nephews and their grandsons, are going to see to it that America is not destroyed by this alien element that presumes to call us alien baiters because we want to protect American institutions. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, this is a question that goes pretty deep with me, and I resent a Member getting on the floor of the House and challenging the patriotism of the Members who are trying to preserve and protect the integrity of American institutions by keeping out those elements that have done more to undermine and destroy it than any other one thing that has ever crept in since that flag first floated above the American armies during the Revolutionary War. We are here to speak for ourselves and our children. We are going to protect America, if it takes the last man and the last dollar. We are going to pass on down to our children a government, a nation, a country in which they will be proud to live; and before an alien shall become a citizen, he must come here and comply with the laws of the land.

Foreign powers may send all the forces of evil against us, but we will meet them as they come. We will meet them not at the water's edge, but before they can reach American shores, and we will drive back and destroy every enemy of this country that attempts to invade it; but we must not permit a continuation of this infiltration of those elements that come here boasting that they are going to overthrow our Government and destroy our way of life.

If I might borrow the words of a great Englishman, an apostrophe to his country, revise and appropriate them to my own, I would say that all past acclaims our future, Washington's sword and Jefferson's hand, the Nation's trust, the people's faith in this, our cherished and chainless land. Bear us witness, come the world against her, America yet shall stand. [Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR and Mr. RICH rose.

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Montana for a question.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I am looking for information as to how to vote upon what is before the House.

Mr. RANKIN. It is a motion to refer the President's veto to the committee.

Mr. O'CONNOR. What circumstances are there about this case that are unusual that would justify the House in proceeding with special legislation? What are the unusual circumstances about it?

Mr. RANKIN. None at all; I am for sustaining the President's veto.

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is what I am trying to find out.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time and yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] has entertained us with a very brilliant speech. I daresay we all agree with everything he has said. At least, I know I do.

I took this time to bring to your attention one thing that I think is very appropriate at this time. I agree with the President's veto in this matter. It illustrates what I have been trying to say on this floor for years. I maintain that these private immigration bills and bills to admit immigrants into this country should not be considered in the House and should not be adopted. These are not proper matters of legislation. Why do I say that this is not the place to consider this sort of a bill? For many years after I came to this House, and that will be many more after the gentleman from Mississippi and others came to this House, no such bills were ever considered.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. No; I would prefer not to just now.

I remember the first bill that was ever considered in this House. At least I think it was the first. It was considered under circumstances that really excited the whole House on both sides of the aisle. We had a tremendous contest here. It was not a political contest. It was just a contest as to whether we would admit a special individual through the medium of a special bill. That was waged along about 1928. Up until that time no private bills of this kind were being considered.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. No. I prefer to proceed.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I want to correct you.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman cannot correct me because I am telling what is true, and I know what I am talking about. Later I will yield to the gentleman, but the gentleman ought not to break in when I have told him that I would not yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes; I yield if it is appropriate to my remarks at this time.

Mr. RANKIN. Let me say that I agree with the gentleman thoroughly; that we ought not pass these special bills.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Let me tell you how this matter first came into Congress. There was a wealthy man from up in New England. He was a soldier in the World War. He courted a German girl while in Germany as a soldier and he wanted to marry her. He went to the American consuls in that country to see whether, if he did marry her, he could bring her into this country. They investigated her and found she had been picked up a time or two for shoplifting in stores. In other words, she had a criminal record. She was for that reason not admissible. He said, "I will marry her and bring her in anyway." He had plenty of money and he started proceedings down here in our court, and the proceedings went to the Supreme Court of the United States, trying to compel the Secretary of State to issue proper papers that would admit her. The Supreme Court spoke on it and refused it. This high court recognized a principle which we should all know and be proud of. The Court said, in effect, that no alien not yet in America has any rights in our courts. They cannot invoke jurisdiction of our courts. Why should the Supreme Court ever have been called upon to speak on something like that? You talk about an alien baiter, if the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] was here at that time, he probably voted for that procedure, because he has always been wrong. I admire his consistency. He has consistently been wrong always.

What did we do in that case? Here is what we had to do: After that case went to the Supreme Court that man started in the Congress of the United States to have a special bill passed. He got attorneys and they pedalled around from place to place and office to office, and they introduced bill after bill. This was kept up for years. Finally a bill was considered and passed. But how did it come to pass? They introduced a bill with provisions that were difficult for some Members to oppose. For instance, they knew that legislation favorable to an American soldier would be popular. You know an American soldier was fresher cut of the war then than he is now. His popularity was almost irresistible, and it should have been. The bill provided that if an American soldier should marry an alien girl and want to bring her in, that girl ought to be allowed to come in even if she had been found guilty of committing a crime, if the crime she had committed was only a misdemeanor, and if she had committed it before she was 21 years of age. In other words, they built up a special bill for that one case. They said, "If he is a United States soldier and if he married a girl who, although she did have a criminal record, if the record was a misdemeanor and if she committed the crime before she was 21 years old, she should be permitted to come into this country." That bill carried by a few votes after a terrifically hard fight. The vote on that bill was responsible in a great measure for the defeat of a strong Democrat who opposed it vigorously because the gentleman interested had wealthy relatives in his district, and it contributed to the defeat of a strong man on the Republican side who supported the measure, for there were many influential men in his district who were opposed to the admission of people that way. You will be interested to know that in a few years after this bill was passed the bill was repealed with a large number of other bills that were considered as useless and inapplicable. That bill was a special bill under the guise of a general bill. It should never have been passed.

It was passed for just that one individual. I said then, and I say now, that we ought not to have this class of legislation. Why? Let me tell you why. In most cases only the rich or the crooked can press them successfully. You talk about somebody being an alien baiter. I have aliens in my section. We have them everywhere. God knows many fine honest aliens in this country have a hard time, but the worst enemy of the alien is the crooked lawyer and the crooked would-be friend who take advantage of them. Those fellows bring in these poor aliens—thousands of them have been induced to come to Cuba by crooks, and they have been robbed there and thrown into the ocean after their money had been taken away from them—poor, deluded individuals who thought they were on their way to America after they had paid their money to a bunch of smugglers. They have been kicked around. The worst enemy they have is the fellow who practices upon their ignorance and takes advantage of them. That ought not to obtain. I am a friend to them. I have been the author of much of the salutary legislation since 1924, I am proud to say, without boasting—that sort of legislation that reunited families and provided that they should be given preference within the quotas, and many other advantages. I have never said or done anything derogatory of an honest law-abiding alien, but I am against these crooks who lie to get here and then commence to tear down our country.

I say again to you that this Congress is no place to consider these private cases. Why? Because these unscrupulous fellows come in and press their cases on the ground of some great hardship, when there is not a single individual bill that I have ever seen that has not the element of fraud in it. The fraudulent press their cases when the deserving who are usually timid do not press their cases, Here is what we ought to do in Congress, everybody ought to join together to do it. Last year we passed a law that provides for the setting up a court down here made up of someone from the Department of Labor, the Department of Justice, and the Department of State. Set up a court of three men and let those men pass on these people's cases. Let all have a chance to present their cases and give this board a chance to recommend to Congress certain cases, if any, that are deserving and that cannot get justice because of a deficiency in legal remedies.

There are a lot of fine, deserving aliens in this country who ought not to be deported. They have been here a long time, they have raised families and formed many associations. We should show compassion to them. Under the present system they do not crowd themselves forward, but the Harry Bridges kind can always find some Congressman to fight for him.

I see the gentleman from Michigan on his feet. Does the gentleman wish to ask me a question?

Mr. RABAUT. Yes. The gentleman says you cannot do it. You do not want these people to go back, but you would not vote to keep them here——

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. No; I do not want to work any hardship on any person who has a right to stay here. The Congress of the United States cannot function as a court and it should not allow itself to be made into a justice-of-the-peace court.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. No; if you please, I should like to go on.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio 5 additional minutes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Now, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I would prefer not to yield. I have not made a speech on immigration for 5 or 6 years. I know I am right in these matters. We have been permitting the consideration of these private bills in spite of our own conviction to the effect that it is a wrong procedure. Here we are today being chastised by the President for passing a bill that not one single Member will champion. How did it pass? Who is responsible for it? Nobody knows. Nobody remembers ever having voted for it. Nobody will admit that he voted for it. That proves conclusively that we should stop considering these special bills. We ought to have a court to take these people before and give them the right consideration in a court of some kind. Let this court pass on their cases. That is the way to do it. And I will tell you this, my friends; listen to me. It ought not to be so that a poor alien has got to pay a high-priced unscrupulous lawyer to have his rights protected. It ought to be so that he in his innocence, in his illiteracy, in his lack of knowledge of the country's laws should not be compelled to do what he cannot do.

He ought not to be the prey of a lot of fellows who are going to milk him out of his money. Our laws ought not to be such that these people can be enticed into this country by such fellows and their money taken from them. He is not the friend of the alien; no, he is not the friend of the alien at all. A court should be established here in our departments composed of American citizens. Whether they be Democrats or Republicans, that will make no difference; they will all be honest when given the responsibility for the lives and happiness of human beings. That is what it means to live in a country that recognizes constitutional government. [Applause.]

Under this private bill system they can slip some bills through that seem fair on their faces, and sometimes the President himself may not stop them. Think of that. I am sure that the gentleman from New York is not proud of the action of his committee in reporting out such a bill as this. It looks as if he might take this as an insult from his President, because the President in effect says that we permitted a bill to pass that should not have been passed. This bill is absolutely unreasonable, and the President ought to be sustained, and he ought to be complimented for doing what we failed to do, and he ought to be complimented for catching this bill before it became a law. [Applause.]

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order a quorum is not present.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED

A bill and a joint resolution of the Senate of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 4208. An act establishing overtime rates for compensation for employees of the field services of the War Department and the field services of the Panama Canal, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Civil Service.

S. J. Res. 296. Joint resolution to define common carriers by water engaged in certain commerce with the Virgin Islands of the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

LOUIS D. FRIEDMAN—VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. RABAUT].

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, previous to this quorum call I engaged in a colloquy on the floor of the House with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS]. Out of that conversation came to me the thought that I learned at my mother's knee, "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you."

May I say that in dealing with this question of race we might well become aware of the fact that the glorification of nationalism in Germany is one of its greatest sins. It is being substituted for the Deity and we must be most careful not to fall into the same trough. An America without a sense of right or wrong cannot continue to be the America of Washington, but may overnight become as black as Russia. We have a national need for individual and social ethics. Make no mistake about that. What is right and wrong for the individual is equally right and wrong for the Nation.

Who does the gentleman take to task in his great criticism here this morning? We went far afield in talking about this bill; in fact, the conversation and the argument was not about the bill, it was an indictment of a duly constituted committee of this House, the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. Who comprise the membership of that committee? The gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN], the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SCHULTE], the gentleman from California [Mr. KRAMER], the gentlewoman from New York [Mrs. O'DAY], the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GREEN], the gentleman from Texas [Mr. POAGE], the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MCGEHEE], the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ALLEN], the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. GRANT], the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHN MCMILLAN], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MACIEJEWSKI], the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. GATHINGS], the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. WARD], and on the Republican side, the gentleman's own side, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON], the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES], the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROCKEFELLER], the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TALLE], the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT], the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CURTIS], the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. AUSTIN], and the Delegate from Hawaii [Mr. KING].

Mr. SCHULTE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RABAUT. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. SCHULTE. The gentleman in calling the roll has omitted the name of a very distinguished Member of this House and an influence, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LESINSKI].

Mr. RABAUT. Yes; my friend the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LESINSKI] and I thank the gentleman from Indiana for his correction. The devotion to immigration and naturalization matters by my distinguished colleague from Michigan is well known to every Member of this House.

Mr. Speaker, we must be very careful. America has its own sense of values. It is not what you had, nor what you were in the past, but what are you today? We talk about old Americanism. I come from a family of three generations in the city of Detroit.

Old Americanism? If you would be consistent, then I say to you that the descendants of the Indians should be in this House. All the descendants of the Indians stand up. There is not one of them here.

When we are talking about this, let us be sincere. Do unto others as you would have them do unto you. Would you exclude a man like Mr. William S. Knudsen, production chief of the Defense Commission in our present emergency, who was born abroad? Why, the best blood in this country, in fact, the blood stream of this country, is an association of the bloods of the world. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. GEYER].

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I wish to compliment the gentleman who just preceded me on the splendid thoughts he gave us on Americanism. I agree 100 percent with what he says.

I have had experience before the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, and I know of at least one occasion where they leaned over backward and committed an injustice in a hardship case. I had that case myself.

I take this time to answer in part my good friend the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]. I realize that he controls the time and will have the last word, nevertheless I do want to say a word about our California situation. The gentleman is very much concerned about our Japanese situation on the coast, and so am I. Even at this time I am endeavoring to do everything I can to iron out the problems there.

I am glad the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] has suddenly grown out of his provincialism. I am glad he is interested in some other section than his own State. Of course, there is not a nook or a cranny in this whole United States into which he has not peeked to find out something about the power rates, yet when I become interested in something which I deem to be a problem of statesmanship, the right to vote, which happens to center in his district, he becomes very much concerned and gets very red in the face. He says I know nothing about this problem, the poll tax as a prerequisite to voting. I know this much about it, that it is not a racial problem, as he would have you believe. It is not a problem of the colored people versus the white people. There are 8,000,000 white people deprived of the vote and 3,500,000 Negroes deprived of the vote because of the poll-tax laws in those 8 Southern States.

It seems to me this poll-tax problem is Nation-wide. I hope the time never comes when my horizon is no farther away than patronage and pork. I hope I can always see things in a statesmanlike way. I am not surprised that I have a little feeling on this subject. The gentleman from Mississippi last March said before the Committee on the Census that no man in this House had more to do with defeating the reapportionment in 1920 than he. Does that interest us in California? We lost nine seats in this House by the failure of that reapportionment to pass. For 10 years, because of this gentleman from Mississippi, according to his own words, California was deprived of our proper representation here. Should I be concerned? Is this merely a local issue? It is more than that.

At another time, during the debate here on the antilynching bill, the gentleman from Mississippi rose on the floor of this House and said, "The membership of the Democratic Party from the South wields an influence far out of all proportion to its Members here." We agree that that is right. I am wondering if that is good Americanism.

The gentleman comes here with less than 5,000 votes, and tells us to look at the primaries. He did not even have an opponent in the primaries. In his State in the primaries there was only 1 person out of the 7 that was opposed at all in the primaries, yet he will tell you to look to the primary vote. I wish I had only a small group of people to please in my district. If I did not have to concern myself with the longshoremen, with all the C. I. O. people, with all the A. F. of L. people, with employers, and with the chambers of commerce, how easy it would be for me to come back year after year after year. If I had only 5,000 voters to worry about, and if I could make it possible, or if the machine could make it possible to pay enough more poll taxes so they could get the proper amount of votes in case of danger of defeat, how easy it would be for me to come back here year after year. No, I am not surprised that the gentleman from Mississippi is alarmed when the Geyer anti-poll-tax bill is mentioned. To bring so many new voters into his district might upset the status quo. Especially when he has not been too much concerned for the interests of certain groups.

The greatest injustice that has been done to this House is the refusal of the chairman of the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee to print the hearings on the Geyer anti-poll-tax bill. These hearings were ordered printed once but that order was canceled. Wonder what power was brought to bear on the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER], to change his mind? Could it be possible that the power, "out of all proportion to its membership," as boasted of by the gentleman from Mississippi, could have been brought to bear here?

I charge that the forces in the poll-tax States dare not allow the public to know what those hearings contain. If the Nation were advised of the lack of democracy existing in the States that charge for the right to vote, people would not sleep until these wrongs were made right. They would demand that these States complete the process of reconstruction. In conclusion, let me say that any time the gentleman from Mississippi desires to take up the fight for democracy right in his front yard, I shall be only too glad to allow him to carry the ball in his very efficient way, while I stand by and cheer. If in the meantime he can assist us in solving some of the problems that we have in California, we of that State will be only too glad to have his assistance.

He has said on this floor on another occasion that I could not be elected from his district. I believe he is right. My record here shows that I have championed the rights of the underdog too much for the overlords of his State who are the only ones who vote, to take an interest in me as their representative. I was at least elected by the truly American system, which is more than he can say. In my State we do not put a dollar-and-cents value on the franchise.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a newspaper statement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a short editorial from the Washington Daily News of today, dealing with the subject How Congress Can Speed Defense. This is my second request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. TALLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address delivered by me on the occasion of the centennial celebration held at Fort Atkinson on October 6.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter from the Federal Power Commission.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include therein an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Delaware?

There was no objection.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to insert an article about the Chinese-Japanese situation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN].

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, with all that has been said I still have faith in the membership of this House on both sides of the aisle to deal with any bill that may be introduced. I am pretty sure, if we go through the RECORD, we will be satisfied that every Member of this House who has had a bill before this committee has received most careful and courteous consideration.

I want also to say to you that we have in a number of instances refused relief because we felt that no such relief should be granted, but if we pursued the policy stated here by my friend from Ohio and my good friend from Mississippi, may I tell you, my friends, that a lot of good aliens that this country needs would be kept out. They are men of high integrity and character.

I want to assure this body that at no time and at no place have we attempted in any way to bring any legislation before the Congress that was not justified or would not be warranted in a democracy, and I want to assure gentlemen on both sides of the aisle that all this conversation is absolutely unnecessary, because, if you get right down to the question, what have you done to help the committee stop this so-called dual nationality? We had a rule before the Rules Committee for what was known as the Schulte resolution. It was pending there for 2 years and the purpose was to find out about dual nationality in this country. We could not get the resolution passed because it would cost $10,000, and yet you talk about the Dies committee. I still say that the Dies committee has not done the job. I am glad you like it, because it happens to have been my resolution that brought about the Dies committee. But I say that the Dies committee has not done the job that it could have done for the benefit of the country. I do not assign any ulterior motive to any Member. I regard every Member, including my colleague the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], as a sincere person, but I believe that they have not had the proper investigators behind the scenes with $220,000 or $230,000 at the disposal of that committee. I want to say that the McCormack committee, that only had $25,000, did a far greater job for the benefit of this country, way back in 1934, 1935, and 1936, than the Dies committee has done with $230,000.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. It is not my purpose to decide these questions. Like every other chairman of a committee—and I have the highest regard for every committee of this House—when a matter comes before you and there is merit to justify the legislation, I say to you that there is no alternative but to report such legislation out of the committee.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. What I would like to find out is, What are the unusual circumstances about this case that would justify the Congress in passing a special bill?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I have not the time to discuss it. You have got to read the RECORD. I did not ask to override the President's veto. All I asked was unanimous consent to send it back to the committee for further study, and my good friend from Mississippi objected to that request and then, in some way, obtained control of the time. I do not want to override the President. I simply ask that the bill go back to the committee. If there is any merit to it, all right, and if not, then it will be tabled.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Is the gentleman willing to withdraw his motion and let us vote on the veto? We will sustain it almost unanimously.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I will not withdraw my motion. I want it to go back to the committee.

Mr. RANKIN. I do not see what for. The President has already vetoed it, and the House is anxious to sustain the veto.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Why should we make an exception of this particular case or treat it in a different manner than other bills that have come here under the same circumstances.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe anyone wants to criticize the Committee on Immigration personally. I know I do not. I do not think any Member of the House wants to criticize the committee as a committee. We are vitally interested in immigration in this country in trying to protect our shores from a great influx of people who are liable to come to this country after this war is over. We should be vigilant. We should do everything we can to protect this country. We are not interested in trying to keep out law abiding, good American people, who come from foreign countries, who are residents of our country. We are glad to have them. We are interested in trying to see that they become good American citizens.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point a part of the official RECORD of Congress, volume 86, page 9279, of July 8, 1940.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SEVEN HUNDRED DEPORTABLE ALIENS SHELTERED BY UNITED STATES LABOR DEPARTMENT

More than 700 unnaturalized aliens guilty of deportable offenses against the laws of the United States have been granted exemption from deportation by Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins. The list below names these exempted aliens, together with the deportable offense charged against each. This is an official list, compiled by the United States State Department in Washington and now a part of the official privileged records of Congress (vol. 86, p. 9279, July 8, 1940).

In the first place, practically all of these aliens committed a felony by entering the United States illegally. That act alone made them immediately deportable. In the second place, they have committed crimes of every nature while remaining in the United States illegally as unnaturalized aliens. These crimes, as tabulated in the formal report of the State Department, include perjury, forgery, smuggling, marriage-license fraud, registration fraud, theft, burglary, bigamy, larceny, receiving stolen goods, rape, criminal assault, procurer, conspiracy and extortion, fraudulent enlistment in the military service, shoplifting, manslaughter, embezzlement, illegal entry. In other cases heinous types of criminal conduct are shown in the official public record.

It is amazing and shocking for American citizens to learn, while official Washington is calling upon the Nation to prepare for defense against foreign enemies, while Congress is appropriating billions upon billions of dollars for national defense, and while both Congress and the administration are considering conscription of the youth of America, that over the last 5 years an executive department of the Government has been exerting unusual efforts to protect and keep within our borders hundreds of deportable foreigners branded as criminals. Instead of deporting these aliens, Secretary Perkins devised elaborate methods to keep them permanently in the United States. They were advised to move temporarily to Mexico or Canada, there to request new incoming visas, which then were approved by the Labor Department under special discretionary provisions of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917.

Section 3 of the 1917 act provided that an alien who had lived 7 consecutive years in the United States, and had maintained his American residence during a temporary absence in a foreign land, might be readmitted to this country, in the discretion of the Secretary of Labor, without regard to certain exclusion laws. The clear purpose of this arrangement—the so-called seventh proviso of the 1917 act—was to avoid hardships to those law-abiding aliens who had lived orderly and constructive lives in this country for 7 years, but were temporarily out of the country when the 1917 law was passed.

By the gross abuse of this old and forgotten discretionary authority, the Department of Labor has contrived to prevent the deportation of criminal aliens, as specifically required by other sections of the immigration statutes.

Some of the aliens listed here, who were readmitted to the United States by this illegal device, had been deported previously as Communist agitators. Having later reentered the country illegally, these Communists now have the formal official protection of the Labor Department, by virtue of the abuse of Secretary Perkins' discretionary authority.

In commenting upon this violent application of discretionary powers in the Labor Department, Senator ROBERT R. REYNOLDS (Democrat of North Carolina) said:

"Such a perversion of our immigration laws by public servants sworn to enforce them can scarcely be conceived or realized. However, in order to make the realization effective, reference may be made to the list of more than 700 criminal aliens who were waived into the United States by the Department of Labor under the seventh proviso.

"Think of it! The Department of Labor, under the direction and in the discretion of the present Secretary of Labor, readmitted to this country 700 criminal aliens who had been apprehended, and whom we wanted to deport, but whom the Secretary of Labor did not want deported.

"One of these aliens was previously deported from the United States because of his membership in the Communist Party. He reentered illegally, thereby committing a felony, for which he has never been prosecuted. The seventh proviso was invoked to wash him clean; he was sent to Mexico to procure an immigration visa. While his case was under consideration at an American consular office in that country he was readmitted into the United States without an immigration visa."

Every country in the world now has adopted strong measures to protect its national defense and national security against sabotage and espionage by criminal aliens. The United States long has had adequate protective statutes in the Federal Code. But today we find more than 700 cases in which those mandatory statutes have been nullified by the deliberate official conduct of the Secretary of Labor. Instead of using the immigration laws to protect the United States the Department, in at least 700 cases, has distorted them to shelter deportable criminal aliens. Undoubtedly there are many other cases of this sort throughout the country which have not yet come to the notice of Congress. Those listed, however, demonstrate the spirit in which our immigration laws have been administered by Secretary Perkins. This situation probably explains the recent transfer of the Immigration Service from the Labor to the Justice Department.

The Nation was shocked by the publication last month of the names of 563 Government employees formally identified with a Communist fellow-travel organization. Many of those Federal fellow travelers were employees of the Department of Labor. We now learn that under such leadership the Department of Labor has been undermining our immigration statutes to permit the unlawful reentry of criminal aliens previously apprehended for deportation.

Unquestionably these revelations will command the immediate attention of Congress.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, if we permit people to come to this country who are criminals and who have criminal records and permit them to remain in this country, then we do an injustice to America and to American laws. Whoever is responsible ought to see to it that those people are deported and that they are not ever permitted to come to this country again, because we do not want criminals here. We want law-abiding Americans.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RANKIN. Nobody is criticizing all the members of the Committee on Immigration. We are criticizing the policy that has grown up in recent years that we want to stop.

Mr. RICH. I appreciate that. I thought that some of the Members had the idea when statements were made with reference to this immigration that we were trying to criticize Members of Congress. I will criticize them if they permit these people to come to our shores unlawfully, if they are going to permit them to come here and take the jobs of American citizens. We want to protect our own American citizens. I say it is time then to get after the committee, because we owe it to our American laborers, our American farmers, and our American businessmen to take care of ourselves first. Then if we can do anything to help foreign countries, that is all right. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman from California [Mr. GEYER], I desire to say that he misleads the House when he tells them that we from the South represent only a handful of voters. As a matter of fact, we settle our controversies in the primaries. When the general election comes along there is no competition. Therefore, very few people go to the polls.

I want to say to the gentleman from California that if he will be just as diligent in getting rid of alien Communists, such as Harry Bridges, whom he defended on this floor, as we are to maintain peace and protect the rights of the people of our section of the country, California might be proud of him in the years to come. As far as that is concerned, as I said to him before, he probably represents the only district in the United States from which he could be elected to Congress. He certainly could not be elected from mine, with the kind of speeches he has been making here on the floor.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say with reference to the Committee on Immigration, that I reserve the right to criticize any man on this floor in a legitimate way. Probably no two men on this floor have criticized each other more severely or more consistently than the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] and your humble servant, but we have done it, I hope, in a way that was legitimate and was intended to redound to the common good. If a member of the Committee on Immigration does anything wrong, I have the same right to criticize him as if he were a member of my own committee, and I shall not hesitate to do so.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] raises the question that some of these men he wants to let in by a special dispensation might help in the defense program. Let me say that we have enough Americans to take care of the defense program in America. [Applause.] I am in favor of using them and not inviting somebody in from the outside.

The gentleman from New York says he was the father of the Dies committee. Ah, we cannot forget his activity with reference to the creation of the Dies committee. He did introduce a resolution and we Members who did not agree with him, who wanted a real investigation such as the gentleman from Texas, MARTIN DIES, and his committee have put on, took it away from him, so to speak, and passed a real resolution creating the Dies committee, which is putting on a real investigation, measured by old-line American standards. We did not want a Dickstein committee.

He criticizes us for the amount of money the Dies committee has spent. Every dollar that committee has spent has been more than justified. Its good cannot be measured in dollars and cents. It has done the American people a service for which they will manifest their gratitude throughout the years to come. Yes; I was one of the men who supported the opposition when the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] came up, because I could think of nothing that would be more ridiculous than to take the Dies committee away from the gentleman from Texas, MARTIN DIES, and turn it over to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN]. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I presume it is in order. I think it will be voted down, but I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. There is nothing before the House except the motion I have made.

The SPEAKER. And on that the previous question has been ordered.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RANKIN. If the motion to refer is voted down then the question before the House will be on the overriding of the veto. Is that correct?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] that the bill and the message together with the accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DICKSTEIN) there were—ayes 17, noes 62.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground a quorum is not present.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I was on my feet. I object to the vote on the ground a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] objects to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOLMES] objects to the vote on the same ground. Evidently a quorum is not present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 108, nays 105, not voting 216, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts.

Rev. Duncan Fraser, assistant rector, Church of the Epiphany, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Almighty and eternal God, who of old didst lead Thy children out of the wilderness into a promised land, and by Thy Providence didst guide Thy servant Columbus through the great deep to these shores: Grant us grace, we beseech Thee, so to cherish this land which Thou hast given us for our heritage and a haven for the peoples out of every tongue, that we may never rest until every home and every village shall have discovered the riches of peace and contentment, of the joy of labor, of the sense of responsibility of the welfare of this Nation which it is our privilege to promote to Thy greater glory and honor. Through Jesus Christ, Thy Son, our Lord. Amen.

SENATE

MONDAY, OCTOBER 14, 1940

(Legislative day of Wednesday, September 18, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Rev. Duncan Fraser, assistant rector, Church of the Epiphany, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, whose rule is everlasting and power infinite, have mercy upon this whole land, and so rule the hearts of Thy servants, the President of the United States, and all others in authority—civil, military, and naval—that they, knowing whence their powers derive, may, above all things, seek to administer them to Thy glory and honor; that justice and mercy, freedom and tolerance, tempered with a solemn sense of responsibility to Thee, may flourish in our land. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER

The legislative clerk read the following communication:

KEY PITTMAN,
President pro Tempore.

Mr. KING thereupon took the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION

A message in writing from the President of the United States, submitting a nomination, was communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also announced that on October 9, 1940, the President had approved and signed the following acts and joint resolution:

S. 253. An act to authorize the leasing of certain Indian lands subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior;

S. 3437. An act for the relief of the Franco-American Construction Co.;

S. 3868. An act for the relief of certain former disbursing officers for the Civil Works Administration and the Federal Emergency Relief Administration;

S. 4258. An act to remove the restriction placed upon the use of certain lands acquired in connection with the expansion of Mitchel Field, N. Y.;

S. 4316. An act to repeal sections 4588 and 4591 of the Revised Statutes of the United States;

S. 4353. An act to restrict or regulate the delivery of checks drawn against funds of the United States, or any agency or instrumentality thereof, to addresses outside the United States, its Territories, and possessions, and for other purposes; and

S. J. Res. 267. Joint resolution providing for the acquisition by the Railroad Retirement Board of data needed in carrying out the provisions of the Railroad Retirement Acts.

COAST GUARD AUXILIARY AND COAST GUARD RESERVE

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to provide for the establishment, administration, and maintenance of a Coast Guard Auxiliary and a Coast Guard Reserve, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

RAILROAD COMBINATION IN THE EASTERN REGION

Mr. WHEELER, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, submitted an additional report, pursuant to Senate Resolution 71, Seventy-fourth Congress, authorizing an investigation of interstate railroads and affiliates with respect to financing, reorganizations, mergers, and certain other matters, relative to railroad combination in the eastern region, which was ordered to be printed as part 5 of Report No. 1182.

BILL INTRODUCED

Mr. McNARY introduced a bill (S. 4412) for the relief of Hazel M. Lewis, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

COMPENSATION OF REDCAPS AT RAILROAD STATIONS

Mr. BARKLEY (for Mr. THOMAS of Utah) submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 325), which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

Whereas prior to October 24, 1938, the effective date of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, a majority of redcaps employed by railroad or railroad terminal companies derived compensation for their services solely through tips or gratuities given them by the traveling public; and

Whereas at or about the effective date of said act the companies adopted a so-called accounting and guarantee arrangement whereunder, as a condition of continued employment, each redcap was required to report daily the amount of tips received by him from the traveling public, and the company guaranteed to pay the redcap any additional sum necessary to equal the minimum wage required by the act; and

Whereas numerous complaints were received from redcaps by the Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division of the United States Department of Labor to the effect that they were required, in order to retain their jobs, to report, even though falsely, the daily receipt of tips in sums equal to or greater than the minimum wage prescribed in the act, when in fact they had received tips in sums substantially less than the minimum wage; and

Whereas upon investigation and a public hearing conducted by representatives of the Administrator it was found that the records kept by various companies were inaccurate in that they showed tips received by redcaps in sums equal to or greater than the minimum wage, when in fact many redcaps had actually received tips in sums substantially less than the minimum wage; and

Whereas an investigation by representatives of the Administrator of complaints against a major terminal company disclosed evidence of flagrant violations of the minimum-wage and record-keeping provisions of the act whether or not as a matter of law tips reported by redcaps under the accounting and guarantee arrangement became wages paid the redcaps by the company within the meaning of the act; and

Whereas after the Administrator had instituted a civil action under the act to enjoin that terminal company from such alleged violations, the defendant, after joining issue as to all of the Administrator's allegations, being served by the Administrator with a trial notice, publicly announced the adoption of a new plan whereunder, commencing February 1, 1940, redcaps would be paid wages at the rate of 30 cents per hour, the minimum rate prescribed in the act, but would be required to collect from each passenger a charge of 10 cents per bag or parcel carried; and

Whereas the new plan inaugurated by that terminal company has been gradually adopted at most of the other railroad terminals throughout the country; and

Whereas the executive branch of the Government has received numerous additional complaints that under the new plan adopted by the terminal companies many redcaps have been discharged or otherwise discriminated against because of failure to earn by said charges of 10 cents per bag or parcel sums sufficient to cover the cost to the companies of the minimum wage payments; and

Whereas redcaps, passengers, representatives of labor organizations, disinterested civic leaders, and others have urged that the Administrator take steps to ameliorate the conditions and practices of employment of redcaps by the companies; and

Whereas to this end an immediate inquiry into such conditions and practices is a matter of serious concern to the public: Now, therefore be it

Resolved, That the Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division of the United States Department of Labor or his designated representatives, is hereby directed to undertake immediately an inquiry into the new plan or practices adopted by railroad or terminal companies in view of the minimum-wage requirements of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (52 Stat. 1060), under his investigatory powers under said act, and to ascertain and report to the Senate—

(1) The extent to which the new plan or practices violate the letter or the spirit of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 or other Federal statutes, if at all;

(2) The extent to which such new plan, or variations thereof, is susceptible to regulation under the Fair Labor Standards Act in its present form; and

(3) What legislation, if any, should be enacted for the purpose of regulating said new plan of compensation to redcaps under the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Acting President pro tempore:

S. 527. An act for the relief of J. J. Greenleaf;

NOMINATION OF DIRECTOR OF SELECTIVE SERVICE—EXECUTIVE MESSAGE

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore, as in executive session, laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

I nominate Clarence A. Dykstra, of Wisconsin, to be Director of Selective Service.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, October 14, 1940.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in view of the circumstances which exist in reference to this appointment, and in view of the fact that the draft registration throughout the country will take place on Wednesday, and it is very desirable that this nominee be confirmed so that he may take charge of the administration of the Selective Service Act, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now give consideration to the nomination without further delay.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the able Democratic leader very courteously spoke to me about the matter a few moments ago. It is a very unusual request; I do not recall a similar one having been made since the formation of the Cabinet by the President in 1933; but these are unusual times. It is with great reluctance that I consent to the request; but, before doing so, I desire to propound a question to the Senator from Kentucky: What is the background of the doctor that so qualifies Dr. Dykstra for this position over and above all other citizens of the country?

Mr. BARKLEY. I cannot, of course, state to the Senator or to the Senate the processes by which the President arrived at the appointment of Dr. Dykstra. I am sure I can state that a number of outstanding men were under consideration for this appointment. In the very nature of the case, it should have been and is nonpartisan. Dr. Dykstra has been and is one of the outstanding educators of the country. He was for a number of years also city manager of the city of Cincinnati, Ohio, in which position he displayed marked ability as an executive, and some 2 or 3 years ago he was made president of the University of Wisconsin, which position he now holds. I may state, and it is to his credit to say, that as city manager of the city of Cincinnati he drew $25,000 a year. He accepted the presidency of the University of Wisconsin at a considerable less salary, and in accepting this position he accepts it at a salary below what he receives as president of the university. He is recognized, I will say to the Senator, as one of the outstanding administrators and executives of the country.

I would not make this request, as I have stated to the Senator, except that the selective-service law which Congress enacted is now in force, and all over the country on Wednesday registration will take place; thereafter the draft boards are to perform their functions; and it is very urgent that this appointment be confirmed.

Mr. McNARY. I realize the urgency. I am going to speak for no one save myself when I say that, under the statement of the Senator from Kentucky, I personally shall make no objection.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I wish to say that I have no personal objection to Dr. Dykstra; I think he is a very able and competent man; but I do not like to have the Senate confirm the nomination of a man without the people of the United States having an opportunity to protest, if they so desire. If it would interfere with the program, I would not object, but Dr. Dykstra could continue under a recess appointment. It will be recalled that, 2 or 3 years ago, we hurriedly confirmed the nomination of a certain individual, much to the subsequent regret of many, after finding out some things that we did not know at that time.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I will yield in a moment. I do not think that is true of Dr. Dykstra; I think he is a very able and competent man, and I want it understood that I am not objecting from any personal standpoint whatsoever; but I think we should not confirm the nomination of a man in this fashion without any knowledge on the part of the people and without any means of reaching him after he is once confirmed.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. HOLT. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator is mistaken in saying that Dr. Dykstra can serve under a recess appointment. The President cannot make a recess appointment when the Senate is in session.

Mr. HOLT. I misspoke; I did not mean "a recess appointment," but he can serve until such time as his nomination is rejected by the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not think so, under the circumstances, because there is now an acting administrator who happens to be an Army officer. I do not think the President could continue Dr. Dykstra in office under what might be termed "a recess appointment" for the reason that the Senate is not in recess. Of course, I realize that action on the nomination can only be had at this time by unanimous consent, and it is a request which I should not make except under the circumstances which now prevail. If we cannot confirm Dr. Dykstra under these circumstances in this way, there being no quorum here—and probably there will not be for some weeks; we cannot tell as to that—the nomination would have to go over for a future date. I sincerely hope the Senator from West Virginia will not object to this appointment. I think the whole country, the press, and the people have recognized it as an outstanding and appropriate appointment. It has no politics in it.

Mr. HOLT. I agree thoroughly with the Senator from Kentucky as to that; and I want to say that I personally think Dr. Dykstra is a very competent man; but my objection is against the method of bringing the appointment into the Senate at this time. Suppose the Senate had adjourned or recessed under the agreement proposed last Friday, the same situation would have arisen, and the nomination could not have been confirmed, anyway. My objection is to the idea of confirmation without the people having the right to protest, because I heretofore have seen such things happen. Of course, then the question is that of reconsideration and asking the President to return the nomination. We know that is impossible in this case; I do not think that would happen so far as Dr. Dykstra is concerned. I think this is one of the good appointments of the President, much better than many others he has made.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator that whether we recessed or adjourned last Friday is really not very material, because we did not, and we are meeting, I suppose, until something else happens under the 3-day-recess plan. Of course, any Senator has the right to object; but these things do not happen often. I will say to the Senator that this is a rare instance; I do not recall that I have made such a request—certainly not within my recollection—since I have been in the position which I now happen to occupy.

Mr. HOLT. I hope the Senator knows that there would be no objection to any personal request of his, but it is merely a matter of principle. I regret it very much. I have in mind another confirmation that occurred 3 years ago when we elevated a man without seeing his face.

Mr. BARKLEY. If I may be facetious and use an expression in quotations—for I am not the author of it—this is an occasion where it would be well, I think, "to rise above principle," and allow this nomination to be confirmed.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I withhold the objection and yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BURKE. As one interested in the passage of the selective training and service bill, it seems to me that the President has made an unusually happy choice in selecting the administrator of the program. I have known, as all people who follow public affairs have known, about Dr. Dykstra for many years. I have never met him, but from those who are well acquainted with him I have received first-hand information that convinces me that in all the country it would not have been possible for the President to have found one better qualified to administer this most important act in a way that will bring the utmost satisfaction. While I think the general principle stated by the Senator from West Virginia is undoubtedly correct, and while I share his view with respect to some past nominations, because of the fact that Dr. Dykstra is so well known and his qualifications for this particular office are so well recognized, I firmly believe that we could very well vary the general rule and confirm the nomination by unanimous consent. It is my very earnest hope that the Senator from West Virginia and any other Senators who might be inclined to object will, upon more mature consideration, let the nomination be confirmed at this time.

One particular reason why I think Dr. Dykstra is so exceptionally well qualified for this position is that I am told the young men of the country have very great confidence in him. After all, those of us who are past the age of 35 do not have in this matter the personal interest which those who compose the younger generation have. I think it is a splendid thing to reach out to a great university and take a man who has the confidence of the young men of his progressive State, and of young men generally throughout the country. I am very hopeful that confirmation may be had without delay.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield.

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The statement of the sponsor of the conscription legislation has somewhat shaken me in my intention to make a suggestion and what I was about to suggest to the Senator from West Virginia. I have the very greatest respect and regard for the Senator from Nebraska. But he approaches the subject from one angle and I from a different one. I appeal to the Senator from West Virginia on this ground: The Senator from Nebraska spoke as the supporter and sponsor of the conscription legislation. I speak as a bitter opponent of that legislation. However, the policy of conscription in time of peace has, by act of Congress and the signature of the President, become the policy of the United States, at least for the present. I hope it will not become the permanent policy, although I fear that the effect will be to impose that system indefinitely upon the people of the United States in time of peace. Even so, at the present time it is the policy of the United States, by act of Congress and the signature of the President.

That being true, it seems to me it is very desirable to have the supreme direction of the draft system under the President himself exercised by a civilian rather than by a professional draft expert in the War Department. I say that without any reflection on the officers of the War Department who have devoted themselves to a study of this matter. It seems to me that it is a matter of very great importance to the people of the United States to have the draft system in its inception under the control of a civilian rather than that of Army officials.

We all know that there will probably not be a quorum of the Senate present until after the 18th of November. I am not personally acquainted with Dr. Dykstra. Of course, I have known of him for many years. I have heard no criticism of him from any source. If his confirmation by the Senate is to be delayed by reason of the absence of a quorum, the Army will necessarily, in the vitally essential stages of setting up the whole machinery, be in complete control of conscription in time of peace. As I said a moment ago, I think it is very desirable that a civilian at least have something to say about it. While I agree with everything my friend from West Virginia said about the danger of this sort of practice, and while I realize that a great many mistakes have been made—and I think I recognize the one to which the Senator from West Virginia refers— nevertheless, I think it is important in this particular situation to have a civilian of unimpeachable character and attainments at the head of the draft set-up in its inception, rather than to have a civilian come in a month from now, after the professional draft experts have had a chance to work on it for a month. I think that consideration is sufficient to entitle the request of the Senator from Kentucky to favorable action; and I hope my friend from West Virginia will give consideration to these matters.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Missouri that I have no intention whatsoever of holding up confirmation until November 18, or asking that the matter be referred to a committee. That is not my intention. However, I think as a matter of principle we should not act hastily. I do not see how any harm could come by allowing the nomination to go over until Thursday, when the Senate will meet again.

I do not think any objection can be made against Dr. Dykstra. I thoroughly agree with the Senator from Missouri on that point. However, I can see no harm in allowing the nomination to go over until Thursday, in order that no one may be precluded from making an objection if he has one. I do not mean to hold up confirmation until the 18th of November.

I wish to make it absolutely clear that I have no personal objection to Dr. Dykstra. I thoroughly agree with the Senator from Missouri that a civilian should be appointed to the position. I give the President credit for making an appointment which is far superior to most of his past appointments. With not even 30 Members of the Senate in the city, and without the people knowing anything about it, I do not see why the nomination should be confirmed in a few minutes, thus precluding anyone from making an objection. I hope the Senator sees my point.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Four or five days ago the press carried the report that the President had asked Dr. Dykstra to serve. He hesitated for a while about accepting. I presume he had to obtain the consent of the University of Wisconsin for leave of absence. Three or four days' delay may not be fatal, but the situation really resolves itself into the question whether he is to be permitted to take charge and go from the ground up with this process or, as the Senator from Missouri has said, whether he is to come into the administration after somebody else has started the system and carry on as administrator with a system almost superimposed upon him.

Mr. HOLT. I do not want to be argumentative with the Senator from Kentucky, but I do not see that the difference between Monday and Thursday would make a change in the system. If Dr. Dykstra is in Wisconsin, I doubt whether he could get here before tomorrow or next day. There would be a difference of only 2 days. A principle is involved which I think is important, and I think the Senator from Kentucky recognizes the importance of the principle. I have been in the Senate only a short time. We are rapidly coming to the idea of speeding things through the Senate. I do not indict the Senator from Kentucky for that practice. It is something I do not like to see.

Mr. BARKLEY. With reference to appointments, the Senator knows that they are usually referred to a committee. That is the proper course. The proposed action cannot be regarded as a precedent, because if a similar request should be made at any time hereafter any Senator might object. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] nearly always objects to such requests, and very properly so.

Of course, I cannot claim any persuasive powers over the Senator from West Virginia, but I wish he would let this nomination be acted upon, because I think it is of sufficient importance to justify that course. I assure the Senator that it will not be regarded by me as a precedent in regard to any future appointments.

Mr. HOLT. I wish I could waive the principle, because I should vote for Dr. Dykstra if I were called upon to vote today; but I cannot see any harm in waiting 3 days, and I can see harm in breaking down precedent and principle in the Senate on this matter. On the Senator's personal account, as well as on Dr. Dykstra's account, I very much regret that I must object; but I think it is important to preserve the principle. I shall have no objection to confirming the nomination on Thursday.

Mr. BARKLEY. Am I to understand that the Senator is in the position of the justice of the peace who tried a case, listened to all the arguments and speeches, and then said, "The court will take this case under advisement until next Thursday, at which time he will render judgment for the plaintiff"? [Laughter.]

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. CAPPER. Dr. Dykstra served for 8 years in the State of Kansas as head of the political science department of the University of Kansas. His record was of the very best. I think the President made a most excellent selection when he named Dr. Dykstra for this important position.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thank the Senator.

Let me make a suggestion to the Senator from West Virginia. I do this subject to the approval of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY]. Is the Senator willing to have a short meeting tomorrow to consider this matter?

Mr. HOLT. I have no objection. I hope the Senator realizes that I have no objection to meeting tomorrow, or at any other time. The only question involved is the principle to which I have referred. I regret that it is necessary to call the Senate back in session on this matter.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate the Senator's viewpoint.

Mr. HOLT. I want the Senator to realize that I think Dr. Dykstra is an exceptional appointee; but I do not like the idea of confirmation in a period of 5 minutes in the case of a man who is to have control over 16,000,000 American young men.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, somebody will have that control anyway.

Mr. HOLT. I realize that.

Mr. BARKLEY. It may be that his control will be more to the liking of many of us than would be the control of some others.

Mr. HOLT. I think it will be.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I think Dr. Dykstra is an excellent selection. I think he is about as good a man as we could possibly get. I entirely agree with the Senator from West Virginia on the matter of principle. Ordinarily I should object; but under the particular circumstances I think the matter could be passed over until tomorrow.

Mr. HOLT. I have no objection. I do not think there will be any objection to Dr. Dykstra. I do not see how any objection could be made. I regret that my position makes it necessary for the Senate to be in session tomorrow.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think we understand each other.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, if I may make a further remark, I assume that if we are to have a session of the Senate tomorrow it will be for the distinct and sole purpose of taking up the nomination of Dr. Dykstra?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; that is my understanding. Then we will go over until Thursday, as we planned to do today.

Mr. McNARY. Exactly.

ARMY NOMINATIONS

As in executive session,

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I wish to address my remarks to the Senator from Kentucky. The Senate Committee on Military Affairs has about 43 routine Army nominations to be confirmed. I am told by the War Department that unless they are confirmed this month—they do not have to be confirmed today, but they should be confirmed promptly—the failure to make these promotions will work a hardship not only upon the officers concerned but upon the War Department, and will cause a reduction in the salaries of the officers.

Mr. BARKLEY. As I understand these are routine military appointments.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. And are the type of nominations which the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, usually asks be confirmed en bloc and that they be not printed on the calendar but only in the RECORD so that the reference will be shown. Is that true?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is correct.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, let me ask a question. Have the names been presented to the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Yes; to all members of the Committee on Military Affairs who are present in Washington.

Mr. McNARY. Let me suggest that the names be filed with the clerk and then called up on Thursday or the following Monday. That will give notice to those who are interested in the matter. There will be no objection made at that time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I will be glad to handle the matter in that way, and I report the nominations from the Committee on Military Affairs. It is not necessary that the nominations be confirmed today, tomorrow, or Wednesday, but it is necessary, as I have said, that they be promptly confirmed.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest that the nominations lie on the table to be taken up later.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nominations will lie upon the table.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, with the understanding which has been reached, we will recess a little later until tomorrow.

ADDRESS BY ATTORNEY GENERAL JACKSON AT NOTIFICATION CEREMONIES FOR SENATOR MEAD

Clarence A. Dykstra, of Wisconsin, to be Director of Selective Service.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, OCTOBER 14, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Lord, teach us to pray. Let our faith in Thee be so simple, our vision so clear, and our hold on Thee so certain that as our prayer trembles into silence we shall be inspired to do good in countless, quiet ways. Teach us that self-denial and self-surrender are the measures and worth of man's greatness. Let there be a sorrow for sin, a yearning after peace and purity, and heartfelt longings for service and usefulness. We earnestly pray Thee, blessed Lord, let not the sun set in a world's sky of lead with a scarce, single ray of light, leaving its destiny upon a stricken heart. By bravely fighting, patient endurance, and quiet suffering may its weary burden measure our heroism and chivalry of soul. Unveil the cross before the waiting eyes of our fellow countrymen and let it be magnified in our daily lives. Let us live to toil for life while others are dying for life; this is true nobility. Do Thou direct our President, our Speaker, and the Congress in all their ways; this is our humble prayer. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, October 10, 1940, was read and approved.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a bill I am going to introduce today, which I believe will be referred to the Committee on Education.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SNYDER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a short article by John T. Flynn and an editorial from the Washington Star.

There was no objection.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a brief credo written by Archibald MacLeish, and I ask unanimous consent also to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include the fourth section of subhead of the report of the special committee on the bill of rights of the American Bar Association.

There was no objection.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include a news item from yesterday's Baltimore Sun.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW]?

There was no objection.

AXIS PROPAGANDA

Mr. JONKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JONKMAN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONKMAN. Mr. Speaker, Dorothy Thompson, columnist, in this morning's Washington Post expressed further the story that the Axis Powers say they want to see Roosevelt defeated. This propaganda was first disseminated by the candidate for Vice President on the New Deal ticket; next we heard it proclaimed by the Democratic Governor of New York; then President Roosevelt himself again gave it national publicity in the nature of comment on a news article from Italy in the New York Times, to which he referred at his press conference.

The pathos of this propaganda does not lie in the fact that the New Deal injects national defense into politics; the tragedy lies in the fact that our President, the Democratic candidate for Vice President, and the Governor of New York, not to mention Dorothy Thompson and others, become the dupes of the dictators in spreading axis propaganda designed to weaken our defense. The propaganda of the dictators is always designed to mislead and get other people to do the things that will weaken them and make them vulnerable. In other words, according to their system, we know, or should know, that when the Axis Powers say they want Roosevelt defeated they mean just the opposite and mean to accomplish just the opposite, knowing that the people will take an opposite position. They hope that the people will elect Roosevelt. They know he will be no stronger in a defense program that he was in his domestic program. In other words, the New Deal has again shown its incapacity for leadership by already falling into the trap of Nazi and Fascist propaganda.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an address made by me in New York.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LYNCH]?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an Associated Press dispatch.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that today, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes. I ask further that I may be permitted to include in my remarks certain extracts from a prospectus prepared for the consideration of the General Staff, which may somewhat exceed the ordinary limit.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

AMERICA'S FOREIGN POLICY

Mr. OSMERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. OSMERS. Mr. Speaker, On Wednesday of this week about 20,000,000 Americans will register for possible service in the armed forces of the United States. Almost without exception there is a willingness and a desire on their part to serve their country and defend it from its enemies, both without and within.

There is, however, a growing conviction on the part of the American people that the present administration has made certain commitments, particularly in the Far East, which are unknown to Congress or to the people. Some have even suggested that this administration would go to any length to use the foreign situation as a means of perpetuating itself in office.

Those of us who are being registered on Wednesday and all of the citizens of the United States are entitled to a clear statement of America's foreign policy. We should know what is to be defended and whether our services are already pledged in some futile foreign expedition. Will the President make such a statement? [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein two newspaper articles.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a short article by the past president of the State bar of California.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

CORRECTION OF ROLL CALL

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Speaker, on roll call No. 136 I am recorded as being absent, whereas I was present and answered "present." I ask unanimous consent that the RECORD and Journal be corrected accordingly. May I state, further, that I have not missed a quorum call or a roll call vote during the Seventy-sixth Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an article by Mr. Hartley W. Barclay, secretary and editorial director of the Conover-Mast Corporation of New York, entitled "Prelude to Totalitarianism?"

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks at this point.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

[Mr. O'CONNOR addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. On these requests for 1 minute, where permission to revise and extend is granted, do they go in at this point in the RECORD?

The SPEAKER. They do not. If the request is made, the extensions do not go into the RECORD at that point if they are more than 1 minute.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. When I asked unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, I also asked unanimous consent to extend my remarks at that point.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand the gentleman to make that request or he would not have recognized him for that purpose, under the agreement under which we have been working here for several months.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Then do I understand that the extension of my remarks will appear in the Appendix of the RECORD?

The SPEAKER. That is right.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my whole speech, including the speech I made and the reply I made to my friend from Pennsylvania, be included in the Appendix of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, a further parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN], I think, made a similar request this morning. Does that go into the RECORD "at this point"?

The SPEAKER. It does not, if it is more than a minute. The Chair cannot hear these requests because there is so much confusion in the Hall and Members become so impatient about being recognized for 1 minute that they all stand up at one time.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE AND EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have leave of absence for 22 days.

I also ask unanimous consent that I may have 10 of those days in which to insert my remarks in the RECORD and to extend and revise them on three subjects—the subject of health, the subject of the situation in the Third Congressional District of Minnesota, and the subject of the Townsend plan.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object to the latter part of the request, I understand the gentleman asked for 10 legislative days within which to extend his remarks in the RECORD on some subject.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Assuming those 10 days are during the 22 days' leave of absence which I have just requested; if not, I will limit it to that time.

Mr. McCORMACK. Is the gentleman going to be here for the remainder of the day?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. Would the gentleman withdraw the latter part of his unanimous-consent request for the time being?

Mr. ALEXANDER. The one regarding the Townsend plan?

Mr. McCORMACK. I am not concerned about the Townsend plan or anything of that sort. I am referring to the request for 10 legislative days within which to extend his remarks.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Under the rules, as I understand it, in case of an extended recess or an adjournment, the Members have some days within which to revise and extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am sure that will be taken care of if anything of that kind is done and, of course, whatever is afforded to the membership of the House generally, the gentleman would want to be included in the general request and that is the main reason for my taking this position.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, on that basis, I will withhold my request.

Mr. McCORMACK. I shall not object, of course, but I simply suggest that if the gentleman is going to be here for the remainder of the day, that as to the latter part of the request—not on the subject of the Townsend plan, because that does not concern me, but with respect to the 10 days within which to extend his remarks, that the gentleman withhold that for the time being.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, let me say to the gentleman from Minnesota that when a Member gets permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD he has 30 days within which to extend them. So, if the gentleman's unanimous-consent request to extend his remarks is granted, he would not only have 10 days but 30 days if the session lasts that long.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I thank the gentleman from Mississippi.

There was no objection.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein a speech made by Attorney General Jackson.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BLOOM. I further request unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein a speech by Pierre Van Paasen.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

GRAND COULEE DAM

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I think all of us have heard of Grand Coulee Dam, the greatest thing conceived by the mind of man, and when it is finished, after they have poured 11,000,000 cubic yards of cement in it, it will be the greatest thing ever built by the hand of man. But Coulee Dam is noted for one thing more and that is that the Democrats are in strong control there. Two years ago the Republicans received only 10 percent of the votes.

I hold in my hand a picture of a place and it says, "This is the place that was made for Willkie to make his address at Grand Coulee Dam." This is the picture. On it it says at the bottom "Republican headquarters, Willkie for President Club, C. A. Riemcke, president."

Up here in just about as large letters it says "Charles A. Riemcke, funeral home." [Laughter.]

That is about what the Republicans will find politically not only in Grand Coulee, but also in the State of Washington on November 5. [Laughter and applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MAAS, by unanimous consent, was granted permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include certain excerpts.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

THREE-DAY RECESSES

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Thursday next.

This unanimous-consent request is submitted with the understanding that no ordinary legislative business will be transacted or any business transacted in the future unless the Members are notified in due season.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman reserve his objection for the time being?

Mr. BURDICK. Yes; I will.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, I understand from the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] that the business which the administration has prepared for the House is practically completed for the time being?

Mr. McCORMACK. That is correct.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I further understand that by these 3-day recesses the House will not lose any of its privileges to come into session if any extraordinary occasion should arise?

Mr. McCORMACK. That is absolutely correct. Of course, the membership of the House has complete confidence in its leadership on both sides of the aisle. The unanimous-consent request, if granted, with no further legislation to transact, no recommendations coming from the President, will permit the Members to go home with the knowledge that there is no necessity of their being in Washington and that if anything develops the Members will be notified in proper time.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. That means, then, that we are to have 3-day recesses from now on until further notified?

Mr. McCORMACK. That is correct.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I would like to inquire about this situation: We Members who live long distances away from Washington, which would require about 3 days within which to return, ought to have some understanding with the leadership that we will have about 3 days' notice before the time to be here. Of course, we want to come back immediately in case there should develop an acute situation.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman repeat his suggestion?

Mr. O'CONNOR. The situation with respect to some of us is that we live in a territory which requires at least 3 days' time to get here, or even 4 days' time, assuming that we use the train—and not very many of us care to fly. Suppose the leadership of the House decides that we should be here. I think there ought to be a general understanding that we should have 4 days', or 3 days' at least, notice within which to come if the conditions will permit of such procedure.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman has made an absolutely fair statement. I think the gentleman and all Members will understand that this is a gentlemen's agreement. Such agreements are frequently entered into, not particularly on matters of this kind, but on various matters, and the Members of the House respect the obligations of a gentlemen's agreement. Should some situation hereafter arise where this gentlemen's agreement was disturbed, where it was felt necessary to call the House into session it is only natural to assume—and I assure the gentleman, speaking for myself, and I know I speak for the Speaker and also speak the sentiments of my distinguished friend the gentleman from Massachusetts, the minority leader—all Members will be given ample notice.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I would amplify that by saying I know the gentleman from Montana, of course, would not want us to do otherwise, if the international situation became so involved it was advisable for us to be back regardless of the 3 days, we must do so. However, except in the case of real necessity, neither the Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts, the majority leader, nor myself would want to bring the House together without ample notice.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman from Montana and other Members similarly situated can accept this request with complete knowledge that their interests and rights, except insofar as an acute emergency might arise, will be amply protected.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I may say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that I think it is a very reasonable arrangement to make and I think it is very wise on the part of the leadership to make such an arrangement. These inflammatory speeches that we hear daily keep the country stirred and I believe the country should be given a breathing spell. I am in favor of the plan.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. Is it understood that should this request be granted the unanimous-consent calendar will not be called on the days the House meets?

Mr. McCORMACK. Oh, yes; that would follow naturally, I assume.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I understand there will be no business at all transacted during this 3-day recess period; otherwise the Members would all have to be here.

Mr. McCORMACK. There will be no business transacted. The House will meet and immediately adjourn. No business will be transacted during the period covered by the unanimous-consent request.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. That means no speeches will be made?

Mr. McCORMACK. I assume that will be the case under the request that the House meet and immediately adjourn.

Mr. RANKIN. There will be no speeches made?

Mr. McCORMACK. The House meets and immediately adjourns. I believe the gentleman is capable of construing that language.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes, I yield to the gentleman from North Dakota.

Mr. BURDICK. My position is somewhat changed. I objected, but now I am reserving the right to object. I want to find out what you are trying to do. Maybe it is all right, but I have been under the impression that we have been kept here month after month because of the international situation which might break at any moment. I notice from reports in the last few days that the most dangerous part of the whole program is immediately before us. We might be into the war by tomorrow night, you do not know.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I will yield, but I am not through yet.

At this time the whole world seems to be alive to the situation that we may become involved; and we may become involved without our action at all. If any nation declares war on us we are in. Now just why do we want to leave at this time unless it is on account of the election?

Mr. McCORMACK. That is a very fair question.

Mr. BURDICK. The worst thing that can happen to any one of us in the election is that we might get beat, and as long as I know I am going to get beat anyhow I am not worried.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I would not agree to this recess if I thought it would imperil our right to act promptly in the case of a national crisis. I think in this agreement, however, we are adequately protected. We could revoke this whenever we wished. I am sure the gentleman from North Dakota knows I want to safeguard the situation.

Mr. BURDICK. Why was this not done a month ago? [Laughter.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts to answer that.

Mr. McCORMACK. Now that we have the gentleman from North Dakota in a good humor——

Mr. BURDICK. I am always that way, but I still reserve the right to object.

Mr. McCORMACK. In this particular matter I know my friend will not cause any further embarrassment by pressing his objection, but the fact is that I can assure my friend that due to the exigencies of an election year—and we are all practical men and have to recognize that such exigencies exist—this is the first opportunity I, as majority leader, have had to submit such unanimous-consent request.

May I say to the gentleman that 3-day recesses meet the very situation that the gentleman has in mind, and it will also meet another situation that will confront us of the House meeting daily with no business to transact, unless a unanimous-consent request of this kind is agreed to. It also meets another practical situation that we must face with realism, and which the American public also appreciates. Individual Members in both parties are confronted with the question of their reelection, and while the Members of each party want to see its party win nationally, naturally, they are concerned with their own election, and I do not blame them. If I had a close district I know I would be very much concerned, but, fortunately, I am in the position where nomination means election. I like to think in terms of the man who is seeking reelection in a fighting district, and I know the gentleman from North Dakota wants to think in those terms. If we had business to transact, he would be here, and I would be here, but we have no further business to transact. This is only fair and proper. There is a third reason. Consideration should be extended to the necessities and the exigencies of the individual Members.

Mr. BURDICK. What will happen to those of us who have to travel 2,000 miles or more to get home?

Mr. McCORMACK. If this unanimous-consent request is granted, the Members can go home with the knowledge that they may remain there until after election day, unless something happens of an emergency nature, as has been referred to by the gentleman from Massachusetts and myself. If that should occur there would not be any difficulty on the part of the leadership. There will be a spontaneous reaction by all Members to any emergency situation that may arise.

Mr. BURDICK. The gentleman states we have wound up all the business?

Mr. McCORMACK. All legislative business, and I can assure my friend that that has been stated to me personally by President Roosevelt. He has no further recommendation. If we should recess until after election, for example, and an emergency rose, the President would call us back, but 3-day recesses meet that situation.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. In other words, the 3-day recesses puts it in the control of the House, where we all want it to be.

Mr. McCORMACK. We are continuing in an orderly way. The House continues its sessions but instead of meeting daily it meets every 3 days because of the fact there is no legislation pending which requires the action of Congress at this time.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I am sympathetic with the purpose that the gentleman has in mind, but I believe the arrangement needs some clarification. I have been one of the Members of the House who felt that Congress should remain in at least a stand-by status. I see no reason now for Congress to be in daily session, but I see every reason why we should be in such a situation that we could immediately assume legislative functions if in the judgment of any considerable number of the Members of the House they felt the House should be in session. I am wondering under this arrangement if, for instance, between now and Thursday something occurs that a good many Members of the House think should be considered on Thursday, are we going to be in the situation that we cannot consider that under this agreement?

Mr. McCORMACK. The only answer I can make to that is that if the unanimous-consent request is agreed to, this would permit one recess of 3 days and we would still be in the situation where we would have to wait until the third day. So that rather than come in next Thursday and repeat the same request to recess until next Monday, then come in and repeat it next Monday for the next 3 days, we are propounding a general request. Of course, 3-day recesses are necessary under the Constitution. We cannot adjourn or recess for longer than that period without joint action.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. This is simply what we have done a dozen times during this session.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It is more than that. I think we ought to understand what we are doing. The gentleman has stated there would be no business transacted. Now, that is pretty broad.

Mr. McCORMACK. No ordinary business.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Suppose there is something that is not controversial which needs legislative action, and this may very well happen in connection with this defense program. It has happened many times since June when lots of folks wanted us to go home. We did not go home. We ought not to tie our hands so that we cannot take up a noncontroversial matter that may be brought up which requires the action of Congress next Thursday or next Monday.

Mr. McCORMACK. My answer to that is this: Rather than incumber a unanimous-consent request with a lot of conditions, that situation can certainly be met by the leadership on both sides of the aisle. I believe that is the only practical answer that can be made. In other words, the Members may go home with the knowledge that nothing controversial of a legislative nature is going to come up; but if anything urgent comes up, which is noncontroversial, the leadership can get together and iron it out between themselves. I think we may agree to that with that thought in mind.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Suppose some Member of Congress wants a monument or a project put over in his own district, he is here and asks unanimous consent for that, you certainly are not going to permit legislation of that kind to go through?

Mr. McCORMACK. No; it would cover only something that requires immediate consideration of an emergency nature. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will understand that this "gentlemen's agreement" means that no legislative business will be transacted as long as the 3-day recesses are in operation.

Mr. RICH. A lot of things happen that the Congress does not know anything about. For instance, we sold 50 obsolete vessels, then we sold 150 tanks. They might sell the whole Navy while we are gone.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, in view of the explanation made by the gentleman from Massachusetts in response to the gentleman from Virginia, I withdraw my objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I feel very strongly that our duty is to be here at Washington. The international situation is very grave, and acts may be committed that may involve us in actual war both in the Pacific and in the Atlantic. The defense program is not going ahead the way I should like to see it go. I have been talking about aviation this morning, and I know how few airplanes the United States has. I shall go into detail regarding the administration's policy in having us unprepared in aviation defense. I realize I am outnumbered, as there as so many Members on both sides of the aisle who feel that the election of the right President, each to his own choice, is more important than our being here continuously, and as I am so greatly in the minority I should be outnumbered and voted down. Of course, I should vote against recessing, even.

May I ask the gentleman what plans are being made for the passage, for instance, of veterans' legislation? We have done practically nothing for the disabled veterans during this session of the Congress. The House has acted upon legislation but not the Senate. Does the gentleman plan to reconvene immediately after the election in order that we may pass legislation that would do justice to the veterans? I am mentioning just one or two measures that ought to be taken up; certainly, in this Congress.

Mr. McCORMACK. I do not want to get into a broadside discussion of legislation. The gentlewoman from Massachusetts knows my strong sympathy with and support of veterans' legislation.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I know that. The gentleman is very much interested in veterans' legislation, but nothing is being done at this session.

Mr. McCORMACK. I do not want to get into a discussion which might tend to confuse the request I have submitted. I want to keep the request in the form I intended, and which all Members may realize and appreciate without any lengthy argument on my part. This is a very practical way of meeting the state of mind of all Members, as I see it.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. But surely the plan is to take up legislation immediately after the election?

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course, I cannot make any statement which goes to that extent. I think it would be a brave Member of the House who would dare to predict what would happen after the election. I would rather not express an opinion on that because it is very remotely pertinent to the request I have submitted, and I would rather not get into a discussion of it.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Public opinion will demand legislative action I believe, but today I am helpless because I am outnumbered in votes. Of course I shall be in Washington for every session of Congress. I shall stay here constantly as always.

Mr. McCORMACK. I know the gentlewoman always cooperates on everything which is reasonable and proper, and this is such an instance, I submit.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. ALEXANDER. As I understand, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD will be printed on Mondays and Thursdays, and there will be an opportunity for the Members to extend in those RECORDS remarks for which permission has been granted previously?

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD will be printed to include remarks where permission has been granted. I assume that before the day is over separate consideration will be given to that feature.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. CARTER. I should like to know how this agreement may be terminated. Is it in the hands of the Speaker, is it in the hands of the majority leader, is it in the hands of the minority leader, or is it in the hands of all three of them?

Mr. McCORMACK. No, I would say that it is in the hands of the House itself, operating through the leadership, in which I assume the House has confidence.

Mr. CARTER. Some of us live a considerable distance away. Have we any assurance that on next Thursday or the Monday following or the Thursday following some Member will not object to a further continuance of the recesses? I understand that any one Member can do that.

Mr. McCORMACK. No; because by unanimous consent request is not only for the 3-day recesses but includes the provision that the House will immediately adjourn after meeting on those days. I assume the gentleman from California can have confidence in the fact that the Speaker, the minority leader, and certainly I myself will effectively carry out the gentleman's agreement that is entered into.

Mr. CARTER. The House will recess upon a unanimous-consent request to recess to the next Thursday or the next Monday?

Mr. McCORMACK. No; my unanimous-consent request is that when we adjourn we adjourn to next Thursday, and that there be a period of 3-day recesses thereafter; further, that upon the Chair's calling the House to order the House will immediately adjourn, and no business will be transacted unless the leadership agrees to it; also, that the Members of the House will be given ample notice, unless some emergency arises, as has been referred to, or unless some important legislation which does not have to do with a real emergency but relates to the national defense, and is non-controversial, comes up, and is agreed upon by the leaders.

Mr. CARTER. Is it the gentleman's understanding that the minority leader can come in on Thursday and terminate the 3-day recesses?

Mr. McCORMACK. I have such confidence in the minority leader that I know he would take no action without conferring with the Speaker or with me, and I know the gentleman from California and every Member knows that neither the Speaker nor I would take any action without conferring with the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CARTER. I am absolutely certain of that, but the point I have in mind is this. Suppose there were an honest disagreement between the Speaker and the majority leader on one side and the minority leader on the other. In what situation would that leave the minority leader?

Mr. McCORMACK. All I can say is that in trying to accomplish a practical result all anyone can do is to approximate it humanly. As human beings we cannot do everything perfectly. The situation to which the gentleman refers is one I do not believe will arise.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I do not understand from the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts that I am marooned in any way at all by this request.

Mr. McCORMACK. I cannot conceive of the gentleman's being marooned under those circumstances. I would not permit it, as far as I am personally able.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It is my understanding that this request is for a 3-day recess, and we are privileged to extend it, if we wish, on the third day.

Mr. McCORMACK. No; I assume that these are continuing 3-day recesses.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I want it thoroughly understood that I have the right, at the end of the 3 days, if the international situation becomes involved, to terminate the recess.

Mr. McCORMACK. Exactly; that is understood, but the gentleman would naturally consult with the leadership on the Democratic side prior to any termination of the gentlemen's agreement.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Oh, I can assure the gentleman from Massachusetts I would not take a single step without notifying the gentleman and the Speaker.

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course, the gentleman would not.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And I know the Speaker and my good friend from Massachusetts would not do so without notifying me, but I want it distinctly understood that the minority does not sacrifice its right of bringing the Congress into session if the international situation were such——

Mr. McCORMACK. No; and the majority does not either. [Applause.]

Mr. CARTER. Even though there might be a disagreement.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman's statement is a fair one, and that is understood. Certainly, the majority party would no more want the minority, by a gentlemen's agreement, to abdicate its responsibility than it would want to abdicate its own responsibility.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Thursday next, and that is all of the request that the gentleman submits. Is there objection?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think there is one question that ought to be cleared up about this 3-day recess. Under the Constitution of the United States this House can only adjourn for 3 days at a time except in conjunction with the Senate. So whatever agreement we enter into here can be terminated at the end of 3 days. Any Member of the House has the right to rise and object to a unanimous-consent request and then if we adjourn for 3 days at a time it will have to be by a motion. Of course, the leadership can agree on a program, but they cannot bind every Member of the House, and if the lady from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS], who spoke a while ago about wanting legislation considered, wants to object, at any time she can hold the House in session unless the House votes her down, for a 3-day session. I think that ought to be made perfectly clear before we proceed further.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. RANKIN. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am going to demand the regular order. If we are going to debate this all day, we might as well go ahead and introduce a resolution.

I demand the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. What is the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK]?

Mr. McCORMACK. My request, Mr. Speaker, is that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Thursday next, and when it meets on Thursday next that no business shall be transacted and it adjourn for 3 days at a time until further notice from the Speaker or the minority leader.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, that agreement would not be binding on the membership of the House beyond the 3-day limit. You cannot enter into an agreement now that is binding on the membership of the House as to what you will do at the end of the 3 days, but you can state your policy or what you propose to do at the end of the 3 days.

Mr. McCORMACK. My unanimous-consent request is that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Thursday next and that no business be transacted on that day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. CHURCH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded. Is there objection?

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded, and the gentleman cannot reserve the right to object.

Mr. CHURCH. I shall object until I get an answer——

The SPEAKER. There is only one thing the gentleman can do now.

Mr. CHURCH. I shall object unless I shall get an answer to a question.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

RESIGNATIONS

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resignation:

WASHINGTON, N. C.

Hon. SAM RAYBURN,
Speaker, House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I herewith submit my resignation as chairman of the Committee on Accounts, effective at the close of business October 31, 1940.

Respectfully,

LINDSAY C. WARREN.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation will be accepted.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resignation:

WASHINGTON, D. C.

Hon. SAM RAYBURN,
Speaker, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I herewith submit my resignation as chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, effective at the close of business October 31.

It is my intention to retain my membership on the committee.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN J. COCHRAN.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation will be accepted.

There was no objection.

ELECTION TO COMMITTEES

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 626) and move its adoption.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 626

Resolved, That JOHN J. COCHRAN, of Missouri, be, and he is hereby, elected chairman of the standing committee of the House of Representatives on Accounts, effective as of November 1, 1940.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a further privileged resolution (H. Res. 627) and move its adoption.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 627

Resolved, That JAMES A. O'LEARY, of New York, be, and he is hereby, elected chairman of the standing committee of the House of Representatives on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, effective as of November 1, 1940.

The resolution was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DINGELL. When the House adjourned last it was because of the lack of a quorum. I hold, and I should like a ruling from the Chair, as to whether we may transact any further business without a quorum and whether it is not essential that we proceed to determine whether there is a quorum present at this time?

The SPEAKER. Not unless the question is raised.

Mr. DINGELL. Well, I raise the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman withhold that for the time being?

Mr. DINGELL. I withdraw it temporarily.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on two subjects and include certain excerpts.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

By unanimous consent Mr. WARD was granted permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

THREE-DAY RECESSES

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I am addressing the Chair. There seems to be some confusion in regard to this question of 3-day recesses. I believe it would greatly clarify the situation if the minority leader and the majority leader were to get together and formulate a resolution in such terms that the House would thoroughly understand what we were adopting. I believe if that were done the House could very quickly come to a conclusion of the matter without any serious objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. I have made the request that by unanimous consent when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Thursday, and I believe that request meets the whole situation. We all understand, as a result of the colloquy, what will happen.

Mr. REED of New York. What I had in mind was there would be something definite before us and before the country. It will be there and it can be read and it does not provoke discussion.

Mr. McCORMACK. I know my friend is trying to help out and we only had this colloquy for that purpose. The whole colloquy was to explain my request. I simply made the unanimous consent request that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Thursday next.

Mr. REED of New York. But we have had the colloquy now and various views have been expressed. It can be very easily reduced to writing in such a way as to cover the points raised and then we will have something definite and I believe we can move along in an orderly way.

[Here the gavel fell.]

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I renew my unanimous-consent request that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Thursday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object in order to raise the question I intended to raise a while ago, if there is even an explanation that we cannot do business on Thursday or the following Monday, if we cannot do business, then you cannot adjourn this House on that day. That is doing business. Therefore if the gentleman includes that he is doing something by his action that this Congress has no right to do. If the gentleman confines his statement to that request just now made by him, then all rights are reserved until Thursday, naturally.

Mr. McCORMACK. Whether or not the gentleman is correct, I will not pass upon, but my unanimous-consent request is that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Thursday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

VETO MESSAGE—LOUIS D. FRIEDMAN

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that not knowing what the situation may be in the next few minutes, there are two additional veto messages from the President of the United States on the Speaker's table.

When the House adjourned on Thursday last the unfinished business before the House, and is, the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] that the bill H. R. 7179 and the veto message of the President, with the accompanying papers, be referred to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, and ordered to be printed.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—W. M. HURLEY AND JOE WHITSON (H. DOC. NO. 974)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and together with the accompanying papers, was, on motion of Mr. RAMSPECK, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, H. R. 775, an act authorizing payment of the sum of $500 to W. M. Hurley, and the sum of $1,500 to Joe Whitson, for damages to their property situated in the city of North Little Rock, Ark., as a result of the alleged failure of the United States to keep in repair a dike constructed on the Arkansas River.

As shown by the reports of the Secretary of War to the Claims Committee of the House, the damage to the claimants' property resulted not from a lack of maintenance of the adjacent dike structure by the Government, but rather as a result of unprecedented high-river conditions obtaining in February, 1938, and the impingement of the floodwater due to the dumping of old automobiles and other refuse in the river.

It is true that the Government has heretofore accepted responsibility for damage due to the deepening of a canal. This case, however, involves an improvement in a natural channel in aid of navigation in pursuance of authority conferred by law, constitutional and statutory. In making this improvement for the benefit of navigation, the Government did not impliedly contract with adjoining or nearby landowners, or assume a moral obligation to keep it in repair and protect them from the consequences of a break. It has not been shown that the improvement itself, either directly or indirectly, caused the damage, although by additional expenditure of public funds for inspection, policing, and maintenance, the damage might have been prevented.

To assume responsibility in this case would imply an obligation to do so in every case of a similar nature and thus entail a financial burden which, in the aggregate, it would be difficult to estimate and improper to assume. It has been consistently held by our courts that the Government is not responsible for the consequential effects of such improvements and it is not believed that such a responsibility should now be added to the already heavy cost thereof.

I regret, therefore, that I do not feel justified, for the reasons above indicated, in approving the bill.

VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—LUTHER HADEN (H. DOC. NO. 973)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States which was read and together with the accompanying papers was on motion of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK] referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, H. R. 8743, "for the relief of Luther Haden."

It is the purpose of the bill to pay the sum of $1,500 to Luther Haden, of Columbus, Ga., in settlement of his claims against the United States for personal injuries suffered by him on October 21, 1938, as the result of an explosion in the Muscogee County jail, where he was held as a Federal prisoner.

It is a regular and lawful practice to house Federal prisoners in local jails. From aught that appears, this was a suitable and proper place in which to confine the prisoner. The Federal Government was not an insurer of the prisoner's safety. It owed him the duty of exercising reasonable care for his safety, and this duty was fully performed. If the injury was due to negligence either in permitting gas to accumulate in the furnace room or causing its ignition, the responsibility is on the local authorities for not keeping the premises in a safe condition. It may be assumed that a claim filed with the local government would receive appropriate consideration. The liability, if any, is tortious rather than contractual.

I regret, therefore, that I do not feel justified in approving the bill.

STATE HOME-GUARD UNITS

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 10495) to amend section 61 of the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, by adding a proviso which will permit States to organize military units not a part of the National Guard, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment, and to concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That section 61 of the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, be amended to read as follows:

"'No State shall maintain troops in time of peace other than as authorized in accordance with the organization prescribed under this act: Provided, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed as limiting the rights of the States and Territories in the use of the National Guard within their respective borders in time of peace: Provided further, That nothing contained in this act shall prevent the organization and maintenance of State police or constabulary: Provided further, That under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe for discipline in training, the organization by and maintenance within any State of such military forces other than National Guard as may be provided by the laws of such State is hereby authorized while any part of the National Guard of the State concerned is in active Federal service: Provided further, That such forces shall not be called, ordered, or in any manner drafted, as such, into the military services of the United States; however, no person shall, by reason of his membership in any such unit, be exempted from military service under any Federal law: And provided further, That the Secretary of War in his discretion and under regulations determined by him, is authorized to issue, from time to time, for the use of such military units, to any State, upon requisition of the Governor thereof, such arms and equipment as may be in possession of and can be spared by the War Department.'"

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand, Congress voted to take over the State militia. Does this bill contemplate the establishment of another militia in the various States under the same rules and regulations that the National Guard was established?

Mr. THOMASON. If the gentleman does not mind, I will ask the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SMITH] to answer, as he is familiar with the details.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. The units established under this bill would be State units whose obligations would be to perform the duties of the National Guard while the National Guard units are outside of the States. Such units are necessary in some States for the guarding of waterworks and other public utilities against sabotage. A number of the States feel they should have some military units at hand.

The Federal Government has some equipment it can lend to the States, including, as the gentleman knows, a great number of rifles to arm such units. It is practically the same system that was used at the time of the World War when the National Guard was called from the States and the so-called State guard was set up.

Many of the States have already gone ahead and organized these units, but they need equipment and arms. These guard units have been officered in many cases by former National Guard officers who have either retired or resigned, and by World War veterans beyond the age limit for active military service.

The prohibition in the Defense Act against the maintenance of troops outside of the National Guard was held to prohibit the War Department from lending any equipment to any State unit outside of the National Guard except to those few known as the Ancient Corps under section 63 of the act. There has been a dispute as to the constitutionality of trying to prevent any militia unit from being set up by a State under this section of the Defense Act; but regardless of the question of constitutionality of the existing provision of the Defense Act there is no question but that the legislation we have here is necessary before the Federal Government could lend equipment to the States; and it is necessary in order to make effective these State units which many of the States, including New York, Connecticut, Texas, and others, are now setting up to take the place of the guard while the guard is away in the Federal service.

Mr. RICH. When the bill was passed under which the National Guard was ordered into the Regular Army service for a year I objected because I realized that the States would need some kind of organization to guard the public property and maintain order if necessary. That was my principal reason for objecting to the Federal Government's putting them into the Regular Army. We now find out that I was right, that the States do need some kind of effective military organization to deal with emergencies.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. We find that both are necessary.

Mr. RICH. I am glad some kind of legislation has been brought into set-up units to take the place of the National Guard. Let me ask this further question if the gentleman will permit: Is the Federal Government going to aid and assist the States in maintaining the forces to be established under this bill outside of furnishing the arms?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. No; there is no provision for any Federal aid in this bill beyond the furnishing of arms and equipment if the Government has them to lend.

Mr. RICH. Has the committee had request from various States seeking to establish organizations of this kind?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Yes. My own State is one that is proceeding.

Mr. RICH. If we are being called upon to furnish them guns will we not also be called upon to furnish them other assistance?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. I do not think that follows necessarily.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. COOLEY. In the State of North Carolina every unit of the National Guard has gone into the Federal service. At the present time we do not have any National Guard in the whole State. Do I understand that under this bill the Federal Government will lend equipment to the State governments?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Insofar as equipment is available, yes.

Mr. COOLEY. For the purpose of equipping the home guard?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Yes, insofar as the War Department has the equipment. At the present time, as I say, we have plenty of rifles. There are over 2,000,000 rifles on hand now.

Mr. COOLEY. How about ammunition for those rifles?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. There will be some ammunition available.

Mr. RICH. Then do I understand that the Federal Government will not contribute anything to the maintenance of the home guard, but that is a matter that will have to be left entirely to the States?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. There is no provision for it in this bill. The immediate purpose of this bill is to obtain equipment for them. We have not gone any further in view of the legislative situation and the lack of time right now to go into it any more thoroughly. The National Guard, of course, is called out for only 1 year under the present situation, so that this is more or less a temporary set-up to take the place of the guard while the guard is in the Federal service.

Mr. COOLEY. Is the only purpose of the legislation that we are now considering to authorize the lending of equipment now available to the States?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. To authorize the States to maintain these units outside the National Guard and to lend equipment to them.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand it, this bill is absolutely necessary if the States are to have any units at all during the time that the National Guard is in the Federal service? It is also necessary if the States are to get any help at all from the Federal Government in the way of arms, ammunition, or equipment?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Certainly it is necessary if the Federal Government is to furnish them arms, ammunition, and equipment. There is some question as to whether the present prohibition against the States maintaining units outside the National Guard, which is now in the law, is effective, but this removes any question about that. This makes it clear that the States may maintain the units and the Government may lend the States such equipment and arms as it has available.

Mr. ELSTON. This bill, as I understand it, was unanimously passed by the House and unanimously passed the Senate with certain amendments?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. I think there was one vote against it in the Senate, if I recall correctly. It was reported by the House committee unanimously. It passed the House and was amended in the Senate very little and these were restrictive amendments, which provided that the Secretary of War shall prescribe legislation for the training and discipline of the units, and providing that the units themselves could not be called into the Federal service as units. In other words, they would remain as State troops.

Mr. ELSTON. Is there anything in the restrictive amendment passed by the Senate which would preclude the Governor of any State from calling those troops into any kind of service the Governor may see fit?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Not at all.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON]?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—GRACE MURPHY (H. DOC. NO. 970)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, H. R. 2214, Seventy-sixth Congress, third session, entitled "An act for the relief of M. Grace Murphy, administratrix of the estate of John H. Murphy, deceased."

This enactment would authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to M. Grace Murphy, Boston, Mass., administratrix of the estate of John H. Murphy, deceased, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $125,000, in full settlement of all claims against the United States for compensation for services performed and expenses incurred by John H. Murphy, deceased, in connection with sale to the Government of Poland of certain surplus war materials.

Shortly after the World War the United States Government was in possession of quantities of various railroad equipment of continental type, of which 7,554 railroad cars were disposed of by contracts of conditional sale to the U. S. A. International Corporation. Mr. John H. Murphy, the deceased husband of the beneficiary of this enactment, was the executive sales head and a stockholder of this corporation. As representative of the corporation he sailed for Europe and entered into negotiations with Serbia and Bulgaria for the sale of the cars, but was, for various reasons, unable to consummate the sale and returned to the United States. At this time the conditional sales contracts between the United States and the corporation had expired under their terms for nonpayment of the installments due. An initial payment of $201,318, paid under one of the contracts, was, after the cancelation of the contract, covered into the Treasury to the credit of the United States as liquidated damages.

Following conferences with the Secretary of War and other Government officials, Mr. Murphy returned to Europe in a further attempt to dispose of the cars on his own initiative, apparently in the hope of recouping the losses of the corporation. He succeeded in interesting the Polish Government in the matter and was responsible to a degree for the institution of negotiations looking to the purchase of the cars by that Government. However, this transaction was never consummated, but, on the contrary, was abandoned by the Polish Government and by the United States Government. If he had been the procuring agency in effecting this sale, it would be appropriate for the Government to compensate Mr. Murphy for efforts which resulted in a financial benefit to the United States. However, he was unable to effect a sale and thereafter the cars were offered for sale on competitive bids and the Polish Government, one of 11 bidders, was awarded 7,554 freight cars, the consideration being $1,208,640 in cash and $3,625,920 in 6-year 5-percent notes. It cannot be said, however, that the interest of the Polish Government in this purchase was due, save only in slight degree, to the efforts of Mr. Murphy, since the Polish Government had previously purchased 4,600 similar cars from the United States Government; and it was a matter of public knowledge that the cars in question were on the market.

The beneficiary of this enactment filed suit in the Court of Claims for $731,281.85, alleged to represent the commission for supplying the purchaser for the cars. The court dismissed the petition and, after fully setting forth the facts, stated in its opinion as follows:

* * * We find no precedent sustaining a contention that the department was liable for broker's commission for a sale of property conducted under its own initiative, by its own officers, and in accord with its own terms and conditions exclusively. * * * (68 Ct. Cls. 149 at 168.)

I agree with this view expressed by the Court of Claims. While it appears that Mr. Murphy was diligent and active in his efforts to effect a sale, it is clear that he was unable to do so. It also appears that he was not the procuring cause of the sale subsequently made to the Polish Government after competitive bidding. In this view approval of this enactment is objectionable, because it would mark a departure from the general law and likewise establish a precedent contrary to sound policy.

VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—EDWARD WORKMAN (H. DOC. NO. 969)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, a bill (H. R. 428) entitled "An act for the relief of Edward Workman."

This legislation would provide for the payment of the sum of $3,000 as compensation for the death of his 3-year-old son, who was run over by a Civilian Conservation Corps truck.

It appears that on September 2, 1936, Mr. Workman parked his car on a highway near the Wawasee State Fish Hatchery in the State of Indiana, to permit his child to get a drink from a well located nearby. The father remained seated in his car. In order to reach the well it was necessary for the child to walk across a side road which entered the main highway. The child was struck and killed by an approaching Civilian Conservation Corps truck.

While there is some dispute as to the circumstances immediately preceding and following the accident, and it is evident that the driver of the truck failed to see the child, it does not satisfactorily appear that this was due to negligence on his part or that the Government could be held legally responsible if it should waive immunity and permit an action in tort to be brought against it.

The bereaved family is entitled to our most profound sympathy. From the evidence available, however, it is not believed that an award of compensation would be justified in this case.

VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—BOLINROSS CHEMICAL CO. (H. DOC. NO. 972)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I am returning herewith, without my approval, H. R. 8868, a bill "Conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claims of the Bolinross Chemical Co., Inc."

The claims are based upon alleged destruction, wantonly and unnecessarily, of machinery, equipment, raw materials, and finished products, and the consequent loss of business, by reason of a raid on the chemical plant of the company at Newark, N. J., by prohibition agents of the United States on or about February 20, 1929. The aggregate amount of loss and damage claimed is $200,000.

The records of the Treasury Department show that on February 20, 1929, certain Federal prohibition inspectors and a Government chemist, attached to the Newark office of the Prohibition Administrator, made an inspection of the premises of the Bolinross Chemical Co. and discovered a still being used in violation of the National Prohibition Act and the internal revenue laws in the production of alcohol fit for beverage purposes by the redistillation, or "cleaning," of ethyl acetate. The practice of "cleaning" ethyl acetate, that is, the recovery of alcohol therefrom, was at this time developing throughout the country into a prolific source of frauds upon the internal revenue. Upon discovering that the National Prohibition Act and the internal-revenue laws were apparently being violated in their presence, the prohibition inspectors arrested the persons found to be involved, including certain officers and employees of the plant.

Upon arresting the persons involved, the Government officials seized certain personal property consisting of distillery equipment and contraband liquors. The seized property was removed from the premises. A libel of condemnation was filed in due course and an order of forfeiture entered against the seized property. In pursuance to the decree of condemnation, the United States marshal destroyed the seized illicit distillery apparatus and contraband liquors, and sold the junk metal recovered. The proceeds, $130, were turned over by the marshal to the collector of internal revenue and deposited into the Treasury in accordance with law.

The seizures made on the premises of this claimant were authorized under title II of the National Prohibition Act and sections 3257, 3259, 3260, 3281, and 3453 of the Revised Statutes. The Department records show that the case was handled throughout in accordance with laws and regulations in force at the time.

There is nothing to distinguish this claim from a large number of other claims of this character, which have been denied, except that part of the claim for "the loss" of claimant's "business."

As the result of an exhaustive investigation conducted by the Department, it has been ascertained that the claimant company was on the verge of receivership at the time the Government officials made the seizures above-described. At the time the seizures were made, February 20, 1929, the claimant was unable to meet its obligations as shown by the fact that it was without sufficient funds to pay its rent or the salaries of its employees.

The company had been organized and commenced operations less than 2 years before with equipment purchased from a bankrupt concern for $5,000 by one of the incorporators named Lindsley, who also provided the initial working capital amounting to $10,000 and contributed further assistance as the company needed it. Shortly before the raid and seizure in February 1929 Lindsley withdrew from the company because he was convinced it was going to fail. It went into receivership in April 1929 listing assets worth $3,000, according to an affidavit filed by one Frederick G. Ross, a stockholder and officer who had previously filed a petition for voluntary individual bankruptcy and who subequently obtained his final discharge in July 1929.

The receivership was revived in 1936 on petition of Ross who had meanwhile acquired all the stock of the company, alleging that he might have a valid claim against the United States Government for illegal entry on the company's premises. Although Ross was one of the incorporators and original stockholders, it appears unlikely that he invested any substantial amount in the company prior to the receivership in view of his then pending personal bankruptcy and the sworn statement of Lindsley that he was the only one who put money into it.

It is noted that a grand jury declined to return an indictment against the persons arrested at the time of the raid. Neither the company itself nor the receiver, however, saw fit at that time to contest the libel proceedings, or make any effort to prove that the raid and seizure of the company's property was unwarranted.

From the circumstances above recited and other facts disclosed by the investigation into the company's affairs, it is evident that the company's failure was due to natural causes rather than to the seizure and destruction of equipment by the prohibition inspectors. After a lapse of 10 years, during which records and witnesses disappear and memories become stale, the Government is hardly called upon to submit voluntarily to the risk of litigation and possible heavy damages on a claim so apparently lacking in genuine and substantial merit.

For the reasons stated herein, I withhold my approval.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the bill and the message be referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—CLEVELAND NATIONAL FOREST, CALIF. (H. DOC. NO. 971)

The Speaker laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I am returning herewith, without my approval, H. R. 2728, entitled, "An act to add certain lands to the Cleveland National Forest in Orange County, Calif."

This enrolled bill would authorize an appropriation of not to exceed $45,000 for the purchase of a tract of approximately 1,000 acres for addition to the Cleveland National Forest. An investigation of this area indicates that the chief value of these lands is for recreational purposes.

While their use for outdoor recreation ranks high among the many public values of our national forests, I do not believe justification can be found for adding at this time to these extensive areas, by purchase, lands which are primarily recreational in character. It is my feeling that Federal land purchase activities should, for the present, be confined to the most critical areas of maladjustment in land use.

CIVILIAN CONSERVATION CORPS

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 4338) to establish a Civilian Conservation Corps, and for other purposes, for immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey?

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, I see the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN], a member on the minority side of the Committee on Labor, is present. Does the gentleman wish to say anything about this bill?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, as I understand this bill there is a provision in the law with reference to C. C. C. camps on Indian reservations that prohibits the enlistment of anyone for more than 2 years except one mess cook, three other employees, and veterans, and now you are adding Indians to these exemptions.

Mrs. NORTON. May I say to the gentleman that the bill has for its purpose the removal of the restriction on the length of service of Indian enrollees in the Civilian Conservation Corps. Indian enrollees are mature men; they are not boys. The work they are doing is continuing work on conservation on Indian reservations. I would say that most of these Indians are stationed in Alaska and, although many of the States would also profit by this amendment, the condition in Alaska is very acute. I am sure the Delegate from Alaska would be very glad to explain the situation regarding Indian enrollees in Alaska.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I am a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs. May I inform the Members of the House that the Committee on Indian Affairs has held extensive hearings on many bills concerning Indians. We have found that many thousand American Indians are ill-housed, ill-fed, and ill-clothed—so many, in fact, that our committee unanimously reported out the O'Connor bill to authorize the appropriation of $10,000,000 to take care of those needy Indians. I understand that the passage of this bill will permit the Government to utilize and pay for the services of many of these ill-housed, ill-clothed, and ill-fed Indians. The passage of this bill will therefore be in the interest of the Federal Treasury as well as the Indians, who will be employed doing useful and necessary work on the Indian reservations.

Mr. DIMOND. The gentleman is quite right. The situation in Alaska particularly is terribly acute, although this bill has Nation-wide scope. I introduced a similar bill in the House for the purpose principally of serving the Alaskan natives. They need the help which this measure will give them, and they need it now. Their economic condition is tragically low. If some of them can be continued upon the C. C. C. work, as the gentleman from Wisconsin said, it will save the Federal Treasury money in another respect and will be a distinct benefit to them and to the whole citizenry of Alaska.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the law as it stands today limits the enrollment to a period of 6 months except for one mess cook and a couple of other cooks, and veterans. Now we have fixed it so the Indians can enlist for 2 years along with the veterans.

Mr. DIMOND. It removes the limitation, yes; whatever the legal limitation is.

Mr. HOFFMAN. It extends the period of enlistment for the Indians. I have Indians in my district, but we have no C. C. C. camps for them.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I believe the legislation is clarifying because in the first part of the paragraph the Indians are included, and I feel that the failure to repeat the word later was an error in drafting the bill.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Oh, no.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I may say also that I believe this is clearly in the interest of the Federal Treasury, because if these Indians are not permitted to work they have to be fed anyway, and you will have the expense without getting anything for it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I shall not object, but there should not be any misunderstanding about it. This creates a new class, and that is all there is to it.

Mr. DIMOND. It exempts the Indians from the present limitation in the law with respect to continuity of employment in C. C. C. camps.

Mr. HORTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, do I understand this has to do with work in Civilian Conservation Corps camps only?

Mr. DIMOND. That is all.

Mr. HORTON. And through the C. C. C. it does give additional work to the Indians?

Mr. DIMOND. It may give additional work to the Indians, and, of course, it will permit them to be carried as C. C. C. enrollees beyond the time they otherwise would be obliged to go off the rolls. It particularly takes care of the older Indians who cannot get jobs anywhere else. It is one of the most beneficial things I can think of. It is true that during the summer season many of the Indians of Alaska are employed in fishing, but their income from that occupation is generally so meager that it will not support them and their families during the winter, and in the winter season no other occupation or employment is available for most of them. A few engage in trapping but ordinarily fur-bearing animals are not abundant, with the result that little income can be derived from that type of work. During the last few years the C. C. C. has supplied much needed work for a considerable number of the natives, and many of those so employed are rapidly approaching the time when they can no longer be accepted as C. C. C. enrollees. If they are cut off from the C. C. C., numbers of them will suffer severely, and, as indicated by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE], it will be necessary to furnish them with some other form of aid. Winter is now approaching and we must have relief at once if suffering is to be avoided. Therefore, I hope and urge that this bill be passed today. It is a Senate bill, and if passed by this House will go direct to the President for his approval. The bill is recommended by the C. C. C. authorities and by the Bureau of Indian Affairs. Mr. B. Frank Heintzleman, Regional Forester for Alaska, under whose supervision C. C. C. work in Alaska is carried on, and who is intimately familiar with the needs of the natives, has written me on several occasions urging prompt action.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 8 of the act entitled "An act to establish a Civilian Conservation Corps, and for other purposes," approved June 28, 1937 (50 Stat. 319), as amended by the act of May 12, 1938 (52 Stat. 349), is further amended by adding after the words "War veterans" in the second proviso of said section the following: "and Indians."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ARLINGTON FARM, VIRGINIA

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 4107) to transfer the jurisdiction of the Arlington Farm, Virginia, to the jurisdictions of the War Depart and the Department of the Interior, and for other purposes.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 1, 2, and 3, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by the House amendment insert the following:

"Sec. 4. The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to transfer to the Secretary of the Interior a right of way two hundred feet wide extending from a point near the southeast corner of the Arlington Cemetery in a northeasterly direction to the Boundary Channel, in order to provide an adequate approach road to the Arlington Memorial Bridge, the construction of which road is hereby authorized, and, with the approval of the President, to transfer to the Secretary of the Interior until needed such other lands transferred to or acquired by the Secretary of War under this Act as may not be immediately necessary for military purposes."

And the House agree to the same.

ELBERT D. THOMAS,
WARREN R. AUSTIN,
CHAN GURNEY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 4107) to transfer the jurisdiction of the Arlington Farm, Virginia, to the jurisdictions of the War Department and the Department of the Interior, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate bill transferred that part of Arlington Farm west of the Rosslyn connecting railroad from the Secretary of Agriculture to the Secretary of War. That part of the farm lying east of the Rosslyn connecting railroad was transferred from the Secretary of Agriculture to the Secretary of the Interior.

Under the House amendments and the conference agreement, the entire farm is transferred to the Secretary of War.

The Senate bill authorized an appropriation of $4,000,000 to enable the Secretary of War to acquire land adjacent to the land transferred to him under the bill. It also authorized an appropriation of $1,000,000 to enable the Secretary of the Interior to acquire land adjacent to the land transferred to him under the bill.

Under the House amendments and the conference agreement, an appropriation of $5,000,000 is authorized to enable the Secretary of War to acquire land adjacent to the land transferred to him, which under the House amendments and the conference agreement is the entire farm.

The House amendments and the conference agreement contain a provision, which was not in the Senate bill, under which, if the purchase of additional land meets the requirements of the War Department, the Secretary of War may allow the Secretary of Agriculture to continue the operation of the Arlington Experiment Station at its present site.

The Senate bill provided for the transfer by the Secretary of War to the Secretary of the Interior of a right of way to provide an approach road to the Arlington Memorial Bridge and authorized the construction of such road. The House amendment struck this out. The conference agreement restores this provision.

The House amendment struck out that part of the Senate bill which provided for the transfer to and acquisition by the Secretary of the Interior of land. The conference agreement authorizes the transfer, by the Secretary of War, with the approval of the President, of land to the Secretary of the Interior. Lands transferred are to be such as may not be immediately necessary for military purposes, and they are to be transferred until needed for such purposes.

To accomplish the above results, the Senate recedes on amendments numbered 1, 2, and 3, and the Senate recedes with an amendment on amendment numbered 4.

The conference agreement adopts the House title to the bill.

MARVIN JONES,
H. P. FULMER,
CLIFFORD R. HOPE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. In the transfer of this property we presume the gentleman from Texas is going to carry out as nearly as he can the request that the Department of Agriculture use the experimental station it has about 10 miles out on the Baltimore Pike, rather than purchase expensive land near the District costing from $2,000 to $5,000 an acre.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I took that matter up with them and urged that they do it. I assure the gentleman, too, that I took up the other question of the purchase of expensive land, and they assured me they had an option on land that could be had for an average of about $300 an acre for such extra land as they may need, so that will handle the situation.

Mr. RICH. I congratulate the gentleman from Texas in getting them to do that.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I thank the gentleman. I am in thorough accord with the sentiment the gentleman expressed on that matter the other day.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOPE. I should like to have the gentleman tell the House whether or not this bill contains all the House amendments and one additional amendment.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes; the Senate accepted all the House amendments and all the House restrictions. Then we added one additional amendment which permits building of a road from the Arlington Cemetery to the Arlington Memorial Bridge, and also permits transfer temporarily to the Department of the Interior, until needed, of any part which may not be immediately needed for military purposes.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

OVERTIME COMPENSATION FOR EMPLOYEES OF THE FIELD SERVICES OF THE WAR DEPARTMENT AND THE FIELD SERVICES OF THE PANAMA CANAL

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4208) establishing overtime rates for compensation for employees of the field service of the War Department and the field service of the Panama Canal, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what are these services for which you are proposing to pay overtime?

Mr. RAMSPECK. The Secretary of War and the Assistant Secretary of War, Mr. Patterson, say that they have the legal authority now to pay overtime to certain employees of the War Department in the arsenals and at the Panama Canal, but as to others they have not this authority and this creates a bad administrative situation. They have recommended this bill, which has passed the Senate, and it is my understanding we have given the same authority to the Navy Department as to the Navy yards.

I have here a letter from both Secretary of War Stimson and Assistant Secretary of War Patterson urging the immediate passage of this legislation.

Mr. RICH. Is it going to be the purpose of the War Department now to continue to give greater compensation to these Government employees that work overtime instead of trying to take the people that are on the relief rolls and give them jobs? What we want to do is to put the men who are on W. P. A. and other organizations of that kind to work. That was the intent and purpose of the law, and we should not permit the Army or any other branch of the Government to do anything that would defeat that purpose.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I agree with what the gentleman has said, but at the same time there are certain vocations and certain situations where I think the War Department needs this authority, and I am certainly not going to put my judgment up against the judgment of Secretary Stimson and Assistant Secretary Patterson when they say they need this legislation to speed up national defense.

Mr. RICH. Is it going to be their purpose to try to give overtime pay to employees rather than to take men who have not jobs now and put them in these places, if they can do so?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I cannot speak for them, but I would certainly believe they would employ new people wherever they could and avoid the overtime, because the overtime costs more, of course, than straight time, and I am quite sure that is what they will do.

Mr. RICH. Can the gentleman assure us that that is what they are going to do? We cannot assume that these Government heads are going to do anything because they have done so many things in the last 7 or 8 years that they should not have done, and the only way to stop it is to make sure that such action is not taken in legislation of this sort.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Of course, the gentleman from Pennsylvania knows that I cannot speak for the Secretary of War or the Assistant Secretary of War, but we have given this authority to the Secretary of the Navy and as to some employees they now have overtime in the War Department. We passed the act of July 2, 1940, Public, No. 703, applying to laborers and mechanics employed by the War Department, giving this authority as to those employees, and section 23 of title II of the act of March 28, 1934, applies to several trades and occupations which gives the War Department this authority.

Mr. RICH. Let me ask the gentleman this question. If we do not pass this legislation, will the Secretary have to go out and get other men to do this work?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I think there are some categories covered by this legislation where you cannot get additional men because there is a scarcity in these positions.

Mr. RICH. I can appreciate that because the same thing applies in industry.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes.

Mr. RICH. But we have put the screws on industry and we tell them they have got to do certain things, and now we ought to put the screws on some of these departments and make them realize that some of the legislation we have passed ought to be made a little more flexible, and if the men over in the Senate had passed the bill to give the National Labor Relations Board some powers that were granted in the House bill, rather than the legislation that was first passed, we would be a whole lot better off in this country.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. If consent is granted for the consideration of this bill, will the gentleman take a few moments of time to explain the measure to the Members of the House?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I will be glad to read the explanation that the Secretary of War and the Assistant Secretary of War have made.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is it the purpose of this bill to synchronize the law so that it fits the Wages and Hours Act?

Mr. RAMSPECK. No; that has nothing to do with it so far as I know. My understanding is that the War Department finds itself in this situation: They have authority now to pay overtime for some employees in the arsenals and in the Panama Canal. There are other employees whom they cannot work overtime. Therefore it makes a bad administrative situation. It is bad for the morale and it is impeding the progress of our national defense.

The bill was introduced in the House by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CLASON]. We took up the Senate bill because it passed the Senate before we acted on the House bill. There is nothing partisan about it. It is recommended by the Secretary of War and the Assistant Secretary. It is a matter of national defense, and that is the only reason I am asking to take it up now.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will you tell us whether this bill will make national defense cost more than it would otherwise?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Of course, if they pay overtime it will cost more money, but it will expedite our defense plans.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I put in the RECORD the other day some letters which show that at Fort Custer they charged all the way from $25 for common labor to $45 for membership in these organizations which are doing the work. I would like to know the gentleman's idea on the logic of the thing—paying these men who are working on this job overtime and then limiting the jobs to those who will pay for the privilege of working—and some men cannot pay.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Of course, I cannot go into a discussion now of some other matter that involves a different question entirely. As far as I know, the United States Government has never limited its employment to people who belong to any particular organization.

Mr. HOFFMAN. You say it has not?

Mr. RAMSPECK. So far as I know, it has not.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Well, that is not my understanding. Now, you want to pay overtime to these men who are working on these jobs. That will not help those men any if those who have control of the employment boost the fee for the privilege of working on the job. What you give them here they will take away from them by special assessment or in fees for membership.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Of course, I do not know of any such situation in the Government service as the gentleman has referred to.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Well, I put it in the RECORD the other day.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I have not read it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I know, but it is in there just the same. It is a fact that there is plenty of this grafting all over the country.

Mr. RAMSPECK. The gentleman ought to be willing to trust the Secretary of War and the Assistant Secretary of War not to engage in any such bad practice as he has indicated.

Mr. HOFFMAN. No. But you do not have any idea I would get anywhere with that?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Well, they came from the gentleman's own party.

Mr. HOFFMAN. No; they are backsliders, forgotten their religion—political, at least. But if I come back and some of the conservative Democrats are back here I will discuss it right away next session after election and if the election goes the way I hope it will we will surely get some action

Mr. NICHOLS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. NICHOLS. This does not blanket anyone in under the civil service, does it?

Mr. RAMSPECK. No. This has nothing to do with civil service.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. This is a much needed measure, as I understand, in the national defense?

Mr. RAMSPECK. That is my information.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. We do not have enough trained workers and they wish to make some such arrangement?

Mr. RAMSPECK. That is my information from the Secretary of War and the Assistant Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions of any other law, compensation for employment in excess of 40 hours in any administrative workweek computed at a rate not less than 1½ times the regular rate is hereby authorized to be paid at such places and to such monthly, per diem, hourly, and piece-work employees of the field services of the War Department and the field services of the Panama Canal whose wages are set by wage boards or other wage-fixing authorities, and also to professional and subprofessional employees, and to blueprinters, photostat and rotaprint operators, inspectors, storekeepers, toolkeepers, and shop superintendents of the CAF service, as defined by the Classification Act of March 4, 1923 (42 Stat. 1488; 5 U. S. C., ch. 13, as amended, as shall be designated from time to time by the Secretary of War or the Governor of the Panama Canal, as the case may be, and the Secretary of War and the Governor of the Panama Canal are authorized to prescribe for their respective services, regulations for overtime employment for said employees or any of them: Provided, That in determining the overtime compensation of the foregoing per annum Government employees the pay for 1 day shall be considered to be one three-hundred-and-sixtieth of their respective per annum salaries.

SEC. 2. The provisions of this act shall be effective during the national emergency declared by the President on September 8, 1939, to exist, and shall terminate June 30, 1942, unless the Congress shall otherwise provide.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SIUSLAW NATIONAL FOREST

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 1433) to add certain lands to the Siuslaw National Forest in the State of Oregon.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to know something about this bill and what this is for?

Mr. DOXEY. I will be delighted to briefly tell the gentleman from Pennsylvania what this bill proposes. I assure him this is one bill that will not cost the Government anything. I think it is a bill that will economize for the Government. I base that on this statement: This involves about 78,000 acres of land in western Oregon. There are about 38,000 acres of this land that lies within the Siuslaw National Forest. About 38,000 acres are without the boundaries of this national forest. The title at the present time is in the Government. It was purchased under a resettlement project. This resettlement project has proven a failure for the reason that that land was adapted to timber raising and pasturage and other uses than farming uses. Now the Government has this land there and it is not being utilized and it is a fire hazard to the national forest contiguous thereto.

This is a Senate bill in which Senator McNARY is vitally interested. It was passed by the Senate and I am asking unanimous consent to pass it just as the Senate did.

All this bill does is to put this 78,000 acres of land under the jurisdiction of the Forest Service to manage and administer under the law of March 1, 1911, as they do other lands within the national forests.

Mr. RICH. Did the Public Lands Committee of the House consider this bill?

Mr. DOXEY. No. This came to the Committee on Agriculture. With all due deference to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I may state that the Public Lands Committee considers bills authorizing the purchase of new lands to add to the national forests, but bills dealing with the administration of the forests come to the Committee on Agriculture for consideration. This bill was reported out unanimously.

Mr. RICH. Bills that deal with the public lands naturally ought to come from the Public Lands Committee. That is a function of the committee, it seems to me. It does not seem right that we should now, by unanimous consent, permit a bill to take over 78,000 acres of land and put it into a national park.

Mr. DOXEY. This is not to be placed in any national park. It is quite evident the gentleman from Pennsylvania does not know the difference between a national park and a national forest.

Mr. RICH. It is one of the Federal Housing projects, at least.

Mr. DOXEY. No.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman said that the 78,000 acres was in one of them.

Mr. DOXEY. In a resettlement area; yes.

Mr. RICH. They made a failure of them. Now you want to put it in under the Forest Service. If you can tell me how you can put this under the Forest Service and the Forest Service not spend any money on it, I wish the gentleman would. That is what always happens.

Mr. DOXEY. I do not care whether the gentleman objects or not; it is immaterial to me. I am trying to render a public service.

Mr. RICH. Then if the gentleman does not care whether I object or not, I object, Mr. Speaker, because I think the Public Lands Committee ought to act on this bill.

Mr. DOXEY. That suits me exactly. It is Senator McNary's bill. Object if you want to.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

GENERAL AUTHORITY FOR EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members of the House, notwithstanding any adjournment or recess of the House, may have the privilege for 30 calendar days to revise and extend their own remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on more than one subject, if they so desire, and may also include therein such short quotations as may be necessary to explain or complete such extensions of remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK]?

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I hope the gentleman will include the same proviso that the Speaker, then majority leader, a year ago was willing to add at the end when a similar resolution passed unanimously a year ago. Mr. Speaker, that is the proviso that quotations from reports of committees of Congress shall be from such reports only as have been submitted officially and printed as documents by order of the House, by law, or pursuant to the rules of the House.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is agreeable to me. I will incorporate that as part of my request.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, we are going to leave now until after election. Is this going to be an opportunity for the Members to make political speeches, shoot them in here to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, then have them printed by the thousands and franked out to the public as political propaganda? Is that the idea of a unanimous-consent request of this kind?

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course, I cannot answer that question. That is a matter up to the Members' own conscience. I saw only the other night a speech that was sent around the congressional district of a gentleman from Maryland where some remarks were made by a Republican Member of the House from Kansas attacking the Member from Maryland. There were a number of thousands of those speeches sent into that Member's district. Of course, whether that should be done is in the conscience of each individual Member.

Mr. RICH. I do not think it should be done.

Mr. McCORMACK. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. RICH. I hope the membership of the House will confine themselves to good, sound American business and things that pertain to the Government. I do not think a lot of this hokum stuff that has been put into the RECORD ought to go in.

Mr. McCORMACK. I agree with the gentleman, but who has control over that but the Member's own conscience?

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I say to the gentleman that the criticism which went into Maryland about a certain Representative from Maryland has helped him, and if that type is coming from the other side of the aisle, I hope more will be forthcoming.

Mr. RICH. If the gentleman thinks the Members on this side are the ones who are throwing the mud in the RECORD, may I say there is a lot of stuff that has gone in from that side of the House that nobody will approve.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK]?

There was no objection.

CORRECTION OF JOURNAL

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to correct the RECORD on roll call 54, this session, in which the RECORD states I was absent. I was present at this roll call and answered "present," and I ask that the RECORD and Journal be changed to correspond to the facts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ANGELL]?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to correct the RECORD with reference to roll call No. 120 on July 5, 1939. I am marked absent. I was present and voted "present."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ANGELL]?

There was no objection.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, on roll call No. 10, on February 3, 1939, which appears in the permanent edition of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at page 1128, I am recorded as not voting, but as having a general pair with my colleague from Ohio, Mr. SWEENEY. Had I been present I would have voted "aye," as I have supported the Dies committee throughout my service in the Congress, and roll call No. 10 was with reference to an extension of this special committee to investigate un-American activities and propaganda. The reason I did not vote on this roll call was that I was with the Rivers and Harbors Committee, of which I am a member, on an inspection of a proposed Government project in Florida, coming under the jurisdiction of the Rivers and Harbors Committee.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in two different particulars in the RECORD, and to include certain newspaper articles.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT]?

There was no objection.

PRIVATE CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the first bill on the Private Calendar.

CHARLES R. WOODS

The Clerk called the first bill on the Private Calendar, (H. R. 5047) for the relief of Charles R. Woods.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Charles R. Wood, formerly a first lieutenant in Company A, Twenty-first Regiment United States Engineers, the sum of $288.78, in full and final settlement of all claims against the United States for loss of personal property in a fire which occurred at Camp Gerard, Sas, France, on March 10, 1918.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 5, strike out "Wood" and insert "Woods."

Page 1, line 10, after "1918", insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Charles R. Woods."

ESTATE OF FRANK H. LUSSE, DECEASED

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8679, for the relief of Frank H. Lusse, deceased, of Frankfort, Ky.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill S. 3489 may be substituted for the House bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO]?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to allow credit in the accounts of Lt. Col. Frank H. Lusse, formerly of the Kentucky National Guard, in the sum of $4,749, representing payments made by him incident to the appointment of George (Richard) James, as caretaker, employed under section 90 of the National Defense Act, as amended (U. S. C., title 32 (Supp.), sec. 42), during the period January 1, 1927, to April 30, 1932, to the extent the payments are otherwise correct, where the services have been performed and the United States has received the full benefits of the payments, notwithstanding the services were actually performed by another than the person appointed.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H. R. 8679) was laid on the table.

CHARLES S. LADINSKY AND MOE KANNER

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10285, for the relief of Charles S. Ladinsky and Moe Kanner.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Charles S. Ladinsky and Moe Kanner, both of St. Louis, Mo., the sum of $3,000. The payment of such sum represents reimbursement for the loss sustained by the said Charles S. Ladinsky and Moe Kanner on account of the forfeiture to the United States of a bail bond conditioned upon the appearance in court of one John A. Rosenfeld. Said bond was declared forfeited and judgment thereon against the said Charles S. Ladinsky and Moe Kanner in the full penal sum of $3,000 was made and entered by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Judicial Circuit on February 26, 1940, and the amount of the bond was paid by the said Charles S. Ladinsky and Moe Kanner to the United States on July 31, 1940. Through the efforts of, and at considerable expense to, the said Charles S. Ladinsky and Moe Kanner, the said John A. Rosenfeld was apprehended on March 1, 1939, and on March 6, 1939, was sentenced to serve 4 years in the Federal penitentiary.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 7, strike out "$3,000" and insert "$2,500."

Line 7, after "sum", strike out "represents reimbursement for the" and insert "shall be in full settlement of all claims against the United States growing out of."

Page 2, beginning in line 2, insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000"; and strike out the remainder of the bill.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8665, to provide for the issuance of a license to practice chiropractic in the District of Columbia to Lou Davis.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CASE of South Dakota: Page 1, line 6, strike out "and directed."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10243, for the relief of Salomon George Kaufmann, his wife, Doris Kaufmann, and their child, John Michael Peter Kaufmann.

Mr. BARDEN of North Carolina and Mr. CASE of South Dakota objected, and, under the rule, the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

GERALD M. POLLACK

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10389, for the relief of Gerald M. Pollack.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

The SPEAKER. That completes the bills eligible for call on the Private Calendar.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House and for permission to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein certain clippings.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, on September 23, 1940, a member of the National Defense Advisory Commission, Miss Harriet Elliott, Consumer Commissioner, issued a statement of policy from the consumer's point of view as to an absolute essential consideration in the present defense program.

Her statement may well be summarized by two sentences out of the release to newspapers: First, "Hungry, undernourished people do not make for strong defense;" second, "Let us make America strong by making Americans stronger."

Mr. Speaker, in view of the above, one of the major achievements of the past 8 years has been the acceptance of a minimum-wage policy to establish a "floor" under wages and a "ceiling" over hours. The Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 was the instrument through which this body expressed its approval of that principle. I was and am a strong advocate of that statute. I am very eager that that principle of the minimum wage be given every opportunity to succeed as an effective legislative policy in this country. I have urged and voted for adequate appropriations. I strove to prevent the weakening of the statute when many so-called friends of labor sought by every means possible to weaken its provisions or prevent their becoming a reality by adequate full enforcement.

Last fall, when Colonel Fleming was appointed Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division, I stated that I was opposed to the appointment of military men to important administrative positions because of the fact that invariably they lack experience in and knowledge of the duties they are called upon to carry out. I said at that time:

It seems to me that such executive positions call for someone with experience in dealing with labor relations, not for military disciplinarians.

Mr. Speaker, this week marks 1 full year of Colonel Fleming's administration of the Fair Labor Standards Act. Under that administration the number of complaints on hand has increased from 24,500 to approximately 64,000. The number of establishments against which complaints have been made has risen from 18,700 to over 46,000. The number of complaints obviously requiring inspection has increased from 12,000 to approximately 36,000.

Yet, in spite of this tremendous increase of unfinished business, Colonel Fleming, instead of increasing his staff adequately to handle this increased volume of business, returned to the Treasury on last July 1 the unexpended sum of $387,000 after almost a full year as Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division.

I think it would not be unfair to say that his whole approach to the problems presented by the figures cited above has been, first, to exempt the firms complained against from the provisions of the statute, in some cases even against the obviously stated congressional intent; and, secondly, to develop a quick administrative procedure for closing a case without regard to a proper evaluation of the facts in the given case which otherwise would result in actions leading to a proper enforcement of the statute.

I am sorry to have to say that these steps have been taken, even granting that officials of the Wage and Hour Division at the same time have expressed publicly what I believe is now the generally accepted viewpoint that the wage-hour law was long overdue and should be fully and adequately enforced.

The speeches have been impressive. Their actions prove to the hilt the accuracy of my statements a year ago. I have in my hand a number of newspaper clippings which have appeared in the press throughout the country which indicate the growing alarm of organized labor and industry at the inadequacies of the present policies of the Wage and Hour Administration. These items prove that this problem is a real one, which requires immediate attention.

The drive to exempt hundreds of thousands of workers who need the protection "to make America strong by making Americans stronger," those in the lowest wage levels, is given momentum every day. Almost daily the Wage and Hour Division issues a release exempting additional thousands from one or another provisions of the act. The business world is very much concerned. The present competitive advantage of the unscrupulous employers over the virtuous employers will show with telling effect upon the ledgers and business statements which will be compiled in a few weeks now that the business year approaches its end.

The less virtuous segments of the business world may well rejoice. A business magazine item recently stated

The Wage Hour Division has no authority to grant exemptions from the hourly provisions of the law, but * * *.

The article continues with a description of how it is now possible under the new regulations, issued recently to violate the hours provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act. Last week our esteemed colleague, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. COFFEE], charged on this floor that something is amiss in the administration of the Fair Labor Standards Act, and expressed the view that organized labor should be consulted before any changes are made in the administration of labor laws. The experience of European countries should not be lost to us. It would be well to contrast the plight of those European countries which curtailed labor's powers and fell under Hitler's heel with the situation in England where labor having been taken into consultation the latter country now shows itself capable of resisting the most terrific onslaught of that barbarian who is leading Europe to destruction.

Yet, in this prolabor administration the leaders of several of our largest and most respectable labor organizations have been refused, I am told, an opportunity to discuss the details of this developing situation with either of the two highest ranking government officials charged with the administration of labor laws of this country. I am informed by some representatives of organized labor that neither Secretary of Labor Perkins nor Sidney Hillman, labor member of the Advisory Commission to the Council of National Defense, have been ready to discuss with them the effect of this emasculation of the original intent and purpose of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938.

Mr. Speaker, I am earnest in my desire that the enemies of organized labor be prevented from creating in this country a like situation to that which resulted in the down-fall and collapse of France. I am firmly convinced that the first step toward a collapse would be in the break-down of the wage and hour standards which were established to protect those of our population who have been ill-fed, ill-clothed, and ill-housed because they have been greatly underpaid for long hours of work.

The following clippings have a direct bearing on the situation:

[Release from National Defense Advisory Commission, Monday morning, September 23, 1940]

A call for concerted action to make America strong by wiping out undernourishment and malnutrition has been issued today by Miss Harriet Elliott, consumer commissioner on the National Defense Advisory Commission, in a special issue of Consumers' Guide, publication of the Consumers' Counsel Division of the United States Department of Agriculture.

"Forty-five million of us are living below the safety line right now because we are not getting the kinds and amounts of food necessary for strength and health. Hungry, undernourished people do not make for strong defense. We have the lands, machines, and hands it takes to produce and move and market all the food we need to assure everyone an adequate and safe diet. Let's get to work to see that everyone gets at least that," Miss Elliott said. "Let's make America strong by making Americans stronger."

Miss Elliott suggests eight different ways in which groups and individuals can work to insure better diets for everyone:

"(1) Get a municipal radio market news service started so household buyers will know what foods are good buys and cheap each day;

"(2) Start a school-lunch program and see that every school child has at least one well-balanced and adequate meal each day;

"(3) Work for low-cost ways of selling milk and fruits and vegetables so that low-income families can buy a greater abundance of these protective foods;

"(4) Set up diet clinics where families can bring their food-buying problems and talk them over with experts in nutrition and consumer buying;

"(5) Support the food stamp plan now operating in 150 cities;

"(6) Learn, if you have the land, how to grow the foods you cannot buy, preserve the foods you cannot immediately use, and plan for balanced meals throughout the year;

"(7) Urge merchants to sell Government-graded foods, and urge consumers to buy by grade so they will get the quality they want for the money they have to spend;

"(8) Know what your local, State, and National Governments are doing to help get safe meals to more people."

Copies of this special issue of Consumers' Guide, in addition to going to regular subscribers, will be distributed through national civic and consumer organizations. Miss Elliott has been assured of their desire to cooperate actively in a program designed to raise nutritional levels and promote physical fitness throughout the country. Counseling her in the development of that program are experts in various branches of the Federal Government, under the chairmanship of Dr. M. L. Wilson, Director of the Extension Service of the Department of Agriculture.

WAGE-HOUR RULE CUTS OFF OVERTIME PAY OF THOUSANDS—DECISION APPLIES TO $200-A-MONTH WORKERS WHO HAVE DISCRETIONARY POWER

(By William V. Nessly, Post staff writer)

In a ruling affecting "almost all establishments in interstate commerce," the Wage and Hour Administration yesterday revised some of its definitions of white-collar workers, exempting numerous workers from the hour provisions of the labor-standards law.

[From Newsweek for October 14, 1940]

WAGE-HOUR WORRIES

Expect soon to hear loud squawks about nonenforcement of the wage-hour law. Some union representatives are already circulating well-documented confidential memos. These claim that Administrator Fleming is investigating and settling many insignificant complaints so he can say: "We are settling so many cases a week," but is dodging major cases involving failure to pay overtime to thousands of workers. The reports make many more specific charges of lackadaisical enforcement. If these preliminary complaints don't get results, union leaders will start howling publicly.

[From the St. Louis Post-Dispatch of August 30, 1940]

STATE WAGE-HOUR CHIEF CLEARED OF UNION CHARGES—INQUIRY SHOWS EFFICIENT, SPEEDY WORK ON MISSOURI CASES, SAYS WASHINGTON OFFICE

WASHINGTON, August 30.—Walter King, acting regional director of the Wage and Hour Administration in Missouri, has been cleared of charges made by trade-unions, Deputy Administrator Baird Snyder said yesterday.

Locals of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers and other unions in St. Louis and Kansas City charged that King had been too hasty and inefficient in investigating complaints of wage-hour enforcement of law in the Missouri area.

C. E. Lavign, a confidential investigator for the Wage and Hour Administration, recently completed a report on King, based on an investigation conducted in Missouri. This report showed, according to Snyder, that the Missouri region was first for the country in total number of wage-hour cases closed; first in production per man of any regional office, and the office was operated at the lowest cost per case.

THIRD IN WAGES PAID TO EMPLOYEES

The region stood third in the amount of money paid back to employees following action under the wage and hour law, according to the report. In this last respect only New York and Chicago, where cases involved large sums, were ahead of Missouri.

At the same time that Lavign conducted an investigation in the field, according to Snyder, all of the cases closed by the Kansas City office were reviewed here in Washington, and it was found that the union complaints were not substantiated. In other words, Snyder said, the complaints and the subsequent investigation served to reveal the excellent work being done in the Missouri area.

For some time there have been reports of administrative confusion and inefficiency in Missouri. A former director, Charles Hersun, was sent to Boston to take charge of the New England office, and King became acting regional director in Kansas City.

DENIES INTENTION TO MAKE CHANGE

While Snyder denied that there was any intention to replace King at this time, the Post-Dispatch learned from an authoritative source that several efforts have been made in recent weeks to find someone to take that office. Hersun, according to wage-hour officials, is only temporarily placed in Boston, but he will not be returned to Missouri.

Recently George Duemler, regional attorney in Missouri, was transferred to the Cleveland office because, it was reported, he had had differences over policy with King. Before becoming acting director, King had been supervising inspector in Missouri.

Officials here said that Duemler was transferred because there was comparatively little litigation in Kansas City and a great deal in Cleveland. Later on Duemler will probably be sent back to Kansas City, it was said. At the time of Duemler's appointment there was some opposition because he had been a Socialist and had run for mayor of St. Louis on the Socialist ticket.

C. I. O. SHOE WORKERS ACCUSE MISSOURI WAGE ACT OFFICER—UNION TO PRESS LAX ENFORCEMENT CHARGES AGAINST WALTER KING—HERSUN ALSO ATTACKED

WASHINGTON, September 5.—The United Shoe Workers of America, through union executives here, intend to press charges against officials of the Wage and Hour Administration allegedly lax in enforcing the law, it has been learned, with their demands aimed particularly at conditions in the St. Louis area.

Locals of the C. I. O. Shoe Workers' Union along with locals of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, have recently charged Walter King, acting regional director in the Missouri area, with haste and inefficiency in investigating cases and general laxity in enforcement of the law. But immediate goal of the shoe workers is removal of Charles Hersun, until recently director in the St. Louis region.

Hersun is now in charge in New England and pressure is being brought to bear through the highly organized shoe industry in that area to bring about his removal.

"It is especially important," a union circular recently declared, "that unionized centers not suffer in the unfair advantage of competition from unorganized centers where the minimum is not enforced and that the United Shoe Workers, members and officials, take it upon themselves to determine the facts regarding violations throughout the industry, convey them where possible to wage-hour officials, and send this office the details so that we may keep a record of which divisions of inspectors are enforcing the act and which are merely building up good records."

It was one of the charges against King that he was merely seeking to build up a record of cases, regardless of outcome. Recently the Wage-Hour Administration here sent an investigator to Missouri who reported that King was doing excellent work.

Officials of the shoe workers' union say they are preparing to present the charges to Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins, who has supervision of wage-hour personnel under recent administrative changes.

WAGE-HOUR STAFF "WHITEWASH" IN MISSOURI CHARGED—CLEARING OFFICIALS ON MALADMINISTRATION CHARGES SHOWS EFFORT TO HIDE FACTS, UNION MAN SAYS

WASHINGTON, September 11.—Leo Goodman, research director of the United Shoe Workers, charged today that evidence of maladministration and inefficiency in the Wage and Hour Administration in Missouri had been "whitewashed" by officials here who recently announced that an investigation of union charges had completely cleared officials in the Missouri region.

"What kind of inspector could have been sent out to that area if he did not find the evidence which, it now is apparent, has become common knowledge in trade-union circles in Missouri?" Goodman said. "Any effort to conceal this unhealthy situation will merely result in a stronger and continued campaign to bring to light facts regarding the failure to enforce the Wage and Hour Act in that district."

Goodman particularly stressed that he was unimpressed with statistics showing large sums supposedly paid in restitution on the basis, he said, of calculations made solely by the employer. He said he had called on Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins for a thorough investigation of the whole region to determine why there is such "a strenuous effort to cover the facts."

Baird Snyder, Deputy Administrator, said last week that an investigation by C. E. Lavign, confidential investigator had completely cleared Walter King, acting regional director in Missouri, of all charges brought by trade-union groups.

WAGE-HOUR OFFICIAL REPLIES TO "WHITEWASHING" CHARGES—J. F. KING SAYS LEO GOODMAN REFUSED TO DISCLOSE INSTANCES OF ALLEGED INEFFICIENCY

Leo Goodman, research director of the United Shoe Workers, who charged at Washington yesterday that officials of the Wage and Hour Division in Missouri had been "whitewashed" by investigators, has refused to cooperate with Washington officials by revealing any instances of alleged maladministration or inefficiency, James F. King, assistant to Col. Philip B. Fleming, Wage and Hour Administrator, said today at the close of a 4-day investigation here.

King said that, in the absence of specific charges by Goodman, he had interviewed various Government and labor officers here seeking instances of lax administration, but had been unable to find any.

"The Division is undertaking to investigate thoroughly every case in the Missouri region about which there could possibly be any question of maladministration," King asserted. "The investigation is not complete and the Division would welcome the assistance of any person who has relevant information. Anyone with such information should send it directly to Colonel Fleming at Washington." King is not related to Walter W. King, acting regional director in Missouri, who has been named in charges by labor officers.

SAYS NEW QUIZ SHOWS NO PAY-HOUR PROTESTS

James F. King, of Washington, assistant to Col. Philip B. Fleming, Wage and Hour Administrator, declared here today that an investigation which he is conducting has failed to bear out charges by Leo Goodman, research director of the C. I. O. United Shoe Workers, that maladministration and inefficiency have marked enforcement of the wage-hour law in the Missouri region.

King has been here since Monday making an inquiry independent of an earlier investigation by C. E. La Vigne, an investigator for the Wage and Hour Division. On the basis of La Vigne's report wage-hour officials in Washington announced 2 weeks ago that there was no basis for complaints against Walter King, acting regional director, with headquarters in Kansas City. Walter King and James F. King are not related.

WAGE-HOUR DIVISION FACES LABOR ATTACK—UNIONS CHARGE ENFORCEMENT UNDER FLEMING IS LAX

(By Kenneth Crawford, Staff Correspondent)

WASHINGTON, September 19.—The Wage and Hour Division of the Labor Department is again under fire from labor unions, and this time, unless all signs fail, they mean to blow its top personnel out of office.

Their campaign against the agency is being led by the United Shoe Workers and has been taken up by John L. Lewis and other C. I. O. leaders.

Ever since the appointment of Col. Philip Fleming as Administrator about a year ago, the Wage and Hour Division's enforcement efforts have been watched with growing skepticism by unions in the low-wage industries—particularly the United Shoe Workers. During this period Colonel Fleming has issued a succession of executive orders narrowing the application of the law by exemptions and amended definitions.

This watering-down process was accepted in good part by the unions at first on the theory that such modification was necessary to forestall complete mutilation of the wage-hour law by Congress.

But now the unions are up in arms about what they consider Colonel Fleming's failure to enforce the 35-cent wage minimum in unexempted industries, even though his staff has been enlarged and his appropriations increased. Under his enforcement policy, according to critics of the Administration, inspectors are encouraged to "make a showing, by concentrating on cursory inspections of minor complaints and passing up valid complaints against large industries."

Leo Goodman, research director of the United Shoe Workers, says that this speed-up system has virtually stopped enforcement in the shoe industry. He has complained specifically about the St. Louis region, where the new policy was first applied, but Colonel Fleming has insisted that enforcement in that district is satisfactory. Secretary of Labor Perkins also has defended the Division.

However, many of Colonel Fleming's former assistants have quit in the last few months in protest against what they consider a soft enforcement policy. And it is probable that John L. Lewis, who is again on the White House visiting list after an estrangement from the President, is talking about wage-hour enforcement among other things.

ASK HERSUM BE TAKEN OFF WAGE-HOUR JOB

WASHINGTON, September 21.—The removal of Charles R. Hersum, acting New England wage-hour director, has been asked of Wage-Hour Administrator Fleming by the United Shoe Workers of America, Leo Goodman, research director of the union, said today.

Mr. Goodman charges Mr. Hersum, formerly director of the Kansas City office, has been lax in enforcement, and that, in the present enforcement campaign, he has sacrificed real enforcement to a fast inspection record. Mr. Hersum is now conducting an enforcement campaign in New England, and recently announced an impressive number of plants inspected in the first 2 weeks of this month, with word the drive already had secured restitution of several thousand dollars in back wages.

Officials of the Wage and Hour Division said today the record of Mr. Hersum, both in Kansas City and in Boston offices, had been surveyed and approved.

It is understood officials of the United Shoe Workers, a C. I. O. affiliate, are especially critical of the Hersum record in Kansas City. This office covers St. Louis, where is located the International Shoe Co., which the union has long accused of unfair labor practices. The union has not yet made public specific charges against Mr. Hersum.

WAGE BOARD PASSING BUCK, UNION MEN SAY—DISAPPOINTED WITH ENFORCEMENT OF LAW IN SHOE INDUSTRY

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Just why the Wage and Hour Division round-up enforcement in the shoe industry is disappointing officials of the United Shoe Workers here and elsewhere was revealed today in the peculiar wording of a letter from the acting regional director for New England, Charles R. Hersum.

Union officials said the letter in itself shows the Wage and Hour Division in the act of passing the buck two ways, first by letting the accused employers be the judge as to compliance and, second, by informing workers that they should get their relief from alleged underpay by suing the employers.

Here is the text of a letter sent to a worker who had asked for an investigation of violation of which he was a victim:

"Please be advised that no further action is being taken at this time regarding your complaint against the subject company, since they state that they have not violated the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938.

"If you still feel that you have not been paid in accordance with the Wage and Hour Act, we call your attention to section 16 (b) of this act, a copy of which is enclosed, under which you may bring suit to recover any back pay that may be due you."

Union officials said that this letter does not even pretend that Mr. Hersum investigated the complaint other than to accept the employer's plea of not guilty. While the complainant is advised of his right to sue, the Division, union men say, leaves entirely unanswered the question as to whether Hersum will back the worker or the employer in such a suit.

This particular letter from Mr. Hersum follows directly after an announcement by Col. Philip B. Fleming, the Administrator, of a new plan for dealing with complaints. Upon receipt of the complaint, a form is sent to the employer in which he is asked questions as to compliance. This form, however, deals only with the statutory 25-cent wage from October 24, 1938, to October 24, 1939, and the 30-cent statutory wage effective since October 24, 1939, but does not make the same inquiry as to the administrative wage, which in the shoe industry has been 35 cents an hour since April 29 of this year.

Fleming explains that this form is effective in bringing pleas of guilty in cases where the questioning brings home that fact to an employer. Partly because of Hersum's attitude toward complaints and his failure, as in the letter quoted, to declare whether a direct investigation was made, the United Shoe Workers are asking for his removal as acting regional director in the important New England area.

The dissatisfaction spreads even further, and practically to the whole administration of the shoe industry. A similar situation has developed in other industries, some of which affect New England almost as much as the laxity in shoe-wage enforcement, and it was learned that John L. Lewis, head of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, is carrying this protest over the head of Colonel Fleming to the President himself.

This yes-or-no enforcement is bringing in some cases with restitution, but the union officials insist it is failing to get any result from the important chiseling fringe of the industry and to that extent is damaging to those complying employers who sell their product in competition with violators.

Now that jobs are not so hard to get, some of the wage and hour workers themselves, dissatisfied with results, are quitting the Administration, with unpleasant effect on the morale of the force, union men said.

[From Business Week of September 28, 1940]

REGULATIONS MADE ELASTIC

The Wage and Hour Division has no authority to grant exemptions from the hour provisions of the law, but by interpreting apprentice time spent in classrooms as nonworking time, the law's regulations have been made elastic enough to obviate the necessity for paying apprentices overtime wages. The average apprentice will spend over 150 hours a year in classroom work.

"Learnership," as differentiated from apprenticeship by the Wage and Hour Division, is a process requiring less than the 4,000 hours considered minimal in an apprentice-training program. Because the "learner occupations" are less skilled than the apprentice ones, wages are lower, and the Division is called upon much more frequently to grant exemptions. Out of an estimated 50,000 employers covered by the wage-hour law, about 2,000 have applied for and received permission to pay bona fide learners less than the 30 cents an hour required by statute.

C. I. O. HEADS PRESS WAGE AND HOUR INQUIRY DEMAND—APPEALING TO MEMBERS OF CONGRESS FOR INVESTIGATION OF CHARGES MADE BY MISSOURI SHOE UNION

WASHINGTON, October 4.—Backed by John L. Lewis, executives of C I. O. unions have taken to Members of Congress a demand for an investigation of the Wage and Hour Administration.

This demand grows out of union charges of inefficiency and maladministration in the Missouri region. These charges were made originally by executives of the United Shoe Workers and the Amalgamated Clothing Workers in Missouri.

Investigators were sent to look into these charges. and Baird Snyder, Deputy Administrator of the Wage and Hour Administration, subsequently told the Post-Dispatch that they had for the most part been without foundation. Snyder cleared Charles Hersum, former director of the Missouri region and now in charge of New England, and Walter King, at present acting director in Missouri, of charges filed against them.

Officers of the United Shoe Workers called this report a "whitewash" and have been attempting ever since to force action higher. The investigator's report was called to the attention of Secretary of Labor Perkins who conferred with Col. Philip Fleming, Wage and Hour Administrator. Fleming told Miss Perkins he had studied the report and felt the matter was closed.

With Lewis' official backing, Leo Goodman, research director of the Shoe Workers' Union, and Gardner Jackson, executive secretary of Labor's Non-Partisan League, have appealed to Members of Senate and House Labor Committees for an investigation. They have told Senators and Congressmen that the law is not being enforced, although inspectors and directors are making a "paper record."

Lewis, it is understood, has called the matter to the attention of the White House.

A spokesman for the Wage and Hour Administration said that all the Missouri shoe cases handled by the Administration had been forwarded to Washington and that Goodman had been invited to go over these files and show from the files where inspection had been at fault. Goodman, according to the spokesman, replied that he was too busy to do this.

Informed of this statement, Goodman said he had received word concerning the Missouri files only 24 hours ago and that, of course, he expected to cooperate to the fullest in studying the files.

C. I. O. CITES CHAFFEE CASE IN ATTACK ON WAGE-HOUR STAFF—DECISION ON COMPLAINTS AGAINST COLLINS-MORRIS SHOE CO. DELAYED YEAR AND HALF, UNION SAYS—FILE SHOWS LAG IN REPAYING WORKERS—ONLY $5,000 OF $25,000 SAID TO BE DUE EMPLOYEES IN "KICK BACK" CONTROVERSY REPORTED RETURNED

(By Marquis W. Childs, staff correspondent of the Post-Dispatch)

WASHINGTON, October 5.—The United Shoe Workers, a C. I. O. union, is basing charges of inefficiency and maladministration in the Wage and Hour Administration in part on the delay in handling of complaints against the Collins-Morris Shoe Co. factory at Chaffee, Mo.

The file of the Collins-Morris Shoe Co. case was submitted to Leo Goodman, research director of the shoe workers, by Baird Snyder, deputy administrator. Analysis shows a delay of more than a year and a half before final action was taken, Goodman said. Although inspection revealed more than a year ago that restitution of $25,000 was due to employees, to date the company had paid only $5.087.66 in five monthly installments, the file shows.

Goodman and John L. Jones, director of Labor's Non-Partisan League, with the backing of John L. Lewis, C. I. O. head, are urging Members of Congress to investigate what they maintain is an almost complete break-down of wage-hour enforcement. Jones yesterday cited a recent announcement of Col. Philip B. Fleming, Wage and Hour Administrator, that employers would be asked to fill out a questionnaire stating whether or not they had violated the law as "astounding evidence" of the failure to enforce wage-hour provisions.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE PROTEST

The file of the Collins-Morris case shows that efforts of the Wage and Hour Administration to stop a 10-percent kick-back of wages by shoe workers had resulted in a protest from the Chaffee Chamber of Commerce made through Senator BENNETT CHAMP CLARK and Representative ORVILLE ZIMMERMAN, of Kennett. Ed. S. Villmoare, Jr., secretary to Senator CLARK, said he had merely passed on the complaint of the chamber of commerce without reference to its merits.

"I had very little to do with it," ZIMMERMAN said. "As I recall, it was an arrangement entered into by the employees to enable the plant to continue to operate. But I had almost nothing to do with it."

In response to the complaint forwarded by ZIMMERMAN, George E. McNulty, former wage-hour general counsel, wrote that if the kick-backs reduced wages below a minimum of $11 a week for a 44-hour week, the company would be in violation of the law. This was in May 1939.

TEST SUIT PROPOSED

Two months later, the file shows, Alex Elson, regional attorney at Chicago, analyzed the preliminary inspection report and recommended the filing of a civil suit in order to test the validity of the kick-back device "participated in by the company since the effective date of the act, under an agreement between the chamber of commerce and the employees which antedated the effective date of the act."

Another 4 months passed and George E. Duemler, then regional attorney in St. Louis, was asked to carry out a reinspection. He replied on November 18 that this would require 10 days. He said also that the company was continuing to make deductions but not passing them along to the chamber of commerce.

On December 7, the file shows, Duemler conferred with attorneys for the company concerning restitution of about $25,000. Duemler reported that the company attorneys insisted the deductions were legal and that even if they were not they would continue to make the deductions after the first inspection on advice of the inspector who told them to continue the status quo until Washington had rendered an opinion on the legality of the 10-percent "contributions," which were charged off on the company books to "merchandise" advances to workers.

ST. JOSEPH CASE

Another case cited by union executives critical of wage-hour enforcement is that of the Sun Manufacturing Co., of St. Joseph, Mo. Although complaints were filed nearly a year and a half ago no decision has been reached by the Wage and Hour Administration. Recently the National Labor Relations Board ordered the Sun company to reinstate seven women alleged to have been discharged for union activities and to pay back wages totaling $2,230. This was on complaint of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers who also filed the original complaints with the Wage and Hour Administration.

In his statement charging failure to enforce the law, Jones pointed out that Labor's Nonpartisan League, in reality a part of the C. I. O., and other labor groups had worked actively to obtain adequate appropriations for the Wage and Hour Administration. On July 1 of this year the administration returned an unexpected balance of $387,000 to the Treasury.

RESIGNATIONS NOTED

"Labor reads in the press," the statement said, "of numerous resignations from the wage-hour staff—resignations of men and women it had come to know as most interested in having the act enforced equitably. It sees references in the press to a report filed by Colonel Fleming's personal investigator on the Kansas City regional headquarters after a 6 weeks' investigation—references indicating the report was ignored and its recommendations rejected.

"From the field labor's own union representatives send in disquieting reports of wage-hour inspectors being ordered to build the statistical records of cases handled and closed by taking the easy, little ones or even chalking up as closed cases firms exempt from the act. Some of these say that inspectors are told they must list 'three a day' or 'eight a day' closed cases for themselves or be in danger of losing their jobs."

Reports are current here that Fleming may resign as head of the Wage and Hour Administration to become administrator of W. P. A., succeeding Col. F. C. Harrington, who died after an operation a week ago.

[From PM of October 8, 1940]

WAGE-HOUR BOARD ACCUSED OF LAXITY

WASHINGTON, October 8.—Conflict between the Wage and Hour Administration and labor groups assumed new seriousness today as Labor's Non-Partisan League leveled public charges against the administrators of the Fair Labor Standards Act.

It contended that the administrators were slackening enforcement of the act and putting the detection of violators up to the conscience of employers.

As evidence, Labor's Non-Partisan League cited the return to the Treasury of $387,000 unexpended balance from the Wage and Hour Administration's 1939-40 appropriation. A perennial complaint of both labor and Wage and Hour Administrator Fleming has been that lack of funds prevented the hiring of an adequate staff of investigators. The $387,000 which Colonel Fleming returned unused would have provided, it is estimated, 180 additional inspectors at average present salary rates.

The league also criticized a "new procedure to expedite wage-hour compliance" announced by the agency on September 22.

The new procedure asks employers to fill out form AD-85 and says: "Accurately filled out, it will put the employer through a sort of 'examination of conscience' insofar as the wage-hour law is involved. When he has completely filled out the form he will know whether or not he is complying with the law."

The Wage and Hour Administration stated that the new soul-searching formula was not intended to replace independent examination of books and records by its investigators.

LETTERS CITED

But Labor's Non-Partisan League calls attention to a letter written by Charles R. Hersum, regional wage-hour director, to a union complainant in New England. The letter is said to state that no further action in this case is contemplated "since they (complainant's employers) state that they have not violated the Fair Labor Standards Act."

An official of the Wage and Hour Administration told this reporter that he had seen a carbon copy of the Hersum letter, and that this read "no further action is contemplated at this time," etc. This, in his opinion, is an important distinction.

It is apparent that Labor's Non-Partisan League's attack on the Wage and Hour Administration is adding to the furor already raging around the issue of industry's compliance with labor laws as a condition for receiving defense contracts. Other more detailed charges against Colonel Fleming are expected.—Marion Bachrach.

THE THIRD TERM AND THEN DICTATORSHIP

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I wish to discuss for a few moments the question of the third term and dictatorship. I want to show that the third term was in the minds of the President's family 3 years before he was nominated by the Democratic Party at Chicago this year.

In a supreme crisis like this when mankind's moral, material, and cultural heritage is in grave danger, the American people are asked to sacrifice a sacred tradition that no doubt has had much to do in keeping this Nation a free republic for the past 150 years.

But more than this, how can any reasonable person, Democrat or Republican, partisan or gullible, accept the manner in which this third-term candidacy has been sought and secured?

Who says that President Roosevelt was drafted for a third term?

I charge that this administration schemed and depended on a European war to try to grab a third term.

My authority for this serious accusation comes from the inner circles of the White House itself.

Here before me are some startling facts and documents that the American people should know and ponder over in the next few weeks.

On October 24, 1937, Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., the President's son, wrote to Joseph Leib, founder of the first Roosevelt for President Club in the United States, and a political writer, saying:

> In the first place I think that it is not my position to make any statement concerning a third term for my father. And, furthermore, the necessity for deciding such an issue has not yet arisen since what we feel today may have to be revised 3 years from now in the light of circumstances beyond our control, such as the foreign situation. * * *

I hold in my hand the original letter from young Roosevelt.

This is a serious and important letter.

What young Roosevelt says in substance is this:

Why should my father reject a third term, 3 years before the Democratic National Convention, when there is a possibility that a war will break out in Europe and he might become another war President?

The President's son also says in this letter that the "necessity for deciding such an issue has not yet arisen."

Does this statement not show that even 3 years before the Democratic National Convention members of the Roosevelt family were looking forward to another term in the White House?

Mind you, that this letter was written 2 years before the war in Europe broke out. Remember that Hitler invaded Poland on September 1, 1939, which started the European war.

No Sherlock Holmes is needed to ascertain where young Roosevelt got these views from.

This was published on October 31, 1937, and it appeared on the front page of nearly every leading newspaper in the Nation. I hold a copy of the New York Herald Tribune in my hand of that day.

Then the very next day, November 1, 1937, the Washington Post on the front page of its first edition reported that Charles Michelson was called to the White House for a conference with the President and James Roosevelt, who was then a White House secretary.

Following this meeting, Michelson confirmed young Roosevelt's statement and issued his weekly pamphlet, which the Washington Daily News on November 8, 1937, carried under this headline: "Michelson hints F. D. may seek a third term."

Here is a copy of that paper, and the text of the article reads:

> Obviously, the President cannot in advance decline a renomination that may never be offered him. Just as obviously, with the world in such a turmoil as it is today outside of this continent, it cannot be forecasted whether the American people would permit him to lay down his burden in view of possible eventualities.

He goes on and points out that the administration critics—> are invoking the old favorite fable of Roosevelt seeking a dictatorship and then they trot out the old bogey of a third term.

Yes, gentlemen; "the old bogey of a third term" is now a fact. I want to impress upon everyone here that Michelson and young Roosevelt wrote these opinions 3 years before the Democratic National Convention opened and 2 years before the European war broke out.

Does this not prove that this Roosevelt administration betrayed the American people on this third-term candidacy?

Does it not absolutely show that this administration was looking forward to a war in Europe in the hope of remaining in office for another term?

Why is this administration deceiving the American people with all this pretense and holiness?

What kind of democracy is this kind of trickery?

Do you gentlemen remember that famous statement that President Roosevelt made in the middle of the night, saying that he was not aspiring to be a dictator?

Do you recall the exact date that that statement was made?

It was made on April 1, 1938.

April 1—on April Fools' Day.

Why is the President of the United States fooling the American people?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. If the gentleman will remember, when the President was Governor of New York they put through the Baumes law, which provides that if an offender gets three terms it is for life. Does not the gentleman think that he feels that under that principle, if he gets three terms, it will be for life?

Mr. RICH. I will say this, that if he gets three terms he will want four terms and he will want five terms. Sure it will be for life. He intends to be a dictator, as I view it. Nothing short of that for him. Just let me show you the evolution in the past 7 years of the things we did in Congress that were leading up to the fact that he is becoming a dictator. What I am fearful of is that he will declare an emergency to exist before the election on November 5 and then call off the election. I honestly mean that. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I notice in the press that on this trip out through Ohio, this so-called nonpolitical trip, paid for at Government expense, a Member of this House made the statement that he was not only for a third term but for a fourth and a fifth term. Did you see that?

Did the gentleman see that?

Mr. RICH. I have seen so much I do not know that I saw that particular article. Most of the New Dealers are for it. I am against it, I can assure you.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I suggest that the gentleman read it.

Mr. RICH. Read it. I have read enough New Deal propaganda. I want to get rid of them. I hope all the people will vote November 5 for Willkie and McNARY and get rid of the third term and the new dealers.

Now, let me show you the things that have been done that have led to dictatorship in Germany, Italy, Russia, and Spain. They first had an extravagant public-works program, then a debauched currency, then power concentrated in the individual who was ruling the country at that time. Then they undermined the independence of the judiciary, and the following things were done: They granted excessive subsidies, there was government by decree, they encouraged subversive forces, they imposed confiscatory taxes, restricted private investment, created an unbalanced budget, imposed a planned economy, fostered class conflicts, took control of the banks, did that which would destroy the morale of industry, engaged in excessive borrowings until they built up a huge national debt, enlarged the bureaucracy, conscripted the Army, conscripted the people; and then the dictator took over everything; he conscripted the farms, he conscripted and regimented labor, and finally he was the exalted power that reigned over those countries.

The time is too short to tell the American people that we are going to have a dictator if we have a third term. America, wake up before it is too late.

[Here the gavel fell.]

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER. Under the special order of the House, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. LEWIS] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, recently I submitted to Gen. George C. Marshall, Chief of Staff, United States Army, an elaborate prospectus entitled "We Suggest a Mountain Military Training Center." This prospectus, which includes 50 exhibits, consisting of photographs and maps of the proposed site, detailed plans and elevations of suggested buildings, and so forth, was prepared by Mr. Robert S. Balch, assisted by some engineers and architects, under the direction of Mr. George E. Cranmer, manager of improvements and parks, of the city and county of Denver, Colo. Mr. Balch is superintendent of Winter Park, which is part of Denver's system of mountain parks, in the foothills and mountains to the west of Denver, outside the corporate limits of our city.

The prospectus suggests that there be established by the United States Army a center for intensive specialized training of a small number of our troops in the technique of operations in rugged high mountains and under heavy snow conditions—including training of troops for rapid movement on skis.

ONLY THOSE INURED TO HIGH ALTITUDES CAN UNDERTAKE GREAT PHYSICAL EXERTION MILES ABOVE THE SEA

We of the States spanning the Continental Divide know that carburetors in our motorcars require special adjustment in order to secure the greatest efficiency in operation in the high mountains. Experienced Army officers tell me that they have noted that even horses and mules accustomed to work near sea level lack efficiency or even fall sick when taken to high altitudes.

It is a fact familiar to everyone in Colorado that even some young men of strong physique and seemingly in perfect health, who have lived most of their lives nearer sea level, are incapacitated for any vigorous physical exertion when they go to an altitude of even 8,000 feet. This is frequently true of persons riding in motorcars or even attempting to walk very slowly. At 10,000 or 12,000, 13,000 or 14,000 feet, some persons collapse. It is true that many of those who experience severe difficulty when first going to high altitudes, become accustomed, during a period of days or weeks or months, to the thinner and more stimulating air and thereafter have no further inconvenience. But no one can tell with certainty in advance what effect the higher altitudes will have upon him. He can never be sure until he actually goes a mile or two or more above the sea.

As this is true of many who merely ride in automobiles to high altitudes or stroll leisurely about carrying no burdens, what would be the effect upon men who had always theretofore lived near sea level if they were obliged to undergo the extreme physical exertion of military combat, in deep snow, 1 or 2 or 2½ miles above the sea? What would happen to soldiers from low altitude States, trained in Southern or other sea level camps, if they should be obliged to oppose an enemy in the high mountains of Alaska or British Columbia?

The need for a high mountain military training center is indicated by the following extracts from the introduction to the prospectus:

If the United States is to have complete military defense preparedness, it must provide for every conceivable eventuality. * * * Every other nation which has either heavy winter or difficult mountain conditions, or both, has produced forces specially trained and equipped to perform competently under such conditions. * * * The possibility is at hand of having to defend such Alpine areas as Alaska and British Columbia, as well as the extensive mountain and snow areas of the United States. * * * With Russia fortifying Big Diomede Island, a mile and a half from United States soil in Bering Strait, the picture arises of a possible attempted defense of Arctic territory with troops trained in Louisiana.

It is further suggested in the prospectus that such a training center be established in an area of about 6,000 acres on the eastern slope of the Continental Divide, in a national forest, at altitudes ranging from 10,000 to 13,000 feet, accessible by an excellent highway, 50 miles west of Denver.

This prospectus, I am informed, is now being carefully studied by the General Staff.

I quote part of the text of the prospectus:

WE SUGGEST A MOUNTAIN MILITARY TRAINING CENTER

1. INTRODUCTION

A. The need

America needs mountain troops. If the United States is to have complete military defense preparedness it must provide for every conceivable eventuality. To do so it must have forces well trained and equipped in every possible type of military activity. Using foreign examples as the standard of modernization, it is apparent that valuable lessons have been learned and suitable adjustment made in such branches as aviation and mechanization. It is also apparent that every other nation which has either heavy winter, or difficult mountain conditions, or both, has produced forces specially trained and equipped to perform competently under such conditions. But America has made little or no progress in this direction.

Are we to be caught napping? The possibility is at hand of having to defend such Alpine areas as Alaska and British Columbia, as well as the extensive mountain and snow areas of the United States, and it is inconceivable that we should neglect the highly specialized preparedness essential to doing that job and doing it right. With Russia fortifying Big Diomede Island, a mile and a half from United States soil in Bering Strait, the picture arises of a possible attempted defense of Arctic territory with troops trained in Louisiana. Although Russia apparently shares with England the distinction of having learned little of ski or mountain technique from the European examples, there is no reason to suppose that conditions will remain the same.

B. The example

The example is before us clearly enough. We know something of what can be done and how essential it is to be ready when the conditions arise. Russia was unprepared in Finland. We saw pictures of Finnish soldiers laughing over captured pamphlets hastily issued by Russia, urging her soldiers to learn to ski and explaining how. We know they were laughing because it takes at least 3 years of intensive training to make an able skier of an average civilian, even without military science. The Finnish patrols had trained together all their lives.

Likewise, we felt the pity of the poor Englishman's position in Norway. When captured he was so heavily clothed that he could hardly move, bundled in long underwear, sheepskins, and mufflers, and trying to maneuver with standard infantry and artillery equipment. Yet he was up against Austrian Jager troops with special clothing, equipment, and training which made them as active as athletes in summer.

Years of study, practice, and the bitterest experience have produced magnificent ski and mountaineer troops in Europe and we should be able to profit by the example. In the course of World War No. I, Austria and Italy progressed from complete ignorance to complete science by trial and error. At the start the conception of war in Alpine areas was limited to valley operations. Where the contours thickened, blanks were left on army maps with the notation that the areas were "strategically inaccessible," and therefore need not be defended. Yet the boundary passed through this country of mighty cliffs, glaciers, and eight to twelve thousand foot peaks, and before the war was over every peak had been fortified and great mass movements and actions had taken place.

During those years came the intensified developments that have resulted in modern Alpine technique. For instance, before the war aerial cable tramways were a rare aid to mining, yet by 1918 there were 3 kilometers of supply tramways for every kilometer of front, and the mono-cable and portable trams had been perfected. Light arms and equipment and such unheard-of specialties as the rolling time bomb developed.

Engineering was more important here than ever before. Emplacements were completed in unbelievable positions including the top of the 12,800 foot Ortler, and the batteries hidden in rock or ice caves were among the most effective weapons of the war. The art of constructing and concealing "cliff dweller" barracks among the peaks was developed including the necessary tunnels, ladders, fixed cables, and concealed access routes. Sapping and mining played a big part offensively and developed into races of tunneling skill involving hundreds of men and complicated machinery, with life or death the prize. For example, on the morning of March 13, 1918, on Monte Pasubio in the Dolomites, the Italians were completing arrangements to fire their charge of 13,000 kilograms of gelatin which they had placed under the enemy position. Unknowingly they stood over a lethal 55,000 kilograms of dynamite themselves. The Austrians were ready first.

Weather and snow conditions were the common enemy, whose mastery was acquired by miserable experience. On December 13, 1916, more men were lost in avalanches than had been killed in action on both sides in the previous year, 6,000 dead in all, 300 in one group on the Marmolata—all the result of ignorance in placing and arranging positions and in interpreting the weather.

Mountaineering technique improved to the point where troops ascended peaks previously attained only by a handful of fanatic sportsmen and guides.

And ski-troop technique advanced from the stage where volunteers were sent down from North Germany to the Alpine areas because they could skate or had been through the mountains in a train to the point where patrol actions were the determining factor and great winter campaigns such as the advance through the Carpathians could be successfully carried out.

So we visualize how the importance and attainment of mountain military science dawned on Europe. One can picture the development that must have taken place in the intervening years and note the significance of the fact that several hundred thousand men are enrolled in the mountain and ski troops of Finland, Norway, Sweden, Germany, Italy, Switzerland, France, and Spain, with a much smaller area to defend than we would have in North America.

C. The opportunity

Therefore we believe that the time has come to develop similar strength and feel that the opportunity is at hand. Information is certainly available. We have now in this country many refugees who have served in foreign Alpine corps, including the best-known ski instructor in the world, Mr. Hannes Schneider, who has advised many governments on such development as well as serving as an officer himself. In addition, Swiss official cooperation could undoubtedly be arranged.

Ample Government funds are now available for defense purposes, and we therefore suggest that constructive steps be taken at once. Obviously the first requirements are instruction and research. The ideal first move would be to establish conveniently located permanent Alpine training centers from which trainees could be sent to outlying bases, such as Alaska, as required. The location of such a center might well be based on the following major requirements:

(1) Alpine terrain of great extent and variety.
(2) High altitude.
(3) Heavy snow; long winter.
(4) Isolation from public, but accessibility for operation.
(5) Convenience to air facilities.

One place in the United States which satisfies all the requirements is this area in the Rocky Mountains, on the Continental Divide; viz, region of Jones Pass, Colo.

Since this area provides the opportunity to take constructive action, the following plan is submitted as the most logical solution:

II. PROPOSAL FOR A MOUNTAIN MILITARY TRAINING CENTER NEAR JONES PASS, CLEAR CREEK COUNTY, COLO.

A. Purpose

1. Definition

A center is to be organized to provide the highly specialized training required for successful military operations in high mountain terrain at all seasons. (Note: Program will qualify trainees automatically for winter operations in flat country as well.)

2. Suggested Program

No attempt is made here to organize the military-training routine, but it is assumed that some such program of activities as this will be followed in general.

(a) Winter

Daily field classes in downhill skiing to be held on practice slopes served by uphill tows.
Short expeditions of small groups involving climbing and snowcraft.
Short maneuvers with arms in small groups.
Target practice.
Daily indoor classes in theory of ski technique and related subjects including waxing, snow, weather, and avalanche conditions.
Daily indoor classes in equipment.
Special training with dog-team transport.
Some longer expeditions.
Daily classes in mountain and winter aspects of engineering, radio, supply, first aid, etc.
Periodical combat-team maneuvers over larger areas with auxiliary and air cooperation.

(b) Summer

Field classes in mountaineering technique. Expeditions of varying length.
Daily indoor classes in arms, equipment, engineering, radio, first aid, etc.
Special training in portable cable tramway technique.
Special training with mule transport.
Special training in sapping, mining, and mountain engineering.
Target practice.

(c) All year

Research.

B. Scope

1. Personnel

The suggested size of personnel is set at 500 for the post including trainees and staff.

2. Facilities

Complete facilities are to be provided for the carrying out of such a program by this group.

(a) Housing

The men are to be housed, fed, and provided with study and recreation facilities. Trainees and noncommissioned officers will live in barracks; higher officers, instructors, and service staff in private houses or apartments. The post will include all auxiliary facilities necessary for permanent operation, including such items as hospital, guard room, laundry, armory, work shops, garage, stable, etc.

(b) Land

The areas necessary for the post and for field training are to be provided. The post is to be part of a military reservation. This reservation will include a home practice ground for daily use. Outside the reservation, but immediately beyond, is to be a secondary training area for extended operations. In this area there is to be a landing field at the nearest suitable spot.

C. Location

1. Suitability

The location chosen for the center is an area in the main range of the Rocky Mountains, adjacent to the Continental Divide at a point where it comes nearest to Denver. Here the altitude is high and the winter long, the country wild and mountainous and difficult yet not too isolated. The terrain provides very adequately for all the requirements enumerated above. The surrounding region in general is already a popular mountain playground and includes the Denver Winter Park ski development of slopes, runs, and tows.

2. Accessibility—(a) From Denver

The military reservation site is adjacent to United States Highway No. 40, a transcontinental route, at a point 50 miles west of Denver. The main rail line from Denver to Salt Lake City is available at Winter Park Station, the West Portal of the Moffat Tunnel, 15 miles north on the same highway.

(b) From any point in the country

Denver is a central point well served by main rail and air lines, as shown on the accompanying diagram.

3. Strategic Vulnerability

The Denver area is one of the least vulnerable points in the country and any site in the mountain terrain to the west is doubly safe. The accompanying diagram shows that it is 840 air miles from the nearest Pacific coast point, 645 miles from the Canadian border, 570 miles from the Mexican border, and 370 miles west of the geographical center of the United States.

4. Convenience to Federal Activity

Denver is the western center of United States Government administration and has more Federal offices than any city except Washington, D. C. Army activity is heavily concentrated here. Note that the training center is to be in a region almost entirely Government owned, part of the 14,000,000 acres of national forests and parks in the State. There are three C. C. C. camps in the immediate vicinity.

5. Convenience to Air Facilities

Lowry Field makes the possibility of close cooperative training with the air force practicable. There is an excellent landing field site at Fraser, 20 miles north from the Jones Pass area on United States Highway No. 40, as shown on the maps.

III. PLANS

A. Terrain

1. General Region

The general map of the region shows the natural integration of the functions of the three main area units: reservation, secondary training area, and landing field. The reservation is the heart of the development, served by life lines of highway and rail. It is the focus of concentrated daily routine activity, both indoor and outdoor; living, class instruction, and field practice. When major expeditions are to be made, maneuvers to be held, or more difficult terrain is desired, activity will overflow into the surrounding secondary training area. The landing field nearby will have sporadic use for air cooperation training.

2. Area Units—(a) Reservation

The reservation site is an area of approximately 6,000 acres, located in a loop of the Continental Divide on the eastern slope. It functions perfectly as a unit since it is a natural bowl bounded on three sides by the ridge of the divide and on the fourth by a ridge of equal elevation. Altitude ranges approximately from 10,000 feet at the bottom of the bowl to 13,000 feet at the highest point of the rim, with timberline half-way between.

The only possible traffic entrance is through a narrow gap on the east. This is the only point where the area is tangent to the main highway, so it is well isolated from public interference, but not from access. The main entrance control gateway will be either directly on the highway or far enough in to avoid conflict with the mining of war material ores in the adjacent Woods Creek Valley.

The access road and highway both follow the water level of West Clear Creek, which is augmented in summer by the flow through the Jones Pass diversion tunnel. The tailings dump at the east portal of this tunnel, 1.8 miles from the highway, is to be the post site. This is the common point of convergence of the series of glacial cirques and drainages which comprise the bowl.

The surrounding terrain of the home practice ground is mountainous without being extremely difficult and includes a variety of features. There are slopes of all degrees of steepness and interest for ski practice both above and below timberline. For summer training the timbered valleys offer excellent problems, as well as the long scree slopes, sharp ridges, and small cliffs and gullies.

Daily activity in winter will be concentrated on the ski practice slopes. The beginners' slope is located on the west bank of Butler Gulch, 300 yards up the trail from the post, It is a hillside of moderate slope ending in a flat meadow. An area of approximately 2 acres of timber is to be cleared and grubbed and a manila-rope tow of 800 feet length and 200 feet rise installed.

The advanced ski-practice area is across the creek from the post and will be reached by a bridge. Ski action focuses here on daily instruction classes for advanced and expert trainees. Here will be held the competitions necessary for keenness and enthusiasm. The main slope is to be directly opposite the bridge and the barracks, on the face of the ridge dividing Butler Gulch from Red Mountain Creek. It will be a wide clearing half a mile long and six or seven hundred feet high. In the center of this the ski tramway will run up to a flat landing spot at the 11,000-foot elevation, serving in addition a ski-run down each of the side gullies. The tramway is to be the overhead mono-cable wire-rope type with 2-passenger hangers having automatic vertical compensation. This is the type found to be most successful. In this connection, note that the Swiss patentee also supplies the similar portable type for military supply. Costs of ski facilities plus portable tramway are as follows:

Hemp rope tow, 800 x 200 feet (installed)	$1,200
Swiss type tramway, 2,100 x 600 feet (installed)	19,170
Portable military tramway, ½-mile	10,000
Clearing 10 acres at $300 an acre	3,000
Total	33,370

Short expeditions will use the natural facilities of the three drainages: Butler Gulch, Jones Pass proper, and Vasquez Ski Pass. The trail from the post to Jones Pass can handle heavy traffic as it is an abandoned truck road. Safe winter passes out of the bowl are the Butler-Woods Pass and Vasquez Ski Pass.

Summer use will concentrate on the larger areas above timber line and center on the small cliffs in Butler Gulch.

(b) Secondary training area

Beyond the bowl to the north, west, and south lie long valleys between high ranges. This is the secondary training area for longer expeditions and maneuvers. Each valley is reached by one or more passes over the rim of the bowl as shown in red on the map. One of them provides a splendid secondary ski-training area, the headwaters basin of the west branch of Vasquez Creek, which is a region of moderate open slopes, mainly above timber line, with interesting variety.

The Woods Creek area is also suited to skiing, but the St. Louis Creek and Williams River areas are too exposed to avalanche danger in winter and spring. All valleys return either to the highway or to the post as follows:

Woods Creek—5 miles from rim of bowl to post.
Vasquez Creek—10 miles from rim of bowl to highway.
St. Louis Creek—15 miles from rim of bowl to highway.
Williams River—30 miles from rim of bowl to highway.

The Gore Range, 18 miles airline to the southwest, is a wilderness area of extreme ruggedness. Here are to be found the cliffs and peaks of extreme difficulty necessary for finished training in mountaineering technique. The area is accessible by main highway via Loveland Pass and Dillon, as well as by difficult cross-country trails. The Arapaho Range duplicates this on the northeast, but is more subject to conflict with the public.

(c) Landing Field

The landing field site is 20 miles away on the main highway at Fraser. It is a wide, flat valley of hay fields, which has already been used for landing in both summer and winter. It would be possible to connect with it for coordinated activity either by truck or by use of the Vasquez Creek Valley. For this purpose it would be desirable to open a trail or road through the valley to the West Vasquez Ski Pass into the reservation. This pass is easy and safe enough for winter use, while the main Vasquez Pass is not.

B. Post

1. Site

(a) Location: At east portal of Williams Fork diversion (Jones Pass) tunnel, 1.8 miles west of United States Highway No. 40.

(b) Soil: Condition loose loam with rock, varying from rock outcropping to 3 feet of soil. Soil is absorbent and excellent for top soil for tunnel dump covering and disposal absorption.

(c) Topography: Exclusive of tunnel dump, south exposure has a general usable slope from the stream varying from 5 degrees to 10 degrees horizontal angle. The tunnel dump, 1,000 feet long, and an average width of 160 feet, affords an excellent foreground for a large development. This area is to have a minimum of 2 feet of top soil for planting.

(d) Bearing: All structures on native soil shall be carried to solid rock. All those on dump fill shall be carried on mass footings below frost line.

(e) Water supply: All year daily flow of West Clear Creek, where it adjoins tunnel, approximately 50 second-feet.

2. Road

The site is approached from the highway via the existing graded dirt road which was built for hauling over Jones Pass. This road is to pass through a controlled entrance station (not shown on plans). To be relocated beginning 1 mile east of site to service higher on the north hillside and function primarily for the use of the post (clearing, grading, and oiling will constitute the construction program, as no heavy cuts or bridges will be necessary).

At the post it is to serve in series the four main traffic areas: Civilian housing, utility, headquarters parking, and officers' quarters.

Beyond the post this relocated road will continue as a minor road or trail to the point where it rejoins the original route to Jones Pass.

3. Buildings

(a) Space requirements: The total personnel of the post is assumed to consist of the following groups: Eleven classes of 33:

363 trainees.
36 noncommissioned officers.
11 instructors.
20 administrative and executive officers.
70 civilian staff employees.

500 men.

This break-down is based on the ideal maximum class size of 33 and the usual proportion of noncommissioned officers to men of 1 to 10. Barracks will house the 399 trainees and noncommissioned officers. The nonbarrack housing of instructors, officers, and employees is too problematical for solution here, so this proposal does not include any specific provision for it except site.

Minimum standard Army requirements form the basis of space design for the post.

Mr. Speaker, there is then set forth in the prospectus a detailed description of the five proposed buildings with designation of the purposes of each, statement of the floor areas and capacity of each building for enlisted men and officers, and description of the several rooms in each building; description of the architecture; outline of materials and equipment and specifications and cost estimate. A stable for 22 mules, a garage for trucks and combat car, storage for supplies and food, blacksmith shop, and so forth—none of these necessary features are overlooked. This detailed statement in the text of the prospectus is supplemented by carefully prepared detailed plans and elevations, photographs of the site, and sketches showing how the proposed buildings would appear on the site—all of which are included among the 50 exhibits in the prospectus.

The estimated cost of the installation—including all buildings, heating system, electric power and lighting system, sewage-disposal system, ski facilities and portable tramway—is given in the prospectus as totaling $758,770.

This prospectus certainly makes a strong case in support of the need for intensive specialized training of a small body of seasoned troops in the technique of operations in rugged high mountains and under conditions of heavy snow, including training in rapid movement of troops on skis. I am gratified that the suggestion for the establishment of a mountain military training center and the site proposed are being given careful consideration by the General Staff.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] is recognized for 8 minutes.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for an additional 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, the pamphlet recently issued by the Colored Division of the Democratic National Committee, which directs attention to the ancestry of Wendell L. Willkie, vilifies him, attempts to brand and smear him as un-American and is reprehensible. In the year 1917, on the day that the United States declared war against Germany, Wendell L. Willkie enlisted as a soldier and was sent overseas where he bared his breast to the enemy while his opponent President Franklin D. Roosevelt, who is supported by the colored division of the Democratic National Committee had a soft civilian berth in Washington, 3,000 miles away from the shot and shell which Willkie was facing while fighting for our country and our countrymen under the Stars and Stripes. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, Charles Michelson, the $25,000-a-year New Deal smear man, who is responsible for putting out this slanderous political-campaign document attacking the Americanism of Comrade Wendell L. Willkie, was originally put in charge of the Democratic National Campaign Committee publicity and propaganda division and subsidized with many thousand dollars of bloody world-war profits by John Jacob Raskob, of the war-munitions house of Du Pont.

Mr. Speaker, the dastardly attempt of venal, viperous New Deal political poison-peddling character assassins to deliberately and maliciously slander Wendell L. Willkie as unpatriotic, is most reprehensible in view of the fact that in April 1917, when our country declared war against Germany, Comrade Willkie enlisted for active service in the United States Army. He was later promoted and commissioned as a captain and served overseas with the Three Hundred and Twenty-fifth Field Artillery. [Applause.]

Comrade Wendell L. Willkie did not have a soft swivel-chair berth in the civil branch of the Government 3,000 miles away from the battle front as did President Roosevelt, his political opponent in behalf of whose candidacy the colored division of the Democratic National Committee disseminated their indefensible attack which questioned Comrade Willkie's patriotism.

Mr. Speaker, may I repeat that the day upon which the United States declared war against Germany, Wendell L. Willkie enlisted for active service in the United States Army and served overseas on the battle front and was promoted and commissioned a captain by reason of his exceptional ability and faithful service as a soldier. [Applause.] He did not receive a captain's commission with a soft, swivel-chair job in the purchasing division of the Army as did Elliott Roosevelt, the multimillionaire son of President Roosevelt, his multimillionaire political opponent in behalf of whose candidacy the libelous pamphlet has been extensively circulated by the colored division of the Democratic National Committee. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, it would have been far more appropriate for the colored division of the Democratic National Committee to have informed our colored brethren in the North that the heart of the Democratic Party is below the Mason and Dixon's line where they count colored people in the census for apportionment of Congressmen and Presidential electors and generally deny them the right to vote in violation of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States and also deny them other sacred rights and liberties guaranteed to our citizens under the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution. Mr. Speaker, in the State of Mississippi in the last congressional election 7 New Deal Mississippi Democratic Congressmen received a total of only 36,000 votes, which is less than half of the votes cast in most of the individual northern congressional districts. The colored division of the Democratic National Committee should have told our colored countrymen that in the New Deal Democratic-controlled South below the Mason and Dixon's line the colored people's living quarters are segregated and they must ride in Jim Crow cars and are compelled to patronize colored hotels, restaurants, theaters, public parks, and so forth, and can only attend colored churches.

Mr. Speaker, the record reveals that our New Deal Democrats render lip service to our colored countrymen north of the Mason and Dixon's line while they hit them below the belt, burn and lynch them in the solid Democratic South below the Mason and Dixon's line.

Mr. Speaker, this slanderous Democratic campaign document attempts to put the Ku Klux Klan nightshirt on Mr. Willkie. It must be remembered that the citadel of the Ku Klux Klan is in the New Deal Democratic-controlled South below the Mason and Dixon's line and that the imperial wizard of the Klu Klux Klan has his national headquarters on Peachtree Road in the city of Atlanta and the State of Georgia, which are both in complete control of the Democratic Party and whose citizens are main cogs in the New Deal Democratic political machine. The record also shows that Comrade Wendell L. Willkie led a successful battle in Akron, Ohio, against the Ku Klux Klan in the years 1924, 1925, and 1926.

Mr. Speaker, the un-American, subversive, and slanderous pamphlet recently issued by the Democratic National Committee through its colored division is indefensible, reprehensible, contemptible, and indicative that our New Deal Democratic brethren are hard pressed and will resort to any and all foul means in order to retain control of our Federal Government and continue their nefarious work to sabotage the Constitution of the United States, spend Uncle Sam into bankruptcy, plunge him into the new European war, and establish a New Deal soviet dictatorship in our Republic. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, in view of the active overseas World War military service of Comrade Wendell L. Willkie during the war between the United States and Germany in 1917, 1918, and 1919, all of those who are responsible for putting out the scurrilous smear pamphlet by the colored division of the Democratic National Committee can certainly qualify as members of a political polecat club. They seem to be emulating their leader, President Roosevelt, who repeatedly says, "Ah hate wah," while his record clearly demonstrates that he is a war fomenter and a war interventionist who does hate "wah" veterans. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, in view of this Democratic National Committee smear document, our Democratic brethren should remove the ancient and honorable donkey insignia from all of their political party headquarters and replace them with insignia of a well-known American nocturnal carniverous bushy-tail animal which Webster defines as a skunk.

Mr. Speaker, I call upon the millions of our Nation's war veterans, their families and their friends, to take cognizance of the dastardly attack upon our overseas comrade, Wendell L. Willkie, whose record reveals that he is an outstanding, noble American patriot, and not an enemy of our country as our New Deal political mercenaries attempt to portray him. Wendell L. Willkie, the Republican candidate for President, is a volunteer soldier and a patriot. Let us unite and go over the top on November 5 behind Capt. Wendell L. Willkie, who will drive the New Deal international money changers, Wall Street sharks and barracudas, war fomenters, war interventionists, warmongers, and Benedict Arnold chosen tribe of Karl Marx disciples from the temple of our Federal Government. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, Comrade Wendell L. Willkie is leading the forces of those who want to uphold, defend, and preserve our American constitutional system of government under the Stars and Stripes against those who desire to replace it with a soviet conception of governmental autocracy imported direct from Moscow by our New Deal brethren.

Mr. Speaker, this November 5 is the day on which the battle of America will be fought. Our countrymen must choose on which side they will stand. Our good Lord and Saviour said, "No man can serve two masters." He also said, "He who is not with Me is against Me." I choose to stand with and go over the top on November 5 behind Capt. Wendell L. Willkie in order that I might best serve my country and my countrymen, to the end—

That this Nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom—and that government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth.

[Applause.]

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of the House to two telegrams that were sent in my name on Saturday from the Western Union office in the Senate Office Building. The telegrams were sent, one to T. J. Tumulty, and the other to the Jersey Journal. The first one to T. J. Tumulty reads as follows:

To T. JAMES TUMULTY,
Jewett Avenue, Jersey City:
Accept challenge to debate, arrange details Commissioner Potterton, October 23, Jersey City.

MARY T. NORTON.

The second one reads as follows:

To JERSEY JOURNAL,
Journal Square, Jersey City, N. J.:
Accepted challenge debate with T. James Tumulty October 23, Jersey City.

MARY T. NORTON.

This morning the young lady in charge of the Senate Western Union office called my attention to these telegrams and sent copies to me. Attached she sent a memorandum reading:

In reference attached wires. I accepted these two wires over the counter Saturday, October 12, at 12.22 p. m., by two young men, age about 25, dark hair and smooth complexions.

MAUD BLAINE,
Western Union Telegraph Co., Senate Office.

Apparently she was suspicious of the telegrams. She was quite right as I not only did not send the telegrams but had no knowledge of any challenge to debate with Mr. Tumulty or anyone else.

When I talked to the Western Union operator at the Senate office I asked her why she sent telegrams in my name without my authority. She said she could not reach my office, which was true, because my office was closed at that time. As the telegrams were paid for, and as Members frequently send telegrams by boys, she explained, there was nothing else she could do but accept the telegrams. But she was so suspicious she called up my office this morning to report the matter to me.

Apparently the telegrams were a plant, as on Saturday night a telegram came to my home in Washington, which I did not receive until late Sunday night on my return home, reading as follows:

JERSEY CITY, October 12, 1940.

MARY T. NORTON,
Kennedy-Warren Apartments:
Your acceptance of my debate challenge to Commissioner Potterton received. Glad that you assumed the burden of this debate. Will arrange details for October 23, as you suggest, with Commissioner Potterton on Monday.

T. JAMES TUMULTY.

At first I thought that the telegram was a joke. Then I was called up by some newspapermen and asked about an article that appeared in the Sunday New York Times about this debate. I then decided it was not a joke and sent the following telegram to Mr. Tumulty, collect:

OCTOBER 14, 1940.

Mr. T. JAMES TUMULTY,
Jersey City, N. J.:
Your mysterious telegram received. Don't know anything about any debate challenge. You know you never received any kind of communication from me. I dare you to produce the acceptance you mention. If this is your method of getting free publicity, it is a stupid and cheap political trick.

MARY T. NORTON.

The key to the situation came with the message from the telegraph operator in the Senate Office Building this morning.

My purpose in calling this matter to your attention is because I feel it is absolutely necessary in order to protect the membership of the House. Any Member may have a telegram sent in his or her name about which she or he knows nothing. If this sort of practice is to continue, it is treacherous and could be very unfair and embarrassing to Members. I intend to investigate the matter further to find out who is responsible for sending those two telegrams in my name.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. NORTON. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. As I understand the gentlewoman, whoever sent these telegrams also paid for them?

Mrs. NORTON. The telegraph operator informed me they paid for the telegrams.

Mr. McCORMACK. It simply shows what can happen to any one of us. This is nothing but a plot.

Mrs. NORTON. That is true, and it seems a very stupid plot.

Mr. McCORMACK. It is an attempt to embarrass the gentlewoman from New Jersey.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. NORTON. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I certainly want to have it said, and I think I can speak for the minority Members, that such tactics are not countenanced or supported by us, because that kind of politics and that kind of tactics are to be classed with the circulation of this scurrilous attack on Mr. Wendell Willkie's ancestry about which we heard today. That entire class of politics is reprehensible and has no place in the United States.

Mrs. NORTON. I do not think any fair-minded person would resort to such petty politics.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. NORTON. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. May I call the gentlewoman's attention to the fact that unless there has been some recent change in the law there is nothing she can do about it. I had a speaking engagement at Reading, Pa. On my way, I was stopped at Baltimore by a wire purporting to come from the chairman of the meeting, but it was sent by a C. I. O. member, telling me that the meeting had been canceled. I took it up with the company and after investigation and the offer of a reward, I learned the name of the man who sent it. I took the matter up with the Federal authorities here and with the prosecuting officer of the county up there as well as with the Western Union, and I was advised I had no remedy.

Mrs. NORTON. Is it not a criminal offense to sign another person's name to a telegram?

Mr. HOFFMAN. They tell me it is not.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Then, by Thy mercy, grant us a safe lodging and a holy rest, and peace at the last. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

TWO HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE BIRTH OF THOMAS JEFFERSON

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. KING). The Chair appoints the senior and junior Senators from Virginia [Mr. GLASS and Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS] members, on the part of the Senate, of the United States Commission for the Celebration of the Two Hundredth Anniversary of the Birth of Thomas Jefferson, established by Public Resolution No. 100, approved September 24, 1940.

MEMORIAL OF LEGISLATURE OF NEW MEXICO

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of New Mexico, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

A resolution memorializing the President of the United States of America, the Bureau of Reclamation of the United States of America, and the Congress of the United States of America pertaining to relief of farmers and landowners holding lands under the Middle Rio Grande Conservancy District in the State of New Mexico

Be it resolved by the Legislature of the State of New Mexico, That whereas approximately 9,000 home owners and farmers under the Middle Rio Grande Conservancy District of the State of New Mexico are faced with the loss of their homes by virtue of benefit and administration assessments in connection with the conservancy district's irrigation and flood-control projects; and

Whereas most of these home owners, with their fathers, for more than 300 years have occupied, owned, cultivated, and earned a livelihood under local irrigation ditches and diversion dams upon the property now embraced within the conservancy district against which assessments for flood control and irrigation maintenance are now levied; and

Whereas the obligations of the district, requiring the levy of special benefit taxes to pay the outstanding indebtedness for construction and maintain the present flood-control and irrigation projects, are so great as to make it impossible under the present annual charges for these people to pay the same and provide a reasonable living for themselves and their families from the products of the land under irrigation; and

Whereas other projects, to wit, the Elephant Butte Dam project, and, to wit, other irrigation projects upon the lower Rio Grande, not only in New Mexico but in Texas and in the Republic of Mexico, using water from the upper Rio Grande under contracts and treaties with the United States of America, are greatly benefited by the flood-control projects and dams constructed by the district; and

Whereas projects now being operated by the Reclamation Service in connection with certain water users' associations upon the lower Rio Grande pay and are bound for none of the advantages and benefits of flood control or soil conservation provided by the works of the Middle Rio Grande Conservancy District; and

Whereas it is unjust and unfair for the landowners of the district to bear the entire cost thereof at such a rate of charge per acre upon their lands as to make, under climatic conditions existing in the Middle Rio Grande Conservancy District, agricultural operations unprofitable and the net returns therefrom so small as to deny them a reasonable living for themselves and their families; and

Whereas the assessments and taxation for the purposes and uses of the Middle Rio Grande Conservancy District, taken together with the necessary local, county, and school-district taxes, are so great as to place these people in a position where their lands must be lost to them unless some adequate relief is furnished; and

Whereas one-sixth of the lands which benefit by the works constructed by the conservancy district is owned by Indians, wards of the United States Government, who pay no taxes and against whose property no assessments can be levied; and

Whereas it is unfair and unjust that the other owners of property in the district should pay for the bentfit resulting therefrom to the wards of the United States Government and others as aforesaid; and

Whereas a very large percentage of the moneys of the reclamation fund used by the Reclamation Service of the United States is derived from revenue produced by the lands of the United States within the State of New Mexico in oil and mineral royalties and other sources of income; and

Whereas other projects within the State of New Mexico are being successfully operated by contracts with the Reclamation Service, as provided by the laws of the State of New Mexico, without confiscation of the property of the farmers and home owners; and

Whereas it appears necessary, in order that the homes of the citizens of this State who reside with their families upon the lands of the Middle Rio Grande Conservancy District and have so resided for generations may be preserved to them, that the present indebtedness of the district to be taken over by the United States Reclamation Service or some other governmental agency authorized thereunto, and that the entire indebtedness of the district be amortized through a sufficient number of years and at a sufficiently small rate of interest to enable these home owners to continue to live in their homes and meet their obligations, which appears to be impossible under present conditions or conditions which appear probable in the future; and

Whereas the government of the State of New Mexico is without constitutional power and authority to further aid these people: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of New Mexico, in special session assembled, That His Excellency the President of the United States of America, the Reclamation Service, and the Congress of the United States be, and they are, memorialized, petitioned, and requested to take such steps as may be necessary to effectually, equitably, and justly enable the farmers and home owners operating under the Middle Rio Grande Conservancy District of the State of New Mexico to meet their obligations in such a manner as will prevent the loss of their property, and to take such action as will provide for the payment of the present obligations of the district, and enable the sums to be repaid without such annual assessments and payments as will result in the confiscation of property, and that such grant of funds for this purpose be made by the United States of America as will equitably care for the portion of such indebtedness as would properly be charged to the Indian lands within the district, and as the lands under the southern Rio Grande projects and in the Republic of Mexico are reasonably benefited from control of the flood waters of the Rio Grande, and irrigation storage resulting from the works constructed by the Middle Rio Grande Conservancy District of the State of New Mexico; and be it further

Resolved, That a certified copy of this memorial be mailed forthwith by the Speaker of the House and Chief Clerk to His Excellency the President of the United States, the Chief of the Reclamation Service of the United States, the Right Honorable JOHN NANCE GARNER, Vice President of the United States, the Right Honorable SAM RAYBURN, Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to Hon. Dennis Chavez and Hon. Carl A. Hatch, Senators from New Mexico, and to Hon. John J. Dempsey, Representative in Congress from the State of New Mexico.

Approved by me this 3d day of October 1940.

JOHN E. MILES,
Governor of New Mexico.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES—REFERENCE AND WITHDRAWAL OF NOMINATIONS

As in executive session,

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States nominating Carl R. Grenager to be a chief boatswain in the Coast Guard, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States withdrawing the nomination of Thad H. Brown, of Ohio, to be a member of the Federal Communications Commission (sent to the Senate on June 5, 1940).

DIRECTOR OF SELECTIVE SERVICE

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask, as in executive session, that the nomination which was discussed yesterday be laid before the Senate.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that under the unanimous-consent agreement entered into yesterday it is not imperative that the Senate shall resolve itself into executive session but may, in the regular proceedings, take up for consideration the nomination of Clarence A. Dykstra, of Wisconsin, to be Director of Selective Service. If there is no dissent from that view, the Chair will assume that that is the correct position, and he lays before the Senate the nomination of Clarence A. Dykstra, of Wisconsin, to be Director of Selective Service. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to this nomination?

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, for the same reason I stated yesterday, I shall not interpose any objection to the confirmation of the nomination of Dr. Dykstra, but I desire to say that when I made objection yesterday I did what the Constitution provides shall be done. The Senate has a right to pass on appointments. It has gotten so now that many individuals feel that the United States Senate should accept a Presidential nomination without any question. I do not agree with that view. I think, since the Constitution provides that the Senate shall confirm or reject the nominees of the President, that certainly I was not doing more than my constitutional duty.

So far as delay in the program is concerned, the Selective Service Act was passed almost a month ago. The President of the United States has been busy, I realize; he has been busy going over the country on defense tours—of course, I would not imply that they were connected with the campaign at all—but I realize he has been a busy man at Hyde Park.

He has, however, taken almost a month to consider whom he should name as Director of Selective Service. I do not condemn him for that, but I do not think that the Senate should be criticized for taking at least 1 legislative day to give consideration to the nomination of an official who will have charge of 16,000,000 American young men.

I did not make objection yesterday, as I have said, because of any personal ill will or any feeling that the nomination of Dr. Dykstra should not be confirmed; but I do not think that the delay in connection with Dr. Dykstra's appointment lies with the Senate; I think that the delay, if there is any, is directly at the door of the President of the United States, who took time out from his defense tours for a few minutes to appoint Dr. Dykstra.

That is all I care to say, but I would do the same thing again. I am getting tired of sitting in the Senate, and when the President snaps his finger having the Senate jump like a little boy who has to jump when fingers are snapped at him. I do not like this type of procedure, and, so long as I am a Member of the Senate, which will not be long, I intend to protest against it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish merely to make a brief statement in connection with this appointment.

I did not criticize the Senator from West Virginia for objecting yesterday, though I regretted that he did, but I realized then, and so stated, that he was within his rights. He indicated that he would not object if the nomination went over until today, and he has not done so; but I regret that the Senator has taken occasion, because of this nomination, to criticize the President with respect to it. Many men were considered by the President in deciding whom to appoint. Among them were Army officers, some of whom had rendered distinguished service, and others were civilians. I think, without knowing anything about the details as to all the men who were under consideration, that the President desired to appoint an outstanding civilian in order that nobody in the country might get the impression that it was purely and strictly a military proposition which faced the country. It did require some time to sift all the names which were under consideration, and I think everyone agrees that this appointment is a most excellent one for this particular service to the country.

Therefore, I think the President is not subject to criticism because the nomination did not come before the Senate sooner. If he had been in a hurry about it, he might not have made so good an appointment as he has made. I congratulate him and the country on the appointment of Dr. Dykstra, and I congratulate the Senate on the confirmation of his nomination today. That is all I have to say about it.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of Clarence A. Dykstra to be Director of Selective Service?

The nomination was confirmed.

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the President be immediately notified of the confirmation of Dr. Dykstra's nomination.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the President will be notified of the confirmation of the nomination.

PENSIONS, ETC., FOR CERTAIN AIR CORPS RESERVE OFFICERS—VETO MESSAGE

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I return herewith, without approval, Senate bill No. 3266, entitled "An act to provide pensions, compensation, retirement pay, and hospital benefits for certain Air Corps Reserve officers who were disabled while on active duty with the Regular Army."

Any member of the Officers' Reserve Corps or of the Enlisted Reserve Corps of the Army, who is physically injured in line of duty while on active duty, or when engaged in authorized travel to and from such duty, or when engaged in authorized training without pay, or dies as the result of such injury is now entitled to all the benefits prescribed by law for civil employees of the United States who are physically injured in line of duty or die as a result thereof.

All officers, warrant officers, or enlisted men of the Army of the United States, other than members of the Regular Army, who suffer disability or death in line of duty from disease or injury incurred subsequent to April 3, 1939, while on active duty in the service of the United States for periods in excess of 30 days may receive, in lieu of benefits prescribed for civil employees, the same pensions, compensation, retirement pay, and hospital benefits provided for the Regular Army, act of April 3, 1939 (53 Stat. 557).

The effect of this bill would be to extend the provisions of the act of April 3, 1939, to Air Corps Reserve officers who were disabled while on extended active duty subsequent to July 1, 1928. By extending these benefits retroactively for a limited period to Air Corps officers only, the measure would afford relief to a relatively small group, and would unjustly discriminate against Reserve personnel of other arms and services who may have suffered similar disabilities while on extended active duty between July 1, 1928, and April 3, 1939. The War Department, the Veterans' Administration, and the Bureau of the Budget, all recommend that this measure be not approved.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, October 15, 1940.

MOVEMENT OF NEW ENGLAND INDUSTRIES TO THE SOUTH

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, in view of statements made by the Republican Presidential nominee, Mr. Willkie, during his recent visit to Connecticut, in view of the sympathy which he expressed for the workmen of that part of the country, and in view of several references to his position on the matter of aiding working people and small business in New England, I desire to quote from a speech which Mr. Willkie delivered in Birmingham, Ala., on November 7, 1934. It refers to New England industries and his somewhat successful effort in prevailing upon some of those industries to move to the South. The quotation from Mr. Willkie's speech follows:

> The Alabama Power Co. can remove industries from the North, because it is a business concern, but the T. V. A. cannot remove them, because it is a part of our Government, and therefore has to think of the political effect on the community from which the industry is removed. * * *
> I can tell you why we maintain an office in New York. It is solely because of two reasons: First, to have a convenient and advantageous point from which we can work with the Alabama Power Co. and other companies to secure the removal of northern industries to this area. How successfully we have done this, perhaps you can judge by the fact that in the past decade the new industries division of the Alabama Power Co. aided directly or indirectly in the location of 245 industries in 129 different communities in your State.

In this connection, Mr. President, I should like to say that while the Republican Presidential nominee would take credit for bringing industries to the South, certain members of his party in New England are taking great credit, or endeavoring to take great credit, for attracting industries from other sections of the country to the New England area.

OIL IMPORTS

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I am in receipt of a letter from Mr. J. E. Missimer, president of the Russell-Farmers State Bank, of Russell, Kans., calling attention to the distressful plight of the Kansas oil industry. Kansas ranks fifth among the States in oil production. Kansas, along with other States in the Southwest oil field, is prorating its production in the interest of conservation of natural resources.

But it goes against the grain, Mr. President, to see imports of more petroleum from foreign nations month after month than Kansas is allowed to produce under its proration agreement with other States. The following comparison for the first 6 months of this year tells the story:

Month	Daily average imports	Daily average Kansas production
	Barrels	Barrels
January	142,000	171,000
February	211,000	176,000
March	228,000	180,000
April	217,000	161,000
May	197,000	168,000
June	194,000	178,000
July	206,000	188,000

Last December a reciprocal trade agreement with Venezuela became effective, reducing by 50 percent the excise tax on imports of petroleum. Note what happened. The results were almost immediate. The importations of petroleum for the next 6 months—the first 6 months of this year—were 30 percent greater than for the first 6 months of 1939. The reciprocal-trade agreements are advantageous for foreign producers of oil and for the farmers of other nations, but are decidedly disastrous for American oil producers and for the American farmers.

I do not intend to take the time of the Senate to discuss again how the reciprocal-trade agreements have sold the American farmer and the American oil producer "down the river." I merely call attention to the fact that imports of petroleum, month after month, are larger than the total production allowed to Kansas, the fifth oil-producing State in the Union; and that since the latest reciprocal-trade agreement affecting petroleum became effective imports of oil from Venezuela have increased 32 percent; from the Netherlands West Indies, 127 percent; and from old Mexico, 3,770 percent. Mexico's imports jumped from a daily average of less than 800 barrels to an average of 30,000 barrels a day. Imports of petroleum during the first half of 1940 amounted to 38,449,347 barrels.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point as part of my remarks the letter from Mr. Missimer to which I referred in my opening statement.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RUSSELL, KANS., October 12, 1940.

Hon. Senator CAPPER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: While in Washington a few weeks ago, I talked to you slightly about the condition of our oil-development progress in this part of Kansas, and you requested that I write you fully regarding the same at my convenience. In accordance with your request I shall endeavor to give you what information I have at hand regarding our situation.

In a general way we are producing more oil at the present time than the market will consume, and the State of Kansas is prorated very heavily in an attempt to keep the oil in the ground until market demand will absorb it. This part of Kansas has come into its own in a very substantial way during the last 6 or 7 years, and Kansas has at this time 6,421 prorated wells with a potential (established by the corporation commission) in the total amount of 6,647,550 barrels. You can readily see from these figures that Kansas could produce, if permitted, a very large portion of the daily consumption of the United States at the present time. In fact, our total potential is almost twice the daily consumption of the Nation at this time.

A large number of our major pools have been prorated well below 1 percent of the amount they are capable of producing. For an illustration, the Bemis pool of Ellis County produces seventy-nine one-hundredths of 1 percent; the Barnholdt pool produces on a basis of sixty-seven one-hundredths of 1 percent; the Trapp pool of Russell County produces on a basis of eighty-eight one-hundredths of 1 percent; and various pools, other than those mentioned, slightly more than these major pools. The fact that this State has been allotted in the neighborhood of from 180,000 to 190,000 barrels daily by the Bureau of Mines necessitates the low percentage of production allowed. A great many operators attempt to drill just as little as possible for the reason that the runs are so small under this heavy proration that it takes them too long to get their money back. In fact, I know of a number of major companies in this area that are considerably behind in the drilling of wells which are due to offset producing properties at the present time.

Some years ago I was a member of the State legislature, and during that time the proration laws of Kansas were materially strengthened. At that time, the major companies were very much interested in strengthening the proration laws; in fact, the laws that we have on our statute books at this time met entirely with their approval. We have operated several years under this proration system, and so far Kansas has not fared very well. I am not positive that the major companies are responsible for this situation, but I am inclined to think that they do have a part in the matter for the reason that the Bureau of Mines does not allow to Kansas her just proportion of the market in a midcontinent area. To illustrate that to you more clearly, Kansas was allowed to produce and sell from 150,000 to 175,000 barrels daily before the Illinois play really took place, and then, during the last 3 years, Illinois produced up to one-half million barrels daily, and the Bureau of Mines recognized their production and allotted to them almost one-half million barrels daily, while Kansas increased her production very materially during the same period of time, and 20,000 barrels daily has been the maximum increase of runs allowed by the Bureau of Mines.

I simply mention these different phases in order that you might get the picture; if you can contact Mr. R. R. Brown, of the Independent Petroleum Association, he can clarify these different things that I have mentioned herein.

I know that we are not getting our portion of the market, and it is retarding development to a great extent at this time. How to remedy that situation, or just who is responsible for our present situation I am unable to say. I shall be glad to furnish you with any other information you may request that is within my power to obtain, and I assure you that it is for the benefit of Kansas and the industry of Kansas that I am interested.

Thanking you very kindly for your interest in the matter, I am,

Very truly yours,

J. E. MISSIMER, President.

P. S.—Certainly no excuse for the large increase in crude oil importations in recent months.

THE LATE SENATOR ERNEST LUNDEEN

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], who is ill at this time, has handed me a letter dated October 10, 1940, addressed to Mrs. Ernest Lundeen by the Attorney General, and has asked me to have it read aloud at this gathering.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the letter will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., October 10, 1940.

MRS. ERNEST LUNDEEN,
6221 Twenty-ninth Street, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MRS. LUNDEEN: I am glad to comply with your request for information as to statements made about your husband, the late Senator Ernest Lundeen.

No investigation of Senator Lundeen was pending or contemplated by this Department at the time of his death. The men from the F. B. I. and from the Department of Justice were on the same plane with him by pure coincidence, and their presence had no connection whatever with each other or with the Senator. They had taken passage before the Senator obtained passage on the plane and would have been on it had he not made the trip at all.

After statements and rumors in reference to this matter came to my attention I issued on September 16, 1940, the following statement to the press:

"I wish to deny emphatically recently published press reports to the effect that the late Senator Ernest Lundeen, of Minnesota, at the time of his death in an airplane accident on August 31 was under investigation by the Department of Justice. No inquiry into the affairs of Senator Lundeen has ever been instituted or contemplated, either by the Federal Bureau of Investigation or by any other agency of the Department of Justice, and any statement or report to the contrary is untrue."

I have also advised colleagues of Senator Lundeen who were concerned about the matter about these facts and regret the light in which rumor has placed both Senator Lundeen and this Department.

Sincerely yours,

ROBERT H. JACKSON,
Attorney General.

THE TOWNSEND PLAN IN FRANCE

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, there has come to my attention a news item printed in some of the newspapers of the country entitled "France To Try Townsend Plan." The heading carries the subhead "Will pension aged to help jobless." This news story comes from one of the great news services stationed at the present site of the French Government. The article is dated October 13. I ask unanimous consent to have the article printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FRANCE TO TRY TOWNSEND PLAN—WILL PENSION AGED TO HELP JOBLESS

VICHY, October 13.—A legislative project somewhat resembling the Townsend pension plan has been worked out by the Minister of Industrial Production as a measure to help reduce unemployment in France this winter.

The plan proposes modification in the present social insurance laws here and will give each French worker over 60 years of age 3,000 francs annually on condition that he does no work. It is provided that after October 15 no worker who has reached 60 may be carried on the lists at labor exchanges as seeking work.

In this way it is estimated that the elderly will be pensioned off and at the same time more jobs made available for the enormous mass of people now unemployed in this country. The project is only part of the general program on which the Petain government is centering its attention to cope with unemployment, which threatens to become worse as winter advances.

Other important features of the program are big expenditures on public works and elimination of women workers, especially married women, from public administration offices. The number of unemployed now runs far beyond the million mark, whereas before the war unemployment was practically nonexistent.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

SENATOR FROM MINNESOTA

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I send to the desk the credentials of JOSEPH HURST BALL, appointed by the Governor of Minnesota to be a Senator of the United States from that State to fill the vacancy created by the death of the late Senator Ernest Lundeen. I ask that the credentials be read.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read the credentials.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

STATE OF MINNESOTA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT

To the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES:

This is to certify that, pursuant to the power invested in me by the Constitution of the United States and the laws of the State of Minnesota, I, Harold E. Stassen, the Governor of said State, do hereby appoint JOSEPH HURST BALL a Senator from said State to represent said State in the Senate of the United States until the vacancy therein, caused by the death of Ernest Lundeen, is filled by election, as provided by law.

Witness: His Excellency our Governor, Harold E. Stassen, and our seal hereto affixed at St. Paul, Minn., this 14th day of October in the year of our Lord 1940.

By the Governor:

HAROLD E. STASSEN, Governor.

[SEAL] MIKE HOLM, Secretary of State.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The credentials will be placed on file.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, the Senator-designate is present and ready to take the oath.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, before the Senator-designate takes the oath of office, I wish to make a brief observation.

I have received from the State of Minnesota a protest against seating the Senator who has just been appointed by the Governor on the ground that the Governor deliberately delayed making an appointment until it was too late to elect a Senator on November 5, which is the next biennial election held in the State of Minnesota.

Being interested in the question from the standpoint of law and the constitutional requirements, I have looked into the legality of this appointment, and if the Senator from Minnesota will permit me I should like to have read from the desk a memorandum which I have prepared with reference to it so that the Senate and the people of Minnesota may understand the situation as I have found it to be.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

THE FILLING OF THE VACANCY CAUSED BY SENATOR LUNDEEN'S DEATH

The laws of Minnesota provide that in case a vacancy occurs in the office of United States Senator, such vacancy shall be filled for the unexpired term at the following biennial State election, provided such vacancy occurs at least 60 days prior to the primaries. If the vacancy occurs subsequently to the last-mentioned date, then it is to be filled at the biennial State election next following. Pending such election, the Governor is to make a temporary appointment to fill the vacancy, the appointee to serve until the election and qualification of the person subsequently elected to fill the vacancy.

This statutory provision is found in the act of the State of Minnesota, approved on April 21, 1939, chapter 345, part 6, chapter 2, section 1, and forms sections 601–606 (2) of Mason's Minnesota Statutes, 1940 supplement. This statute reads, as follows:

"Special election to fill vacancy in office of United States Senate: Upon failure to choose a Senator in Congress or upon a vacancy in said office the vacancy shall be filled for the unexpired term at the following biennial State election, provided said vacancy occurs not less than 60 days prior to the date of the primaries for nominating candidates to be voted for at such election, otherwise at the biennial State election next following. Pending such election the Governor shall make a temporary appointment to fill the vacancy, and the person so appointed shall serve until the election and qualification of the person duly elected to fill such vacancy."

The date of the primary election is fixed as the second Tuesday in September preceding any general election (Id. sec. 601–603 (1)). This provision of law reads, as follows:

"On the second Tuesday in September preceding any general election, and 7 weeks preceding any city election in cities of the first and second class, held for the purpose of electing city officers only, an election of nominees hereinafter designated as the 'primary election' shall be held in each election district for the selection of party and other candidates for all elective offices within the State, to be filled at such election, except officers of towns, villages, and cities of the third and fourth class, and members of school, park, and library boards, in cities having less than 100,000 inhabitants, and except Presidential electors."

In 1940, the second Tuesday of September was September 10. Sixty days prior to that would be July 10. Consequently, unless the vacancy in the office of United States Senator occurred prior to July 10, 1940, no successor to fill the balance of the unexpired term may be chosen at the general election this year. He may be chosen only at the general election held in 1942. As Senator Lundeen was killed on August 31, 1940, clearly a successor to fill the unexpired term may not be elected this year. The Governor, under the provisions first quoted above may, however, make a temporary appointment to fill the vacancy, and the person so appointed will serve until after the 1942 election.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I had that memorandum read because, in view of the communications I have received from Minnesota, I wanted the RECORD to show the situation as it seems to me to exist.

In many of the States the laws provide that when a vacancy in the United States Senate occurs 60 days, or any other number of days fixed in the law, prior to the general election, the next biennial election, the people shall have the right to elect the Senator, and the party authorities in such States are authorized, if it is too late to hold a primary election, to choose candidates, to provide for conventions where candidates may be nominated, one of whom is elected the following November.

It seems to me that the constitutional amendment providing for the direct election of Senators contemplated that at the very next available election the people should be given an opportunity to select a Senator to fill out an unexpired term. However, under the laws of Minnesota, instead of providing that a Senator shall be elected if the vacancy occurs 60 days prior to the November election, it is provided that the vacancy must have occurred 60 days prior to the primary election at which candidates might be chosen, and because of that provision of the Minnesota law the Governor had the right to make the appointment which he has made. But, without any criticism of the Legislature of Minnesota or the people of that State, I feel that it is unfortunate that the appointment of the Governor to fill a vacancy may be made so that the occupant may hold for 2 years or more without the intervention of an election.

I say that with no reflection whatever upon the appointee, whom I have not yet had the opportunity to meet, but I think that that was the spirit of the amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and I have a feeling that the provision of the Minnesota law, while it was within the constitutional powers of the State to enact it, is not precisely in harmony with the spirit of the amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which undertook to give to the people of each State the right to choose a Senator to fill a vacancy at the earliest possible biennial election.

With this statement, I have nothing further to say with regard to the matter.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator-designate will present himself at the desk, the oath will be administered.

Mr. BALL, accompanied by Mr. SHIPSTEAD, advanced to the desk, and the oath of office having been administered to him by the Acting President pro tempore, he took his seat in the Senate.

DEVELOPMENT OF INTERNATIONAL RAPIDS SECTION OF ST. LAWRENCE RIVER FOR POWER PURPOSES

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

To the Congress of the United States:

The surveys of the Federal Power Commission and the National Power Policy Committee have convinced me that the development of the International Rapids section of the St. Lawrence River should be undertaken at the earliest possible date as a part of adequate provision to meet the continuing power requirements of the defense program in certain essential centers of war-material production in the Northeastern States.

The potential power at this site is best adapted to meet the requirements of expansion in certain essential defense industries, including aluminum, magnesium, ferroalloys, chemicals, etc. Actually, the Aluminum Co. of America has recently arranged for the import of 30,000 kilowatts of additional power from Canada to meet the pressing requirements of its existing plant located at the very site of the proposed St. Lawrence project and, I am reliably informed, is seeking additional supplies from across the border. Such imported supplies are, in effect, on an annual basis, subject to being withdrawn if required by the Canadian power market.

It is urgent that this project be undertaken at the present time, not only from the point of view of our own defense but also in terms of those of our neighbor, Canada. The Province of Ontario needs to be able to count upon the early availability of this power to meet its growing load. The project may, therefore, be considered as an essential part of the program of continental defense which is being actively worked out by representatives of the two peoples.

I am informed that if the potential power of the International Rapids is to be available to carry the peak load of 1945, preliminary investigations, particularly engineering surveys of the site, including core borings, test pits, soil analyses, etc., must be undertaken immediately. I have, therefore, allocated $1,000,000 of the special defense fund to the Federal Power Commission and Corps of Engineers, United States Army, for this preliminary work and have appointed a committee of four to advise me in planning the work and to cooperate with appropriate agencies of the Canadian Government. The members of this committee are Leland Olds, chairman of the Federal Power Commission, as chairman; A. A. Berle, Assistant Secretary of State; Brig. Gen. Thomas M. Robins, of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, Corps of Engineers, United States Army; and Gerald V. Cruise, representative of the trustees of the Power Authority of the State of New York. I have directed the United States Corps of Engineers to begin the necessary investigations immediately.

The preliminary investigations which I have authorized involve no actual construction or commitment to construct. In taking this means of advising Congress of the surveys I am having made, I wish to make it clear that Congress will be kept advised of such further steps as may be necessary.

THE WHITE HOUSE, October 17, 1940.

SENATOR FROM MINNESOTA

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from Guy V. Howard, of Minneapolis, Minn., relative to the matter of his filing a petition as a candidate for the office of United States Senator to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of the late Senator Lundeen, of Minnesota, on August 31, 1940, together with copy of an opinion by the Supreme Court of Minnesota in regard to petition of the said Guy V. Howard, relator, against Mike Holm, secretary of state of Minnesota, respondent, to the effect that relator was not entitled to become a candidate, and so forth, and discharging order to show cause, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

CLAIM OF THEODORE R. TROENDLE

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4360) to confer jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Western District of Kentucky to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Theodore R. Troendle, sole stockholder of the Dawson Springs Construction Co., which were, on page 1, line 3, after the name "Troendle", to insert "as"; in line 8, after the word "for", to insert "alleged"; on page 2, line 2, after the word "breach", to insert "which may be found"; and in line 3, to strike out "22" and insert "2."

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

FRAME FOR PAINTING OF THE SIGNING OF THE CONSTITUTION

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 301) to authorize the acquisition of a suitable frame for the painting of the Signing of the Constitution, to be used in mounting said painting in the Capitol Building, which was, in line 5, after the word "purchase", to insert "without reference to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 41, sec. 5)".

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

PERSONAL STATEMENT BY SENATOR BARKLEY

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I desire to make a brief statement under the head of what might be called personal privilege.

I think all my friends in the Senate and those who know me throughout the country, and especially the people of my State, know that I am a man of peace and good will toward everybody. I do not like to indulge in bitter controversies over anything; and I like to assume that all men, regardless of their condition or their views, are actuated by honorable motives in what they do toward or say concerning their fellow men.

From time to time in the local press in Washington and in other newspapers willing to buy the contemptible stuff which is disseminated by certain alleged newspapermen in Washington, my name has been mentioned. By certain of these individuals a studied, systematic, and consistent effort has been made to belittle and discredit me as a member of the United States Senate and as majority leader of this body. I suppose that nobody recognizes more acutely than I do the difficult position in which I have been placed, and which I have attempted to the best of my ability to occupy during the past 3 years. I have paid no attention to such scurrilous and contemptible attacks. I have felt that they would fall of their own weight, because everybody who knew the facts knew them to be contemptible, scurrilous, and intentionally false.

However, on last Tuesday, in the Evening Star, of Washington, there appeared an article written by a couple of men whom I do not know, with whom I have never conversed, with whom I have never had any dealings, and to whom, so far as I recall, I have never been introduced, except that I have a faint recollection that recently at a social gathering I was introduced to one of them. I do not know which one. The names of these two men are Joseph Alsop and Robert Kintner. In last Tuesday's edition of the Washington Evening Star—and I presume in all the newspapers of the United States willing to buy the article from them—there appeared an article written by these two individuals under the heading "The Capital Parade."

I ask that the clerk read from the desk the article to which I refer.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

THE CAPITAL PARADE—DEMOCRATS ARE ALARMED BY REPUBLICAN PLAN FOR CONGRESSIONAL CAMPAIGN

(By Joseph Alsop and Robert Kintner)

The Democratic congressional leaders are much alarmed by confidential reports of a Republican plan to concentrate money and energy on the congressional campaigns in the last weeks of the election. They have warned the President that even if he is reelected by a fairly substantial margin, he may find his House majority reduced to, or possibly below, the vanishing point. A big drive is on to obtain an emergency fund for Representative PAT DREWRY'S Democratic congressional campaign committee.

Ordinarily, this would be a bad sign for Wendell L. Willkie. In a Presidential year party bosses generally decide to feature their local candidates only when they have despaired of national success. But although Republican National Chairman JOSEPH W. MARTIN is also chieftain of the House Republicans, and might thus be tempted by the strategy of saving the House at all costs, this case is a little different.

It is not the Republican bosses who have decided to let the devil take their Presidential nominee. If the Democratic leaders are correctly informed, it is a small group of prominent businessmen. According to the reports received here, these men have independently decided that while Willkie may be a poor bet, money spent in congressional fights is likely to prove a pretty good investment. Acting on their own, therefore, they are collecting an impressive kitty, which will be divided among the doubtful districts when the campaign reaches its climax and cash money is at a premium of political usefulness.

REPUBLICAN KITTY

If the kitty is lavish enough, and if the election is not a Roosevelt landslide, the Democratic leaders are wise to be worried by the news of what is up. In the first place, the Democrats' prospects in the House fights are obviously less good than in the national voting.

Because of the prolonged session, sitting Members have been able to escape only briefly from Washington. While it was an advantage to seem preoccupied with the Nation's business during the summer, it has been hard on them to be absent while their opponents have been getting in their final licks. Then, too, many people talk of voting for Roosevelt because of the emergency, but putting a check on him in Congress, which may mean much ticket splitting in favor of Republican House nominees. For these reasons, although the Democratic majority in the present House is slightly over 90, the leaders place at least 70 and perhaps 90 seats in the dangerous class.

As one shrewd and highly professional politician told the President. "You can do a hell of a lot more than you'd think with $10,000 or $15,000 put into a district in the last weeks of a congressional campaign." Thus the kitty will not have to be of astronomical proportions. Only $200,000 would damage a great many Democrats, and $400,000 would be pretty luxurious for the Republicans.

Willkie has taken a strong stand on limiting Republican expenditure in accordance with the Hatch Act, but congressional campaigns are out of Willkie's province. If subscribing to the Republican congressional campaign seems an easy way to put a check on the President, it should be possible to raise far more than $400,000 among the numerous wealthy men and women who fear and dislike the Roosevelt policies.

SPECIAL GIFTS AND MR. QUAYLE

This may seem a trifle cynical, but such, unfortunately, are the realities of politics. In collecting their emergency fund the Democrats will have to go to precisely the same sort of contributors as the Republicans, except that the current Democratic "fat cats" commonly have some sort of personal interest in the administration.

The wind will be raised in two ways. Special gifts will be sought, particularly in the South, where a Democratic Congress means much to the people, and where many "fat cats," though unfriendly to the President, are willing to stump up to keep their party in control on the Hill. And as much as possible will be extracted, with the President's help, from the Democratic National Committee.

So far, however, the wind does not seem to have been raised very successfully. There has been bad feeling between the House Democrats and the treasurer of the Democratic National Committee, Oliver Quayle, Jr., ever since the 1938 campaign. On that occasion Quayle promised that by the September before the voting there would be $100,000 for House fights, and then is said to have explained, when September rolled around, that the two big brewers his eye was on had already been tapped for $50,000 apiece for Senator ALBEN W. BARKLEY'S celebrated Kentucky primary.

The bad feeling is more intense now, suggesting that Quayle has not been very generous, and Representative DREWRY is doing only a little better in the special-gifts department than with Quayle. Thus, unless DREWRY finds a gold mine, or Roosevelt comes in by a huge majority, or the Republican congressional kitty is smaller than supposed, the situation in the House may well change considerably after November 5.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I had that entire article read in order that the members of the Senate and others interested might get the connection of the use of my name in the article.

Of course, I knew as soon as I read it that it was an infamous falsehood; I knew that Alsop and Kintner knew when they wrote it that it was an infamous falsehood, and they wrote it for the purpose of making it an infamous falsehood.

This is not the first time they have gone out of their way to attack me. They have done it in the Saturday Evening Post; they have done it in the weekly magazine called Time, to which, I understand, they are anonymous contributors; they have done it, from time to time, in the local evening newspaper, to which I have already made reference, and they have done it in other newspapers, including one which circulates almost all over the State of Kentucky.

In order that I might be assured, however, of the falsity of the statement insofar as it affects me, I called up by telephone Representative PATRICK H. DREWRY, of the State of Virginia, an honorable man who has served his country faithfully and with distinction, and is still doing so, who is now, and was in 1938, the chairman of the Democratic Congressional Committee, whose duty, of course, it is to try to help elect Democratic Congressmen from the various districts of the country, just as it is the duty of the Republican Congressional Campaign Committee to try to help elect Republicans to the House of Representatives, and just as it is the duty of the senatorial campaign committees of both parties of this body to do the same thing with reference to Senators. Representative PATRICK H. DREWRY advised me, and authorized me to say, that no such statement was ever made to him or to anybody in his presence in regard to my campaign in 1938. He said he was willing either to write me a letter or to make an affidavit that there was absolutely no truth in the statement in the article which has just been read.

I also sent a telegram to Hon. Oliver A. Quayle, Jr., treasurer of the Democratic National Committee in New York, which I ask to have read from the desk.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the clerk will read as requested.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., October 16, 1940.

Hon. OLIVER QUAYLE, Jr.,
Treasurer, Democratic National Headquarters, Hotel Biltmore, New York City:

In the Alsop and Kintner syndicated article under the heading "The Capital Parade" appearing in the Washington Star of yesterday and explaining what they claim to have been your failure to provide a promised $100,000 to the Democratic congressional campaign committee in the November election 1938, you are represented as having said to the committee that the reason you could not provide this $100,000 was because "the two big breweries your eyes were on had already been tapped for fifty thousand apiece for Senator ALBEN W. BARKLEY'S celebrated Kentucky primary." No such sum was received by my campaign, nor was any such sum sought or expected or expended in my campaign. All the funds collected and expended in my behalf would not have amounted to that sum from all sources. I have conferred with Congressman DREWRY, chairman of the congressional committee, who states that no such statement was ever made to him and that the only time he discussed campaign funds with you was in Mr. Charley Michelson's office in New York in September 1938, and that in that conversation neither my name nor my campaign was discussed directly or indirectly in any fashion. As a matter of justice to me, I am entitled to know whether you made this statement to anybody connected with the congressional committee or anybody else; and if so, to whom you made it and the circumstances under which it was made. Please advise me at once.

ALBEN W. BARKLEY,
United States Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have the following answer to that telegram from Mr. Quayle, which I ask to have read.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

OCTOBER 16.

Hon. ALBEN W. BARKLEY,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

In prompt reply to your day letter about the statement attributed to me promising $100,000 to the Democratic congressional campaign committee of 1938. The statement by Alsop and Kintner is a barefaced and unqualified falsehood. I never said such a thing, never did such a thing, and I marvel that anybody would attribute anything of the sort to me. I don't know either of the writers, and nobody asked me if there was any basis for the story. Equally baseless is the statement that two big breweries had been tapped for $50,000 apiece for your campaign characterized as "celebrated Kentucky primary." I never said anything of the kind or even had any knowledge either directly or indirectly of such a transaction or anything resembling it. Your conference today with Congressman DREWRY substantiates my statement that I only discussed with him campaign funds on one occasion, and at that time no reference whatsoever was made by him or by me regarding your campaign. Congressman DREWRY will further corroborate my statement that I never promised him at any time any sum of money which this committee would contribute to the congressional campaign of 1938.

OLIVER A. QUAYLE, JR.,
Treasurer, Democratic National Committee.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the truthfulness or falsity of the statement contained in the article could have been ascertained by a telephone call to me, to Mr. Quayle, or to Representative DREWRY. Any man with any sense of honor who occupies the position of a newspaper correspondent would have ascertained the true facts or the falsity of the statement before it was printed.

I have no interest in the personal opinion of Alsop and Kintner regarding me as a man or as a United States Senator, for their opinion of me, no matter how degraded it may be, cannot possibly be as low as my opinion of them. What amazes me is that newspapers which are supposed to be reputable would indulge in carrying to their readers all over the United States that sort of garbage, gathered up in the intellectual and political back alleys of Washington. Therefore, Mr. President, I have taken this opportunity to put in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, for the benefit of my friends in the Senate, in Kentucky, and throughout the Nation, a refutation of the scurrilous, contemptible, and indecent article which these two men have written in regard to me.

Of course, there will be no retraction by them of this false and scurrilous article, because, having known it to be false when they wrote it, and thus having convinced any reasonable man that they are bereft of honor, decency, and self-respect, they will not retract the falsehood which they have peddled all over the United States.

I regret that I am compelled to use such language toward anybody, but I denounce the entire article insofar as it relates to me—and by analogy I think all of it is equally untrue—as a willful, mendacious, contemptible, unmitigated, premeditated, scurrilous, unconscionable falsehood. I denounce the men who wrote it as scurrilous, dishonorable, unconscionable, unprincipled, premeditated, unmitigated, congenital, mercenary, and commercial purveyors of premeditated falsehood in the press of the United States. I say "mercenary and commercial" because the article was written for pay. They receive pay for disseminating that sort of stuff throughout the United States; but, in my judgment, they would rather tell a falsehood for nothing than be paid to tell the truth.

I waive all senatorial immunity for what I say here. I waive the constitutional provision which makes me and all other Senators unaccountable for what they say on the floor of the Senate. I want the Senate and the country to understand how I feel about these two journalistic scavengers who flourish in the atmosphere of falsehood and never rise from it sufficiently to get a fresh breath of pure air in the atmosphere of truth and honor.

Mr. President, that is all I have to say. I hope I have made myself clear.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I congratulate the Senator from Kentucky on his candor and courage in the statement he has just made. I should like to say, however, that I do not think such a statement is necessary insofar as any Member of the United States Senate who has served with the Senator from Kentucky is concerned, whether he agreed with him or disagreed with him on any particular matter; nor is it necessary with the multitude of people in Kentucky and throughout the United States who know him. I think it is very fortunate that the Senator from Kentucky had the courage and candor to make a statement repudiating such an outrageous attack upon his integrity.

In this connection let me refer to another article. I do not know whether it was written by the same gentlemen; but sometime ago there appeared in the magazine Time, to which, it has been suggested, these gentlemen are anonymous contributors, a statment that the Senator from Kentucky and myself are bitter enemies. It so happens that the Senator from Kentucky and myself have been friends for more than 25 years. Occasionally we have disagreed in the Senate. Probably we shall disagree in the Senate in the future; but I am certain that I have always entertained for him the very highest respect and a very great degree of affection, and I have reason to believe that he has entertained for me a certain amount of affection. It is an outrageous thing for such statements, put out by columnists over the United States, to go unchallenged; and I congratulate the Senator from Kentucky on his courage in making the statement.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I wish to join the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] in congratulating the Senator from Kentucky upon his courage in making the statement he has made. I have served with the Senator for a good many years, and, while I have disagreed at times with the Senator from Kentucky and other Senators, I think it was not necessary for the Senator to convince his colleagues and the Senate that the article was untrue. All of us who know him have the greatest respect for his ability, his courage, and his honesty. I deplore the sort of gossip mongering and key-hole-spying type of writing that is indulged in nowadays by so-called columnists, many of whom have aptly been called "calumnists." I deplore the sort of article which was written about the Senator from Kentucky just as I deplore the sort of articles written about others by these news-column scavengers. I particularly refer to the article written by Pearson and Allen about the late Senator Ernest Lundeen—after his death when the writers knew he could not defend himself. The article that was written and printed about Senator Lundeen was shocking; it was indecent and contemptible. It is inconceivable that any decent newspaper in the country would carry such a story when the subject of the piece was dead and had no redress. The reflection sought to be cast by this vicious, lying villany will rest upon his widow and their children throughout their entire lives by those people who rely on the wholly inaccurate writing of these tipster calumnists.

Mr. President, there has grown up in American journalism in recent years a new type of writing and a new type of writer. This hybrid, which is neither fish nor fowl, is the syndicated column and those who write it are columnists. These men are of two general types. Some who write newspaper columns are simply commentators on facts that are generally known, or that are available in the public records, or have appeared in previous issues of the newspapers. But the important thing is that these writers are dealing with facts. Such columns are merely the expressions of the opinion of some well-known writer on the meaning and effects of facts already known to many newspaper readers. The reader is getting exactly what he thinks he is getting. He is getting a well-known writer's opinion about public questions and events. The reader may agree or disagree with the columnists. The reader may like his general point of view, or dislike it. But the reader is not bamboozled about what he is getting.

The other type of columnist purport to give the reader inside information which he otherwise would not be able to get, something that is confidential or secret until the column appears making it public. This is the key-hole peeper, the bed-chamber attendant, the snooper. In the "inside-story" column the reader rarely has any means of knowing whether he is getting what he is told he is getting. The reader is led to believe that he is being taken behind the scenes. In another column he is duped into thinking he is seeing the inner wheels go-round. In another he thinks he has been privileged to know the inside story.

I realize that the appeal of these columns is great. Unfortunately the average reader does not know that much of the time that instead of being given the real behind-the-scenes picture, he is being deliberately duped, that he is being fed sheer propaganda, that he has read highly inaccurate information which not even a cub reporter, not alone a reputable newspaper correspondent, could write as news without losing his reputation for accuracy and his standing among fellow newspapermen.

A sharp distinction should be made in the public mind between these shoddy purveyors of half truths and misleading innuendos and the working newspaper corps in Washington. The straight news reporters who work for the great press associations, the daily newspaper correspondents and the bureau heads are motivated by one compelling idea—get the story and get it straight. In the main their stories are accurate—amazingly accurate when you realize the handicaps under which they work. They are the unsung heroes of the newspaper world and they contribute to the esteem and public repute which a newspaper may earn.

The tipster columnist is destroying the reputation of our great daily newspapers. That is the first step toward the destruction of the newspaper itself. It is time that newspaper publishers and editors realized that it is they that are jeopardizing the freedom of the press; that license and calumny inevitably boomerangs against those who employ it. Publishers and editors hold a public trust; they, far more than their readers, realize how the reader is fooled when he relies on a tipster column.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to thank the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Montana for the remarks which they have made following my statement.

CHARLES S. LADINSKY AND MOE KANNER

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, within the past week the House has passed House bill 10285. A similar Senate bill had already been unanimously reported by the Claims Committee of the Senate, and is now on the calendar. Inasmuch as there is more or less of a time element involved in the situation, and inasmuch as the distinguished chairman of the Claims Committee reported very fully about the matter, I ask unanimous consent that the House bill may be taken up and passed.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The House bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 10285) for the relief of Charles S. Ladinsky and Moe Kanner.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, Senate bill 4287 will be indefinitely postponed.

RELATIONS WITH RUSSIA

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, a few days ago I received a letter from the editorial board of the New Masses, a Communist newspaper published in the city of New York, requesting my reaction to the suggestion recently made by a distinguished Member of another body of the Congress, to the effect that the United States should proceed to throw itself into the arms of Soviet Russia, and asking for my answer by today. I have written an answer to the New Masses, expressing my opinion of a prospective alliance between the United States and Soviet Russia, or communistic Russia, and stating that, in my judgment, all dictators, Stalin, Hitler, and Mussolini, are equally abhorrent to the people of the United States; that they are all bloody-handed murderers, and that I regarded it as an attack on the sincerity of the general sympathy expressed by the American people less than a year ago when Stalin ruthlessly raped the gallant little Republic of Finland for the suggestion to be made, in responsible sources in the United States, that we should now form an alliance or enter into close relations with Soviet Russia.

I ask unanimous consent that the letter addressed to me by the editorial board of the New Masses and my response to it may be inserted in the RECORD.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter and reply are as follows:

OCTOBER 11, 1940.

Senator BENNETT CHAMP CLARK,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR CLARK: The editors of New Masses are inviting a number of leading Congressmen, publicists, and churchmen to comment upon the recent proposals made by Representative SABATH in a speech before the House of Representatives urging cooperation between the United States and the Soviet Union. Mr. SABATH said, in part:

"Yesterday's leading editorial in the Washington Times-Herald emphasizes a viewpoint concerning Russia that I have suggested and recommended on several occasions, the last time as recently as September 24.

"My query has been, and still is today, 'Why should not the United States try to cultivate the good will of the Soviet Republics? It is realized now in many quarters that Great Britain made a serious if not well-nigh fatal mistake by not concluding and cementing friendly relations with Russia ahead of Germany. Should we repeat that error? * * *

" 'I know there are critics of Russia and its policies. Investigation will reveal, I sincerely believe, that a whole lot of the criticism of Russia is due to Nazi and Fascist propaganda. That is one of the subtle tricks of the leaders of these two "isms." They conduct all kinds of subversive activities and then try to escape detection and blame by pointing their fingers at the Communists. * * *

" 'And regardless of what the Nazi, Fascist, or capitalist groups in the United States may say about Russia, I reiterate that the best interest of the United States will be served not by criticizing and assailing Russia but by taking just the opposite course and seeking her friendly cooperation. The latter course will inure to the benefit of America, and it is the welfare and safety of America that in these critical days should be our sole objective.' "

Will you send us your reactions to these remarks of Mr. SABATH in a statement of from 50 to 200 words? Could we have it air mail, special delivery by Thursday, October 17?

Thanking you for your cooperation.

Sincerely,

JOSEPH NORTH,
A. B. MAGIL,
For the Editorial Board.

WASHINGTON, D. C., October 17, 1940.

Mr. JOSEPH NORTH and
Mr. A. B. MAGIL,
For the Editorial Board, New Masses, New York City, N. Y.

GENTLEMEN: You have asked me for my reaction to the remarks of Congressman SABATH looking toward throwing the United States into the arms of Communist Russia.

My reaction is that I am in favor of peace with all nations unless they attack us or unless we have competent evidence that they are about to attack us—either externally or internally.

I think that all ideas of dictatorship are equally abhorrent to American institutions and American ideals, no matter by what name they may be called. From our standpoint, I see no difference between Hitler and Stalin and Mussolini, all of whom are bloody-handed murderers and all of whom have committed unspeakable crimes against humanity.

I see no merit in the proposition that we should regard Mussolini and Hitler as our natural and inevitable enemies and fold to our breasts the ruthless aggressor in the brutal and unspeakable rape of Finland.

I cannot understand the claims to sincerity of Americans who only a few months ago professed to be indignant about the wanton invasion of Finland and who now advocate the appeasement of the Russian bear—with its claws still dripping from patriotic Finnish blood—by turning over to it $5,000,000 worth of machine tools now imperatively needed for the defense of the United States.

Yours very truly,

BENNETT C. CLARK,
United States Senator from Missouri.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I think there is a little executive business to be transacted, and I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

NAVY AND MARINE CORPS NOMINATIONS REPORTED AND CONFIRMED

Mr. GILLETTE. From the Committee on Naval Affairs I report sundry nominations in the Navy and Marine Corps.

These nominations are routine, and there is a large number of them. I ask unanimous consent that the rule be suspended, that they be presently confirmed, and that the President be notified today, because it is important that this should be done.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Iowa? The Chair hears none, and the nominations are confirmed en bloc, and the President will be notified.

If there be no further reports of committees, the nominations on the calendar will be stated.

ARMY NOMINATIONS CONFIRMED

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, there are some nominations which were reported on Monday by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON], constituting routine promotions in the Army. They are now lying on the table. I ask that they be taken from the table and confirmed en bloc, and that the President be notified.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nominations referred to by the Senator from Kentucky are confirmed en bloc, and the President will be notified at once.

The clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

POSTMASTER—NOMINATION PASSED OVER

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Thomas E. Trulove to be postmaster at Inglewood, Calif.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is advised that on a previous occasion this nomination was passed over, and, without objection, it will be passed over again.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I do not recall why the nomination was passed over.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is advised that it was passed over on the objection of one of the Senators from the State who is not now present.

Mr. BARKLEY. Very well; let it be passed over again.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 17, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name, Thy kingdom come; Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us, and lead us not into temptation but deliver us from evil; for Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday, October 14, 1940, was read and approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

DEVELOPMENT OF INTERNATIONAL RAPIDS SECTION OF THE ST. LAWRENCE RIVER—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—(H. DOC. NO. 978)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

The surveys of the Federal Power Commission and the National Power Policy Committee have convinced me that the development of the International Rapids section of the St. Lawrence River should be undertaken at the earliest possible date as a part of adequate provision to meet the continuing power requirements of the defense program in certain essential centers of war-material production in the Northeastern States.

The potential power at this site is best adapted to meet the requirements of expansion in certain essential defense industries, including aluminum, magnesium, ferro-alloys, chemicals, etc. Actually, the Aluminum Co. of America has recently arranged for the import of 30,000 kilowatts of additional power from Canada to meet the pressing requirements of its existing plant located at the very site of the proposed St. Lawrence project and, I am reliably informed, is seeking additional supplies from across the border. Such imported supplies are, in effect, on an annual basis, subject to being withdrawn if required by the Canadian power market.

It is urgent that this project be undertaken at the present time not only from the point of view of our own defense, but also in terms of those of our neighbor, Canada. The Province of Ontario needs to be able to count upon the early availability of this power to meet its growing load. The project may, therefore, be considered as an essential part of the program of continental defense which is being actively worked out by representatives of the two peoples.

I am informed that if the potential power of the International Rapids is to be available to carry the peak load of 1945, preliminary investigations, particularly engineering surveys of the site, including core borings, test pits, soil analyses, etc., must be undertaken immediately. I have, therefore, allocated $1,000,000 of the special defense fund to the Federal Power Commission and Corps of Engineers, United States Army, for this preliminary work and have appointed a committee of four to advise me in planning the work and to cooperate with appropriate agencies of the Canadian Government. The members of this committee are Leland Olds, Chairman of the Federal Power Commission, as chairman; A. A. Berle, Assistant Secretary of State; Brig. Gen. Thomas M. Robins, of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, Corps of Engineers, United States Army; and Gerald V. Cruise, representative of the trustees of the Power Authority of the State of New York. I have directed the United States Corps of Engineers to begin the necessary investigations immediately.

The preliminary investigations which I have authorized involve no actual construction or commitment to construct. In taking this means of advising Congress of the surveys I am having made I wish to make it clear that Congress will be kept advised of such further steps as may be necessary.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, October 17, 1940.

HOMING PIGEONS—VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I am returning herewith without my approval H. R. 7813, "An act to safeguard the homing pigeon."

I have a feeling that this is carrying national defense a little too far in times of peace. I am inclined to think that there are no Americans, or at least very few of them, who would deliberately shoot or capture a homing pigeon. I think that there are practically no people who would deliberately remove or alter a message in the leg band of a homing pigeon. After all, homing pigeons do not closely resemble any wild-game birds.

If any real need should emerge for the enactment of such legislation, there would be plenty of time to enact it. In the meantime, this seems like a somewhat unnecessary new law.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, October 17, 1940.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the message and the accompanying bill be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next, and that when the House adjourns on Monday next it adjourn to meet on the following Thursday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

DESIGNATION OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Chair designates the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON] to serve as Speaker pro tempore on Monday next and on Thursday next.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. That permission has already been granted.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that today, after the disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk, I be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair believes that that request does not come within the purview of the agreement that was entered into the other day and prefers not to entertain the request.

GENERAL AUTHORITY FOR EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RANKIN. A moment ago the Speaker stated in response to a request submitted by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER] that the gentleman already had permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Do all Members have that permission?

The SPEAKER. That is correct.

Mr. RANKIN. If so, for how long?

The SPEAKER. For 30 days. The Chair will read the unanimous-consent request submitted by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] on October 14:

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members of the House, notwithstandng any adjournment or recess of the House, may have the privilege, for 30 calendar days, to revise and extend their own remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on more than one subject, if they so desire, and may also include therein such short quotations as may be necessary to explain or complete such extensions of remarks.

Unanimous consent was granted for that.

Mr. RANKIN. On more than one subject?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Under that ruling, Mr. Speaker, would it be possible for me to insert in the RECORD a letter written to me by the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON]?

The SPEAKER. The Chair doubts if that would come in the category of a quotation that would be explanatory.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a communication addressed to me by the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to object, but we have a gentlemen's agreement we must preserve. It is my duty as majority leader to preserve that gentlemen's agreement. It is not a question of what I should like to do personally, it is a question of what I have to do as majority leader in carrying out the gentlemen's agreement into which we have entered. I am fearful that unless the extensions are confined to what has already been agreed upon we shall be gradually extending ourselves clearly into active business. It would seem to me that if the gentleman from Pennsylvania were to place some of his own remarks in his extension, then, if the letter to which he refers were necessary to convey more completely the point he has in mind, it might come within the purview of the unanimous-consent request. However, I have to object to anything that is in violation of the agreement.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order to propound a question of personal privilege today under this agreement or would that have to stand until there is a regular session?

The SPEAKER. That would be a matter of business, and the Chair thinks it would come within the purview of the agreement.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I want to know when the House will take up consideration of the veto of the homing pigeons bill, particularly, in view of the fact that anyone who served overseas in the last war knows that homing pigeons are a part of national defense and offense.

The SPEAKER. The matter has been referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and the House must await action by that committee.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 10495. An act to amend section 61 of the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, by adding a proviso which will permit States to organize military units not a part of the National Guard, and for other purposes.

PUNISHMENT OF PERSONS TRANSPORTING STOLEN ANIMALS IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 308)

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. KING) laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I return herewith, without my approval, S. 3786, a bill "to provide for the punishment of persons transporting stolen animals in interstate commerce, and for other purposes."

The bill would make it a Federal offense knowingly to transport in interstate or foreign commerce any stolen cattle, hog, sheep, horse, or mule, or the carcass or hide, or any part of the carcass or hide of any such stolen animal, or knowingly to receive any such animal, or the carcass or hide, or any part of the carcass or hide thereof, moving in or constituting a part of interstate or foreign commerce. The penalty for the offense would be imprisonment for not more than 5 years or a fine of not more than $5,000, or both.

The provisions of this bill are identical with those contained in S. 90, passed during the first session of the present Congress. I withheld my approval of that bill because of my belief, as set forth in my message to the Congress of May 24, 1939, that the bill represented an unjustifiable extension of the Federal police power to embrace a particular class of offenses of a petty-larcency type.

No additional information has been submitted to me which would justify action different from that which I found it necessary to take in connection with S. 90, and I am, therefore, withholding my approval of the present bill, S. 3786.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, October 21, 1940.

Second. Is is true that England has been promised flying fortresses as soon as the election is over?

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, OCTOBER 21, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON].

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, the Father of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, we thank Thee for the light of Him, though it shines faintly in us, yet it breaks forth in full-orbed glory and arches the skies of the world. Amid the thick darkness that shrouded Calvary, His heavenly compassion is as the radiance of the sun breaking through a bank of storm clouds. It fell upon His malefactors for whom He prayed; it lingered about the bent form of Mary, His holy, grief-stricken mother, and He opened the door for the first repentant sinner of the uplifted cross. In His name we pray that beyond the night with which this world is struggling we may soon see the promise and hope of the morning. O come, blessed Christ, shine like a beacon through these stormy times and rest like a halo on the brow of groveling humanity until the scorching flames of hate are extinguished in their own tomb of darkness. Long-suffering God, Judge of all the earth, we pray Thee to chasten the proud and the intolerant which so often make life a solemn mockery and a sorrowing delusion. Bless our brothers of other lands and give them the gift of peace. The Lord God bless America with her valleys and with the dawn upon the mountains, with her winding roads, meadows, forests, and with her teeming cities where cross the crowded ways of human life; ever enable her citizens to maintain the life line of our Republic. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, October 17, 1940, was read and approved.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns on Thursday next it stand adjourned until the following Monday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

CUSTODIAL SERVICE EMPLOYEES IN POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT—VETO MESSAGE (H. DOC. NO. 980)

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States, which was read by the Clerk:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, H. R. 892, "to extend to custodial-service employees employed by the Post Office Department certain benefits applicable to postal employees."

This bill proposes to provide a semiautomatic salary advancement plan for the custodial-service employees (except part-time char forces) employed by the Post Office Department. Employees concerned are occupying positions the pay scales of which are established by administrative application of the compensation schedules of the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

The bill is objectionable, first, for the reason that it selects custodial employees of one department for preferential treatment over the custodial employees of other departments; second, because it provides a semiautomatic plan for advancing the compensation of one class of employees in one group under the Classification Act without taking into consideration the effect of such increase upon the rates of pay for other groups under the act; third, because it runs counter to the long-established policy of the Congress of including in each appropriation act for the executive branch of the Government a provision (known as the average provision) limiting the compensation of employees in each grade, which, on a per annum basis, would not be in excess of the average rate of pay of the grade to which their positions were allocated and which provision is in accord with section 7 of the Classification Act of 1923 relating to salary increases within grades; and fourth, because it would, to the extent of its applicability, negative the action which has been taken by the Congress in making appropriations for the executive branch of the Government for 1940 and 1941 in connection with which it has placed specific limitations as to the purpose and amount of funds that may be used for salary increase in grades in the interest of uniformity throughout the executive branch for positions where the compensation is fixed under the provisions of the Classification Act of 1923.

I have on a number of occasions expressed myself as not being in favor of salary legislation which would give preferential treatment to a single group of employees. Legislation of this type simply discriminates against other equally deserving groups and makes it more difficult to solve salary-administration problems from a Government-wide viewpoint.

I regret, therefore, that I do not feel justified in approving the bill.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, October 21, 1940.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal.

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the veto message and the bill be referred to the Committee on Post Office and Post Roads and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

ADDITIONAL LANDS FOR CHICKAMAUGA AND CHATTANOOGA NATIONAL MILITARY PARK—VETO MESSAGE (H. DOC. NO. 981)

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States, which was read by the Clerk:

To the House of Representatives:

I am returning herewith, without my approval, H. R. 8512, entitled "An act to provide for the acquisition of additional lands for the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park, and for other purposes."

This enrolled bill would authorize an appropriation of not to exceed $125,000 for the purchase of a tract of approximately 2,000 acres for addition to the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park.

It has been the general policy in acquiring additional lands for national parks to require that such acquisitions be effected by donations or purchase through donated funds; and while there have been some exceptions, the general rule is, I think, a salutary one.

In withholding my approval on October 14, 1940, to H. R. 2728 authorizing an appropriation of $45,000 for the purchase of certain lands to be added to the Cleveland National Forest in Orange County, Calif., I indicated my belief that justification could not be found for the acquisition at this time, by purchase, of lands primarily recreational in character, and my feeling that Federal land-purchase activities should, for the present, be confined to the most critical areas of maladjustment in land use.

Since there does not appear to be any urgent reason for extending the boundaries of the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park at this time, I am constrained to withhold my approval of this bill.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, October 21, 1940.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal.

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the bill and veto message be referred to the Committee on the Public Lands and ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, at the last meeting there were present over a hundred. There are very few here today. In the language of a very famous character who was a Member of this House at one time and whose name I cannot recall—it was not "Sunset" Cox and it was not Pvt. John Allen, but it was some great Member of this House——

Mr. RANKIN. Is the gentleman sure it was not Pvt. John Allen?

Mr. SHANNON. I am sure it was not, but some great Member cried out, "Mr. Speaker, what are we here for?"

I would like to know what are we here for? We passed a resolution that deprived us of any authority. We did it. It was not the other side. The other side still has authority to do things. I repeat, can somebody give me the name of that distinguished Member of this House who cried out frequently, "What are we here for"? [Laughter.]

BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on October 18, 1940, present to the President, for his approval, a bill of the House of the following title:

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

SENATE

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 24, 1940

(Legislative day of Wednesday, September 18, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty and everlasting God, in whom we live and move and have our being, we thank Thee for the solemn trust of life which Thou hast committed to our keeping. Make us ever mindful of our insufficiency in this hour of the world's great need, for Thine, O Lord, is the greatness, and the power, and the glory, and the victory, and the majesty: For all that is in the heaven and in the earth is Thine; Thine is the kingdom, O Lord, and Thou art exalted as head above all.

And as Thou hast willed the restoration of all things by Thy well-beloved Son, in whom dwelleth all the fullness of the godhead bodily, graciously grant, we beseech Thee, that all the families of the world who are scattered abroad by the wounds of sin may be subdued under His most gentle rule, and that all men may come to know the height and the depth of Thy love, which passeth human knowledge. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

SHIPS ACQUIRED BY THE ARMY FOR TROOP TRANSPORT

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I noticed in yesterday's New York Herald Tribune a headline stating "Army acquires liner Roosevelt as a troop ship." The article reads in part:

> Basil Harris, executive vice president of the United States Lines, confirmed reports last night that the War Department has acquired the company's New York-Bermuda liner President Roosevelt. The reported purchase price was $700,000, and it is understood that she will be converted into a troop ship for the Army Transport Service.

Further, the article states:

> Sale of the Baltimore Mail Line's five vessels, the City of Baltimore, City of Los Angeles, City of Newport News, City of Norfolk, and City of San Francisco, to the Navy, which is expected to convert them into transports or supply ships, was rumored several days ago.

I should like to know whether or not the War Department proposes to use the ships to transport the draftees up the Mississippi River. We have been assured that no American boys will die on foreign soil. We were assured not later than last night by a very high official of the Government that such was the case, and that there would be no war unless we should be attacked. Of course, in the past we were assured of many, many things in platform promises. Last night the administration official stood by the platform, as was the case in 1932, when the platform was supposed to be upheld 100 percent. But it seems peculiar to me at this time, when they are saying that there will be no foreign war, that the United States Army is acquiring so many troop ships. Many of us are wondering about the subterfuge of just such actions as this, preaching peace while buying ships to take boys across the ocean.

Why does the Army buy troop ships for the defense of the United States? The President Roosevelt could not go up the Mississippi, and I know she could not go up the Monongahela in my State.

Where are the troop ships to take American soldiers if they are not to take them across the sea? Let us get rid of this subterfuge and let the American people know the truth about what is going on in Washington and what plans are being set up. I want the American people to know if they are to be taken into a foreign war. Statements will not keep them out of foreign wars. It does no good to preach peace and to practice acts of war. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair admonishes the occupants of the galleries that no demonstrations are permitted. If they are persisted in, the galleries will be cleared.

Mr. HOLT. I am reminded of a statement I made the other day when the question was asked as to why the United States

Army was making a survey of caskets. The Army was making a survey of caskets, and when it was asked why it was making such a survey this is what Major Ginsburgh said:

After all, if you have 1,000,000 men under arms, even in peacetime, you are going to have some casualties. Some men are going to fall off trucks and have other accidents and illnesses.

Think of that. A survey of the casket industry of America to buy enough coffins for soldiers who fall off trucks.

Those are the things that arouse fear in America. It is not we who are calling for peace who are arousing fear. I object to the actions of the men who are preaching peace and who do not mean it. If we are to have war, let the American people know the truth. We know that a survey for caskets is not for men falling off trucks. We had better give them a course in how to ride trucks so that they will not fall off. We know why caskets are to be bought. We know why troop ships are to be bought, and the American people should know by this time. Troop ships and caskets do not mean peace.

I am becoming tired of the subterfuge of peace while we are going to war. The officials of the administration are not going to war. American boys, and not the fellows who are making the war, will sacrifice their blood. The Diplomatic Corps and the State Department officials are exempt from military service. They make the war, and the American boys fight and die in it. Let us reverse the tables and, for once, let the fellows who want war die in it.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know whether or not I would be violating the understanding of the gentlemen's agreement if I should state to the House that I expect today to file, as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the annual report with reference to the expenditures of the Government during this session of Congress.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I understand this is the gentleman's own remarks?

Mr. TAYLOR. Absolutely.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, of course I would not undertake to answer what the Chair may say in reference to the parliamentary inquiry, but it is my distinct understanding that where a Member extends his own remarks he has 30 days in which to do so.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I understood that was agreed to by unanimous consent.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is my understanding.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. In other words, the individual Members may extend their own remarks in the RECORD without unanimous consent.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is my understanding.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] is correct.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 6 minutes p. m.), under its previous order, the House adjourned until Monday, October 28, 1940, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE

MONDAY, OCTOBER 28, 1940

(Legislative day of Wednesday, September 18, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God most high, Father of an infinite majesty, in the light of whose presence we would sun our souls: Breathe on us with Thy quickening breath, and meet the dull flow of our life with murmurs and scents from the infinite sea. God of hope, grant us the faith to keep alive and to sustain the flame which hope hath lit. God of consolation, visit us with the comfort which garrisons the heart against the devastating effect of sorrow and pain. God of peace, make us to follow after the things that make for peace for ourselves and for others; and have Thou us in Thy holy keeping, that we may be preserved in all truth and purity, forever plastic to the touch of Thine own shaping hand. We ask it in the name and for the sake of Jesus Christ, Thy Son, our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. WHEELER, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day of Thursday, October 24, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

REPORT OF PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. KING) laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

As required by paragraph (3) of section 7 of the act of Congress approved March 24, 1934, entitled "An act to provide for the complete independence of the Philippine Islands, to provide for the adoption of a constitution and a form of government for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," I transmit herewith, for the information of the Congress, the Fourth Annual Report of the President of the Philippines to the President and the Congress of the United States covering the 6-month period ended June 30, 1939.

The enclosed report covers a 6-month period instead of a full calendar year as heretofore. This change is occasioned by a provision in Commonwealth Act No. 373, under which the fiscal year as of July 1 to June 30 is established. Formerly the Commonwealth's fiscal year corresponded with the calendar year.

THE WHITE HOUSE, October 28, 1940.

[NOTE.—Report accompanied similar message to the House of Representatives.]

CHARLES B. PAYNE—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 309)

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I am returning herewith, without my approval, a bill (S. 217) for the relief of Charles B. Payne.

The bill proposes to award compensation in the sum of $1,000 to Charles B. Payne, a teacher employed in an Indian school at San Felipe, N. Mex., for personal injuries sustained by his minor son, James Wallace Payne.

It appears that on September 25, 1934, James Wallace Payne, then 12 years of age, was attacked without provocation by an insane Indian who apparently was in an insane frenzy at the time. Subsequently the Indian was immediately taken into custody, adjudged insane, and was eventually committed to an institution for the mentally afflicted. It also appears that the Indian had been suffering from mental disorders for some time previously, to the knowledge of his neighbors and friends. The other Indians at the pueblo had failed to take any steps to secure his commitment to an institution.

While this lamentable incident is to be greatly deplored, I am unable to perceive any moral or ethical obligation on the part of the Government to compensate the young man for the injuries inflicted upon him by the unfortunate insane person. Surely it can hardly be said that failure on the part of governmental authorities to take into custody a person known by his neighbors to be insane creates a moral obligation on the part of the Government to compensate anyone who is injured as a result of ravages committed by the afflicted individual. The fact that in this case the insane person was an Indian does not seem to evoke the application of any other moral principles than those just discussed.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, October 25, 1940.

SETTLEMENT WITH PAYEES OF LOST OR STOLEN CHECKS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to authorize the Treasurer of the United States to make settlements with payees of lost or stolen checks, which have been paid on forged endorsements, in advance of reclamation, and for other purposes, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

PETITION

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a resolution of the Northwest Federation of Improvement Clubs, Chicago, Ill., favoring the granting of Federal aid in the construction of subway systems in urban areas for the dual purpose of good transportation in peacetime and adequate protection of the populace from bombing in time of war, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

OUR FAR EAST POLICY

[Mr. WHEELER asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the New York Daily News, also published in the Washington Times-Herald, entitled "What Is Our Far East Policy?" which appears in the Appendix.]

WENDELL WILLKIE

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, the attempts which have been made by those connected with the Democratic National Committee to smear the good family name of Wendell Willkie on a racial issue have received from Chairman Edward J. Flynn the condemnation rightly deserved. This unfortunate occurrence calls for increased vigilance on the part of all who desire to maintain a true American practice of toleration. The use of funds and the headquarters of the Democratic National Committee for a smear purpose is surely to be deplored. Much damage has been done, for it is always easier to start rumors, no matter how false they may be, than to stop them.

The whispering campaign which now has become public against the good family name of Wendell Willkie shows the venom, the hate, the downright malice of men who apparently are willing to stoop to the lowest depths in order to win an election. The spirit of persecution abroad in the land as a part of the third-term campaign is a wicked violation of our American traditions.

As a resident of Elwood, I knew the Willkie family. I knew Herman Willkie and his wife, the parents of Wendell Willkie. I know the strong spirit of devotion and loyalty which was so apparent in this family. The respect and admiration of that community for the Willkie family is unquestioned. It was not until the heat of a political campaign that the colored division of the Democratic National Committee saw fit to suggest that the Willkie family was intolerant of the colored race.

The New York Sun of October 12 carried a news article referring to a reported attempt on the part of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] to have photographers take pictures of a sign said to have been found on one of the highways leading to Elwood cautioning colored persons to remain out of the city. Certainly no such sign was there during the many years I lived in Elwood. I tried to get direct word from the Senator from Indiana concerning this matter, but was not able to see him personally. Therefore I do not wish to accept what was casually mentioned in the newspapers. I cannot, however, refrain from saying that the current trend of the third-term campaign was lowered to a plane of intolerance by Henry Wallace when he opened his campaign for Vice President, declaring that the paramount issue of this election is a choice between President Roosevelt and Adolf Hitler.

I knew Elwood when it was but a struggling town of a few thousand persons. Many of the original settlers were Jeffersonian Democrats, coming from a few of our great Southern States. They were joined by a contingent of Union soldiers and their families. Elwood has always been a place with the spirit of "live and let live." The warm spirit of welcome which had been extended to the members of many racial groups was not denied the colored race. If ever the democratic spirit prevailed, it was to be found in Elwood.

This smear document charges that—

> Willkie was nominated in Philadelphia by the Hitler formula, otherwise known as the "blitzkrieg" method. Hitler grabbed power and control of Germany in this manner—"fifth columns," bribery, trickery, and false propaganda. Senator VANDENBERG was the only Presidential candidate at the Republican convention to release his delegates to Willkie or to any other candidate. VANDENBERG is the leading obstructionist to preparedness in the Senate. He leads the interference to all things that would prepare us against the invasion of Hitler.

Those are the exact words of this document as issued under the name of the colored division of the Democratic National Committee. It is small wonder that Chairman Flynn now seeks to repudiate these malicious remarks, and is said to have dismissed the persons responsible for it.

Surely the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] has been unfairly mentioned in this article. The great, able, forward-looking, American-minded Senator from Michigan has ever been a champion of our national rights and the protector of our national destinies. His record in the Senate is unimpeachable proof that he has ever sought to advance the best interests of the American people. His record in national defense cannot be questioned.

In the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for August 30 I find that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] is quoted as saying:

> You know Willkie comes from Elwood, Ind., and you [colored people] have to have a special permit for colored people to come there, and that is the way the Republicans can conduct their town in Indiana.

During the days when I was city clerk there were a number of Democrats, including the mayor, holding city offices; and I know that no permit was then required such as the one to which the Senator refers. Since then there have been approximately as many Democratic as Republican administrations in Elwood.

Wendell Willkie's father was a great liberal; and in a day when labor was having a great struggle for recognition he espoused the cause of the workingman, and championed it most effectively.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, a telegram I have received from Mayor George M. Bonham, of Elwood, and Dr. G. V. Newcomer, who has lived there for 50 years, together with other prominent citizens.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The telegram is as follows:

ELWOOD, IND., October 15, 1940.

Senator JAMES J. DAVIS,
Care United States Senate:

We are informed that Senator MINTON, of Indiana, charged on the floor of the Senate that signs were posted on roads leading into Elwood, Ind., warning Negroes to stay out. This is an absolute falsehood. Never at any time in the history of Elwood, Ind., have such signs been posted. Yourself a resident of Elwood for many years can also subscribe to the falsity of Senator MINTON'S statement. There has never been any demonstration of any character whatever made against the Negro race by citizens of Elwood, Ind. Negroes have worked in local homes and at various times Negroes have been employed here on construction projects. We wish you, as a Member of the Senate and former resident of Elwood, Ind., would clear the records once and for all time of this malicious and vicious charge of Senator MINTON. Affidavits are a matter of record here by old-time residents and city officials refuting the allegations of Senator MINTON and others of his ilk.

Mayor GEORGE M. BONHAM.
Police Chief MICHAEL J. FOGERTY.
Dr. G. V. NEWCOMER.
AUSTIN BRUMBAUGH.
Ex-Mayor CALVIN D. SIZELOVE.
Clerk-Treasurer MAGGIE M. HARTING.
J. H. FIHE.

Mr. DAVIS. I also ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, an editorial from a colored newspaper in Pittsburgh, Pa., printed on Saturday, October 19, 1940. The editorial is entitled "The Smear-Willkie Negroes Do Not Represent the Race."

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The editorial is as follows:

THE SMEAR-WILLKIE NEGROES DO NOT REPRESENT THE RACE

Words can scarcely be found of sufficient force to condemn the foul action of those black and white members of the Democratic Party campaign committee responsible for the publication of a speakers' guide in which the racial origin of Wendell Willkie and Mrs. Willkie are attacked.

The action will turn the stomach of every one of 12,000,000 American Negroes, except the insane, the criminal, and the feeble-minded.

The responsibility is clear. The Negro American is not party to this scurrilous outrage. Neither is the white race, considered as a whole. The responsibility rests squarely on the round shoulders of not more than a dozen poison-minded whites and Negroes in the employ of the Democratic National Committee in New York City.

This tiny group of whites and blacks must bear equal guilt for this felony at heart. It was a job for only the most contemptible and vicious persons in the organization to unite in doing. It was the evil masterpiece of puny-minded whites and Negroes whose brains were addled by running sores and each of whom could find remedy in meanness only.

Certain whites with the Democratic campaign committee have sought some method to appeal to racial prejudice because of Willkie's German ancestry. Certain Negroes with the Democratic campaign committee have itched to make a public issue out of customs attributed to the candidate's home town, Elwood, Ind.

These few vultures, and these only, got together to encourage one another to the foul attack on Willkie. These few Negroes would scarcely have had the courage to commit the crime had they not received encouragement and approval from their cesspool white associates. Certainly, these Negroes had no authority or power to issue such a document without the approval of some white person.

But there were those whites who wanted to spew their own poison. They knew they didn't have a chance through their own organs. They knew that the most slattern white speakers would not use such gutter material. They, therefore, fastened upon their irresponsible Negro confederates and used them as a sewer line for their own muck.

However, the fact that these Negroes were used by these whites does not excuse them. They had their own foul notions.

The fact of Mr. Willkie's German origin has nothing to do with his fitness for the Presidency. Mrs. Willkie is not a candidate. To bring her into the campaign in such a manner was churlish.

Who is it in the great American Nation, save the Indian, whose blood does not stem from far-off lands? This is the land of the democratic ideal where men and women of all races, colors, and creeds, have striven and sacrificed and spilled their blood to forge a new nation that should be of all the people.

Who is it, if not the black man, who must wage eternal struggle against the proscriptions of color? Who is it, if not the black American, who must fight a relentless war on prejudices due to race? Each new day, come rain or sun, 12,000,000 black men and women in America must arise from their beds and renew this unending battle.

How then, can black Americans, except they be insane, criminal, or feeble-minded, join the ranks of the bigot and the intolerant?

And especially against the German. Have black men forgotten Carl Schurz and hundreds of thousands of other German-Americans who lifted a hand to them in the dead days of the past?

The Pittsburgh Courier knows that Negroes as a whole have not forgotten. It knows that a few Negroes under the influence of wicked whites can lose their heads. That is what has happened this time. They are, as Mr. Willkie properly said, "contemptible curs." We want no part of them.

WAR POLICIES OF THE ROOSEVELT ADMINISTRATION

Mr. HOLT. The President of the United States said in a speech last week that those who stated that the policies of the administration were leading toward war were seeking to create a "blitzkrieg" of fear. I am one who has made that statement, and I repeat it here—the policies of the administration are leading toward war. Certainly the fear was originally started by the executive branch of the Government, and has been carried on through the country, but the fear has reached such proportions that it is beyond what it was intended to be used for, namely, political purposes, keeping the question of indispensability to the front. The American people are afraid because the American people do not want war.

Why has there been such fear in this country? I think the question can best be answered by the President's own statements compared with his actions. The President of the United States made this statement:

> Your Government has no information which it has any thought of withholding from you.

Is that the case? Let us look at the facts. I pick up the New York Herald Tribune of Saturday, October 26, and on the front page I notice an article under this headline:

> United States censorship imposed to hide plane exports. War craft shipments abroad to be cloaked in secrecy by order of Government.

Compare that with the statement of the President that—

> Your Government has no information which it has any thought of withholding from you.

The article is as follows:

The United States Government has clamped an official censorship on all of its agencies, forbidding the disclosure of figures describing the export of American-built fighting planes to Great Britain and other nations the Government is aiding, it was learned yesterday.

From now on it will be impossible to find out how many military aircraft are being shipped abroad and how many American planes ordered originally for the Army and Navy have been or are being diverted to other sources. A publication of the Department of Commerce known as Aeronautical World News, which during the last year has published accurate details on plane exports, has been ordered to discontinue this practice, and all other Government bureaus which would have these figures have been notified to keep them confidential.

It could not be learned whether William S. Knudsen, production coordinator of the aircraft division of the National Defense Advisory Commission, who has been frank in disclosing production figures of aircraft in the United States and the portion received by the British, has been asked to be more reticent in the future.

Since the last figures announced by the Department of Commerce on shipments abroad went only through August and would not take into consideration the rapid acceleration in shipments during the fall, the exact figures on planes shipped to Britain this year are not known. It is estimated, however, that more than 1,500 planes have been shipped to Britain, with more than twice that number delivered to British representatives in this country for shipment.

In connection with the reported intention of the administration to sell flying-fortress bombers built by the Boeing Co. to the British, it was learned that the latest type of the bomber would be equipped with power-driven machine-gun turrets, a British development. The British recently granted rights to manufacture the turret, which makes it easy to aim a machine gun in all directions during flight, to American companies.

I want that article to be considered in connection with the statement of the President—

Your Government has no information which it has any thought of withholding from you.

The question is not whether we should ship the planes; the question is the President's statements against his actions. Did he withhold from the American people a discussion of the question of the obsolescence of planes which he knew were first-class fighting planes? Was that withholding information from the American people? I should like to know.

How did we ascertain that French representatives were in this country buying planes for their Army? It was not by any action or any word of the Executive to the people, but an accident occurred and the news came out. Was that withholding the facts from the American people? That is what I should like to know.

I should like to say, relative to the question of airplane figures, that I noticed in this morning's edition of the United States News what is perhaps the answer. It states that Great Britain really is receiving nearly 80 percent of all combat war planes now being produced in this country, four planes for Great Britain to one plane for the United States, when we do not have a sufficient number of planes even to defend the United States.

PLANES ON ORDER

Representative VINSON of Georgia, chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives, placed in the RECORD some very interesting material which escaped the notice of a number of Senators, I am sure. The information was to the effect that the United States Government in September had on order 1,300 naval airplanes during the last fiscal year, and 1,180 of them were undelivered—1,180 still on order of 1,300 ordered.

There were 2,359 engines on order, and of that number 2,031 were undelivered.

In the fiscal year 1941 there were 1,055 planes ordered by the Government, and there were 1,055 undelivered. There were 1,183 engines on order, 1,171 undelivered.

Perhaps that would answer the question why censorship has been clamped upon this particular activity, as it has been. Planes on order!

We know that Representative VAN ZANDT, former national commander of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, asked the War Department some questions relative to the military supplies in the United States. He was told that he could not get the information. But the President said, as I again repeat:

Your Government has no information which it has any thought of withholding from you.

WHY THE FEAR?

Is there any wonder that there is fear in America? Is there any wonder that the American people wonder what is going on behind the scenes? Should we wonder when the President, before he transferred the destroyers, denied a story of such transfer? It is not a question whether it was a good or a bad thing; the question is, Should not the American people be told the truth about these secret things going on behind the scenes?

Did the American people know the Executive was to make a commitment to defend Canada before the commitment was made? I do not discuss the advisability of the proposition, but I attack its secrecy. Was Congress advised? No. Were the people advised? No.

Was not the joint Canadian-United States Defense Commission set up in secrecy? The people were told about it after the agreement had been made. Was Congress advised? No. Were the people advised? No.

Were the people told about the secret mission to London of Captain Ingersoll for naval cooperation? No. Was Congress told? No. But we read in the London press the information, with the comment that—

When the general public (of the United States) comes to know of these goings-on, opinion may well take fright.

Yet, the President assured us "no information is to be withheld."

Is not that the answer to the fear in our country today? When the penalty for a mistake of secret agreements means the death of American boys, is there any wonder the people fear?

On the 3d day of September 1939 the President said:

This Nation will remain a neutral nation.

He knows, the country knows, and the world knows that the United States of America is not neutral. It is nonbelligerent. It is not in the war actively, so far as men are concerned, but the President has since shown that the United States is not neutral, and that he does not desire that it should be neutral. Yet he said solemnly on the 3d day of September 1939, as the World War started:

This Nation will remain a neutral nation.

On July 14, 1939, the President made this statement:

Both sides agree that in the event of foreign wars this Nation should maintain a status of strict neutrality and around the structure of neutrality, we should so shape our policies as to keep this country from being drawn into war.

I ask the question: Have not the actions of the President, by Executive decree, taken the United States away from the very thing he promised the American people—strict neutrality?

Mr. President, I do not desire to delay the Senate longer, but I do wish to have the facts known, and I ask to have printed in the RECORD an article in the United States News showing how secret diplomacy guides our war moves.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HOW "SECRET DIPLOMACY" GUIDES OUR WAR MOVES—ACTIONS VITAL TO UNITED STATES DECIDED THROUGH BACKSTAGE EXCHANGE OF VIEWS—OPEN COVENANTS OUTDATED IN WORLD OF POWER POLITICS—SOME UNDERCOVER MANEUVERS

The United States today is up to its neck in the world's power politics. Secret diplomacy, centered in the White House, extends through the State Department to American agents in the far corners of the world. Backstage pressures are applied, backstage moves are made that will determine whether America goes to war or remains at peace.

There is a hurried call by the French Ambassador to the State Department and hints are heard that, if France is to edge closer to Germany, the United States may feel compelled to strike at Martinique to recover 100 American-made warplanes on the French aircraft carrier Bearn and to gain custody over a reported $200,000,000 in gold. The British Ambassador, Lord Lothian, amid attempted secrecy, flies hurriedly back to London and word trickles out that this Government wants to know specifically what the British attitude will be if the United States feels impelled to stand more firmly against Japan.

SECRET DIPLOMACY IN ACTION

Up from South American capitals comes a series of reports that American diplomats are making soundings to determine if American money and American military and naval aid can be extended to build air and naval bases. Suddenly the Russian Ambassador, Constantine Oumansky, is a frequent and welcome State Department visitor in offices where he was verbally dressed down not many weeks ago. Soon thereafter, machine tools and cargoes of gasoline that had been "morally embargoed" are released for the trip to Vladivostok. The Chinese Ambassador, Dr. Hu Shih—a frequent caller at the Treasury—sits alongside Loan Administrator Jesse Jones while a new loan to China is announced.

An almost daily visitor at the State Department is Australia's Minister, Richard G. Casey. Inquiry as to the purpose of those visits draws the reply that it must be presumed that the United States and Australia have many problems in common at this time and that one of these is defense. Suddenly it is noted that Mexico is buying American scrap iron in large quantities and that Japan is seeking important oil concessions in Mexico. Just as suddenly it is announced that Mexico, after all, isn't going to sell scrap iron to Japan nor grant the Japanese an oil concession.

Seldom has the world been so conscious of the attitude and the power of the United States. This attitude and this power are being made known and are being felt through secret moves of which the people of this Nation are little aware. President Roosevelt assures the American people, however, that:

"There is no secret treaty, no secret obligation, no secret commitment, no secret understanding in any shape or form, direct or indirect, with any other government or any other nation in any part of the world to involve this Nation in any war or for any other purpose."

This flat statement is correct. There was no agreement with Great Britain when the Burma Road into China was reopened. But Britain was aware that the United States wanted that road opened and was ready to be firm with Japan. This knowledge was transmitted through diplomatic channels. There is no agreement with Britain that enables the British Fleet to concentrate in the Atlantic while the American Fleet concentrates in the Pacific. But each navy is aware of the other's plans.

No secret understanding lay back of the exchange of 50 American destroyers for the right to create air and naval bases on British island possessions in this hemisphere. But the intent to transfer these destroyers was denied at the White House just a few days before the transfer was made. Diplomacy in this move, as in the others that are being made by this country on the chess board of the world's power politics, was secret diplomacy.

Secret diplomacy lends itself particularly well to present-day maneuvers. The reason is that formal treaties no longer are regarded as basic in relationships between nations. Much more effective are mere exchanges of ideas and of viewpoints between governments.

It is this exchange of ideas and of viewpoints that is going on in secret between this Government and other governments in many parts of the world. Australia wants to know what the United States would do in case of trouble. The United States wants to know what Russia's attitude might be in event of difficulty with Japan. Britain is interested in many things, and has made her interests known to Ambassador Joseph P. Kennedy, just back from London. Latin America wants to know what the cash consideration will be for friendship.

Midnight oil burns at the State Department, and often at the White House, in this secret game of modern power politics.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, there has been more secret diplomacy emanating from the White House in the past 2 months, and even today, than in the entire previous history of the United States of America—secret diplomacy for war, not peace.

Here is an exact statement from the President of the United States:

I give you this most solemn assurance: There is no secret treaty, no secret obligation, no secret commitment, no secret understanding in any shape or form, direct or indirect, with any other government or any other nation in any part of the world, to involve this Nation in any war or for any other purpose.

That is what he said. Judging by his past actions, is that what he means? I challenge that statement, and I am willing to let the history of the country, when it is written, give the answer, so the people can have the truth and know whether there have been secret understandings and secret agreements. We know there have been. We know it, and the American people have a right to know it.

I ask Senators to check the President's statement and compare it with what he has said in the past. One writer has said, and I repeat:

One man took Germany to war. One man took Italy to war.

I ask, Shall one man in America take the United States to war?

It is time for the American people to say "No."

TERMINATION OF THE EUROPEAN CONFLICT

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, on October 4, 1939, I submitted a resolution which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. It was afterward given a number, and is known as Senate Resolution 191. I desire to have the resolution read by the clerk. As a matter of fact, I expect to make the request at each session of the Senate that the resolution be read.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the clerk will read the resolution.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 191), as follows:

Whereas the time is auspicious for the United States to use its best efforts to promote an immediate armistice in the war now being waged in Europe; and

Whereas it is the sincere desire of our President and the American people to see an early termination of such war; and

Whereas other neutrals are looking to us for leadership in a movement to that end; and

Whereas there is more glory and courageousness in an honorable peace than a bloody victory with its attendant ills and sorrows: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that every effort should be made by the United States in conjunction with other neutral nations to bring about an early termination of the European conflict, and to that end the President is requested to join with other neutrals in urging the nations that are now at war to enter into an immediate armistice as a preliminary step toward negotiations looking to the complete, lasting, and peaceful settlement of the various matters about which they are in conflict.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, OCTOBER 28, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, in the spiritual anguish and moral struggle of this world, enable us to listen to Thy teaching: Whosoever shall seek to save his life shall lose it, and whosoever shall lose it shall preserve it. Heavenly Father, we pray that the words of our Master shall root deep in the deepest places of our thought. Upon this rock rests the superstructure of a life that is truly Christian. Do Thou rest our souls upon this sublime utterance that there is no finding except by losing; no getting but by giving, and no living save through dying; in the footprints of our Redeemer lies the shadow of the cross. Gracious God, lead us in His pathway of life. In His holy name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, October 24, 1940, was read and approved.

FIRST NATIONAL STEAMSHIP CO., THE SECOND NATIONAL STEAMSHIP CO., AND THE THIRD NATIONAL STEAMSHIP CO.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House:

OCTOBER 25, 1940.

The SPEAKER,
The House of Representatives.

SIR: There is transmitted herewith a sealed envelope indicating on its face that it contains a message from the President of the United States, returning the bill, H. R. 10440, entitled "An act for the relief of the First National Steamship Co., the Second National Steamship Co., and the Third National Steamship Co."

This message was received by this office at 11:35 a. m., October 25, 1940.

Respectfully yours,

SOUTH TRIMBLE,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.
By H. NEWLIN MEGILL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, a bill (H. R. 10440) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claims of the First, Second, and Third National Steamship Cos., arising out of transactions involving deposits of certain sums of money by the companies with the United States Shipping Board and for reimbursement of expenditures made by the companies for purposes other than the operation of the vessels Independence, Hoxie, and Scottsburg.

On August 28, 1940, I returned, without my approval, a bill (H. R. 10141) covering the same subject matter on the ground that the enactment of the bill would permit the companies again to litigate their claims and might deprive the Government of the defense that the claims had been settled by mutual agreement. I refrained from approving a similar bill during the Seventy-fourth Congress.

The present bill is objectionable, first, for the reason that it would reopen a litigation that had been settled and voluntarily dismissed by the plaintiffs. It would appear that there should be some finality to a deliberate settlement such as was entered into by the claimants in this matter. Not only is the Government entitled to this protection but, in addition, unless binding effect were to be accorded to compromise agreements, other claimants would be prejudiced, since the Government would be discouraged from adjusting any claims by negotiation. Second, the transactions involved in this controversy occurred approximately 20 years ago. After the lapse of so long a period of time, during which important records disappear and the memories of witnesses become faulty, the Government should not be called upon to submit to a rehearing in the absence of compelling reasons.

Recent statements by several former officials and employees of the Shipping Board are appended to the report of the House committee which appear to support the position of the claimants. These statements are characterized in the report as newly discovered evidence. There is nothing in the report, however, to show that the authors of these statements were not available as witnesses or could not, with reasonable diligence, have been made available during the 10 years in which the case was pending in the Court of Claims. These statements, moreover, are seriously at variance with the official records of the Shipping Board, as well as with contemporaneous statements made in 1921 by two of the officials above mentioned. The present statements are substantially a reiteration of contentions made in behalf of the claimants when the litigation was settled in 1935.

The issues were thoroughly litigated for 10 years prior to that settlement. The evidence now submitted in the form of sworn statements is not materially different from the evidence then submitted in behalf of the claimants. Almost immediately after the vessels were withdrawn from the steamship companies in December 1920 disagreement arose as to whether there had been an agreement to purchase. Vessel prices meanwhile had declined. Claiming there had been no agreement to purchase, the companies sought the return of moneys advanced and deposited. On the advice of its legal staff, the Board decided there had been a sale and refused to return the money.

In 1935, with the issues and the evidence fully before the court, the claimants had an excellent opportunity to obtain a finding and determination from the Court of Claims. Because of the uncertainty attending the litigation, including the possibility of an adverse finding on the claim and a judgment in favor of the Government on its counterclaim, the companies elected to settle the controversy for $250,000. Only a brief time elapsed before they sought remedial legislation and actually secured the enactment of a Senate resolution resubmitting the controversy to the Court of Claims for a finding and report. Proceedings instituted under that resolution were recently withdrawn. It is noteworthy that in the present bill no provision is made for a possible recovery by the Government of any amount that might be due it.

A further objection is found in the language that permits any judgment against the United States to provide "full reimbursement and just compensation," followed by the provision "that such compensation shall not be in excess of 3 percent per annum." Whether so intended, the bill might be construed to permit an award of interest or its equivalent. Since no interest would have been recoverable in the original action, no good reason is discerned for including a provision under which the court might be permitted or required to allow interest or its equivalent.

Since no reason is discernible from the record why another opportunity to litigate should be extended to these claimants by special legislation, I am constrained to withhold my approval of this measure.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, October 24, 1940.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the bill and the President's message be referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on October 21, 1940, the President approved and signed a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 10495. An act to amend section 61 of the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, by adding a proviso which will permit States to organize military units not a part of the National Guard, and for other purposes.

FOURTH ANNUAL REPORT OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PHILIPPINES (H. DOC. NO. 983)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs and ordered to be printed, with the illustrations:

To the Congress of the United States:

As required by paragraph (3) of section 7 of the act of Congress approved March 24, 1934, entitled "An act to provide for the complete independence of the Philippine Islands, to provide for the adoption of a constitution and a form of government for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," I transmit herewith, for the information of the Congress, the fourth annual report of the President of the Philippines to the President and the Congress of the United States covering the 6-month period ended June 30, 1939.

The enclosed report covers a 6-month period instead of a full calendar year as heretofore. This change is occasioned by a provision in Commonwealth Act No. 373 under which the fiscal year as of July 1 to June 30 is established. Formerly the Commonwealth's fiscal year corresponded with the calendar year.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, October 28, 1940.

SENATE

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 31, 1940

(Legislative day of Wednesday, September 18, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Rev. Albert Joseph McCartney, pastor of the Covenant-First Presbyterian Church, of Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

The people that do know their God shall be strong and do exploits.

Let us look to God in prayer.

Eternal God and Father of us all, we seek Thy blessing upon us for this day. Thine is the power and the glory; thine the beauty and splendor of the world. Thou art our one great certainty amid all our uncertainties. Thou art to us the shadow of a great rock in a weary land; and amid toil and tribulation we are glad to hear Thy call: Come unto Me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest.

And so we offer up to Thee our prayers with glad and remembering hearts on behalf of our Nation. Open our eyes that we may see Thy light shining on the road we should take; Thy love glowing in our disunited fellowship; Thy power toiling with us for the good of all.

Remember especially, we beseech Thee, that great company of our sons and brothers who have written their names in the book of our national defense. For their sakes, we beseech Thee, guide carefully the deliberations of this assembly; direct with Thy wisdom the President of the United States; and help us all to season our public utterances with caution and with judgment. Bless all the administrators of the Nation's welfare, and guide and keep us in the way of peace.

And such blessings as we crave for ourselves we invoke upon all mankind. Our hearts go out to the millions who suffer in China, to the millions who have lost their homes and their freedom throughout Europe; and we pray that some door may open whereby we can relieve the suffering without sustaining the cause thereof. Keep our hearts from hatred. Prevent us from being overcome by evil, but help us to overcome evil with good. In Jesus' name. Amen.

On request of Mrs. CARAWAY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day of Monday, October 28, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.
